The execution of Mary Ann Cotton, who was found guilty of poisoning her step-son, at West Auckland, England, some time since, took place recently at Durham, where the prisoner had been confined in jail since her trial. On the morning of the fatal day, at the sound of the death-knell, the unfortunate criminal left her cell in company of the officers, and was led out to the scaffold, followed by Calcraft and his assistant. The prisoner was escorted on either side by a male warder, but though her step was firm and her body erect, there was deep emotion observable in her face, which had so changed since her trial that she was scarcely recognizable. She was dressed in a black stuff gown, with a black and white check shawl thrown over her shoulders, and so fastened in front as to hide the pinioning straps. Her head and throat were bare, and her hands convulsively clasped in front. As she left the cell she said, "Heaven is my home," and on her way to the scaffold was continually moaning and muttering prayers. When she reached the drop, Calcraft immediately stood before her and covered her face with the white cap. She trembled perceptibly, and never ceased her devotions. Having strapped her legs together and seen that the rope was duly adjusted, Calcraft withdrew to the part where the handle of the bolt was placed, whilst the two male warders retained their position on the plank on each side of the prisoner. The unhappy woman clasped her hands close to her breast, murmured in an earnest tone, "Lord have mercy on my soul," and in a moment the bolt was drawn by Calcraft's assistant. All present were deeply moved, particulary the under-sheriff, whom it was necessary at one point of the proceeding to support.

A legitimate inference—That a dentist's office is a drawing-room.

It is generally believed now by meteorologists, says the New York Times, that we are to have a cycle of very hot summers. An eminent sanitarian in the Health Department, Dr. Stephen Smith, has already issued a report suggesting measures during the coming summer which shall prevent the fatal effects of the expected heat.

Prof. Agassiz has been lecturing on eggs, and he asserts that "all living beings, whatever their diversity of form, have grown up from eggs which are at first all precisely similar. Deviations take place, little understood, that eventually change these beings into widely differing animals." This explains where everything comes from except eggs.

The Troy Times has a story that a gentleman residing in the vicinity of Sandy Hill holds a note against Gen. Washington for $1,500, given for supplies during the American Revolution. There is an indorsement on the note for about one-half the amount, and it is alleged that the balance has never been paid.

Egotistic Talkers.

Almost every circle is blessed with the egotist, who exercises a kind of dictatorship over it. Are you in mistake as to a matter of fact? He cannot suffer you to proceed till you are corrected. Have you a word on the end of your tongue? He at once comes to your relief. Do you talk bad grammar? He quotes rules and gives examples like a pedagogue. Does he discover that there is a link wanting in the chain of your argument? He bids you stay till he has supplied it. Do you drop a word in which he has devoted much research? He asks you whether you know its primitive signification, and straightway inflicts upon the circle a long philological disquisition. When you relate an incident which you suppose new and affecting, your friend listens without emotion. When you have done he observes that he heard the same long ago, and adds a very material circumstance which you omitted. He is never taken by surprise, and it is impossible to give him any information. And yet he never takes the lead in conversation, nor advances an original thought. It is his business to come after, and pick up the words which others let slip in a running talk, or to check their impetuosity, that he may point out to them their missteps. Had he lived in the days of Solomon, he would have flattered the royal sage with an intimation that some of his proverbs were but plagiarisms; or, had he been a contemporary of Solomon's father, would have felt himself bound to give the slayer of Goliah some lessons on the use of the sling, and hinted to the sweet singer of Israel his private opinion that the shepherd-bard did not perfectly understand the use of the harp.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Making a Hot-Bed.

To prepare a hot-bed, a quantity of fresh stable manure should be well shaken up in a heap, about the middle of February or first of March; after remaining three days, it should again be shaken up and turned over, and at another interval of three days. Let the manure remain for three or four days more in the heap, and then form the bed of any dimensions that may be requisite according to size and number of frames used, making the bed about a foot wider than the frame all around. The bed, when made, should not be less than three feet high, the situation for it should be dry underneath, sheltered from the north as much as possible, and fully exposed to the sun.

In making up the bed, beat the manure well down with the fork. Place about eight inches of light, rich soil in the frame after it is placed on the bed, so that the surface of the soil may be from six to eight inches from the top of the frame. After the bed has stood with the lights on, but raised a few inches to let the steam escape for a few days, sow the seed of the cabbage, cauliflower, celery, lettuce, radish, etc., etc. When the seeds make their appearance above ground, give some air, day and night, in moderate weather, by raising the light two or three inches, and as the heat of the bed diminishes, increase the supply of air to prevent the plants being drawn up. In severe weather the frame and lights should be covered up at night with mats or straw. In a high wind protect the side of the bed also in the same way, or the current of air through will extinguish the heat of the bed. If made early in the season, water only will be required when the earth in the frame becomes quite dry; as the plants increase in size the supply of water may be increased. In frosty or cold weather the water should be made milk-warm before it is used; this is important.

Seeds of tomato, pepper and egg-plant should not be sown at the same time with cabbage, cauliflower, lettuce, radish, etc., as they require more heat. Therefore, they should not be put in a hot-bed until the last of March, or until a bright sun, with milder nights, gives the proper temperature—70 to 80 degrees. To avoid disappointment, note the above.

To Housekeepers.

Now that spring has arrived, and busy housewives are overwhelmed with the cares of house-cleaning, a few hints may be appreciable. In taking up your carpets it is well to rip the center seam. The carpet may be better shaken in two pieces; then turn the outer edges inward, sew it carefully, and, if necessary, tack a border over the outer edges. A well-worn carpet may be made to look almost new by this process, simply by a little ingenuity. Tea grounds, soaked in alum-water, are invaluable in cleaning carpets with a large proportion of green in the pattern. They should be sprinkled over the floor, and allowed to lie for a time, then swept off carefully. The carpet, after a long service, will look quite fresh and new after this process. Oxgall, too, is a specific in the cleansing process. By throwing a little into the soapsuds a carpet may be scoured on the floor to look fresh and new. In house-cleaning, system should be observed. Begin at the garret and go downward. Take a room at a time and leave behind the trace of perfect order in each. It is not necessary to create a bedlam or chaos in order that peace may follow. Even renegation, as applied to things inanimate, may be taken in broken doses more effectively. Closets and dark corners first arranged, the rest is easy. The secret lies in being complete mistress of the situation, knowing what to do and just how to do it.

Short Horns for England.

M. H. Cochrane, Compton, Canada, the celebrated breeder of short-horn cattle, has recently made sale of three young animals for exportation to England. The price paid by the English buyer was $5,000 for one, $4,000 for another, the other price not given.

There have been within a few years many other exportations to England of some of the choicest animals from the best herd in this country, all at as satisfactory figures as those above given, and some even higher.

English breeders have learned that we have in America some of the best Bates short-horns in the world, and they are willing to pay fabulous prices to secure some of them for their own herds. One of these, a bull which was exported two years ago, earned his owner $950 the first year after arriving. The same animal was recently sold at auction for 1,600 guineas, or $8,250.

Brine for the Preservation of Butter.

To three gallons of brine strong enough to bear an egg, add a quarter of a pound of nice white sugar and one tablespoonful of saltpeter. Boil the brine, and when it is cold strain carefully. Make your butter into rolls, and wrap each separately in a clean white muslin cloth, tying up with string. Pack a large jar full, weight the butter down, and pour over the brine until all is submerged. This brine will keep really good butter perfectly sweet and fresh for a whole year. Be careful not to put upon ice butter that you wish to keep for any length of time. In summer, when the heat will not admit of butter being made into rolls, pack closely in small jars, and, using the same brine, allow it to cover the butter to a depth of at least four inches. This excludes the air, and answers very nearly as well as the first method suggested.

Seedling Plum Trees.

An inspection of the plum orchards and nurseries of Hagensdorf, in September, 1871, demonstrated that seedling trees had withstood the severity of the winter much better than those probagated from suckers. Of the latter, thousands of old trees were killed, as well as beds of young ones, while adjoining beds of seedlings were entirely unaffected. It was also noticed that trees which abounded in sprouts were more generally affected than those from which the sprouts had been removed at an early period. It is also contended that seedlings send out their roots more vertically and deeper down, and in consequence are more likely to reach moisture in dry weather, and less liable to injury by the plow in cultivation, or to send up suckers.

The Cranberry Crop.

The cash value of the cranberry crop in the United States, according to statistics, has been estimated as follows: In 1870 Maine produced 1,000 barrels, Massachusetts 8,000, Connecticut 2,000, New Jersey 50,000. This amount of 61,000 barrels was raised principally from the cultivated fields. At nineteen stations on the St. Paul and Milwaukee railway 14,385 barrels were freighted during the season of 1869. Only about 3,000 barrels were shipped in 1868. The crop of 1867 was estimated at 65,500 barrels, of which New Jersey produced 35,000, New England 12,000, and the West 15,000 barrels. The average price per barrel, for the season of 1867, was $16, giving a total of $1,000,000.

To Make Old Black Silk Look Like New.

Unpick the garment and wash the pieces in hot soapsuds; rinse by dipping up and down in hot water, then dip in second water prepared as follows: Boil two ounces of logwood chips in five quarts of water; add a quarter of an ounce of copperas; strain through an old bit of calico, and dip your silk into this dye. Let the silk be pinned on to a line by the corners, and hang until it is nearly dry. Then take it down and iron it between two pieces of old black silk. It will look like new.

An Ink that will not Freeze.

Take about one handful of maple bark—the inside bark. Scrape or shave off the outside bark. Put it in three pints of water and boil till the strength is all out of the bark, then strain all the bark out of the ooze. Next put in the ooze half a tablespoonful of copperas, and boil five or ten minutes till the copperas is all dissolved. Keep stirring. This will make near one gill of good ink that will not be injured by freezing.

Contagion.

M. Kletzinsky, noticing that persons sick with small-pox were often visited by flies, placed near an open window of the hospital a saucer filled with glycerine. The flies gathered about it and were caught like birds with glue. In endeavoring to free themselves the foreign matter adhering to them was left in the glycerine, which was carefully examined by the microscope. The glycerine was found to be full of strange cells, similar to those seen by persons attacked with small-pox, but never found on the fly. This discovery shows that flies can be a very dangerous means of spreading contagious disease.

Wheat Culture.

The culture of wheat, by far the most important of our bread crops, is a subject of universal interest. As soils constantly sown to wheat will in time lose the elements favorable to its successful production unless they are restored by expensive fertilizers, it has become a question of some interest whether lands on which wheat will naturally grow are likely to be found within the area of civilization in years to come. It is well known that virgin soils, if rich and favored with proper climatic influences, almost always produce good crops of wheat; but in a few years the constant drain of the constituent elements of the grain from the soil exhausts its productiveness so far as this crop is concerned, and to restore its fertility resort must be had to manures, rotation of crops, or other means familiar to agriculturists. The principal production of wheat in the early days of the country was from the alluvial lands along the Connecticut, Hudson, Delaware, and Susquehanna rivers and their tributaries. Then Ohio, Michigan and Indiana became in their turn the great wheat-producing States, and as the wheat culture there declined in importance it increased in districts further west. The Chicago Tribune, in an article reviewing the progress of wheat culture in this country, shows that the line of supply is still moving steadily westward. During the period embraced between the years 1865 and 1872, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Missouri, although growing immensely in population and in general productiveness, fell off in their relative yield of wheat; while Minnesota increased in production from 3,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels; Iowa from 13,700,000 to 20,000,000; Kansas from 200,000 to 2,000,000; and Nebraska from 160,000 to 1,500,000. And still the boundaries of the wheat region are extending toward the west. No finer wheat can be grown anywhere than in that section east of the Rocky Mountains which can be utilized by irrigation. Should the experiment of artesian wells succeed generally as it has in a few cases along the line of the Union Pacific railway, the entire six hundred or seven hundred miles between the Missouri river and the Rocky Mountains—once called in all our school geographies the Great American Desert—may in the next half century become one vast wheat field. Northern Minnesota and the central sections along the line of the Northern Pacific railway will produce the finest wheat in abundance. Manitoba gives excellent promise as a wheat-producing region; while in the Saskatchewan valley, extending from Lake Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains, and the country directly east of the mountains as far south as New Mexico, there is an area suitable for the production of wheat which bids fair to afford an ample supply of this great staple for centuries to come.—New York World.

ONE WAY OF MAKING A LIVING.—Velpeau, the French surgeon, had two hospital patients whose business for fifteen years was to be knocked down and run over in the street. When they saw a light vehicle approaching and knew the owner to be wealthy, they would run across the street in such a way as to get before the horses, to be knocked down, and carried to the hospital, when they would sue for damages. When the money thus gained was spent, they would go out and get run over again. They generally managed to avoid being seriously injured in this way; yet nearly every bone in their bodies had been broken.

Marriage and Longevity.

Of all the relations into which a man enters, marriage is that which exerts most influence on his mind and body, on his powers of study, on the development of his affections, on the bringing forth of all the hidden qualities of his character. The intellectual element in his nature, without the softening and humanizing effect of domestic love, might, at first sight, be expected to absorb the whole man, and render him a giant in mental achievements. Practically, it has, as a rule, no such effect. Few monks have distinguished themselves for original invention, for great thoughts, for an expansive philosophy, or for any thing implying superiority in the qualities which raise one man above another. It is beneficial to the most active minds to have the current of thought occasionally broken in upon, and diverted from the channel of systematic investigation into the calm, sweet delights of home-life, of wife, of children, of playful sportiveness, which gives to man in his period of greatest force something of the careless frame of mind which gave freshness to his childhood.

Marriage, therefore, should be regarded in general as a help to long life, and should be called in to a man's assistance as soon as he has completed, or nearly completed, his studies—we may say nearly completed, because, in many cases, the companionship of a wife is of great service in directing and giving a higher aim to the intellectual force. Same are of opinion that the contracting of marriage ought to be deferred till the fervor of passion is over, till youth has lost its bloom, till the companionship of women is rather desirable as a friendship than as a source of love. Aristotle thought that eighteen years for the woman, and thirty-five for the man, were the likeliest periods respectively to insure happiness in marriage; but the Spartans, whose institutions had been framed by one of the loftiest intellects ever concerned in the business of legislation, acted on a different principle, thinking that persons of nearly the same age would love each other more ardently, and harmonize better together.

As a rule, early marriages are better than late ones, better for the woman especially, all whose maternal duties are less exhausting to the constitution, more productive of health and beauty to the offspring, and of happiness to all around her, than at a later period of life. Tacitus observes that the ancient Germans, the most robust and warlike nation with which he was acquainted, eschewed early marriages; but, when he comes to explain what he means by the phrase, we find that he thinks it late enough to defer marriage to the age of twenty. Charles James Fox, who was perhaps as good as Tacitus, brought into the House an act for fixing the majority of women at fifteen, and, in the speech with which he introduced it, put forward reasons which the country in general thought conclusive, though the legislature did not. As one swallow does not make a summer, so neither is one example sufficient to serve as a basis for a general conclusion; yet it is worthy of remark, that one of the most extraordinary instances of longevity among women, recorded in Roman history, is that of Clodia, who died at the age of a hundred and fifteen, and in her youth had been the mother of fifteen children.—Chambers' Journal.

Illustrated Journalism.

The New York Daily Graphic is the first illustrated daily newspaper ever published, and seems to be a success. It was started a month ago, and from the first has taken the popular fancy. To print every day a pictorial paper half as large as Harper's Weekly seems an an impossible feat; but the Graphic does it. Its illustrations are produced by a secret process of chemical engraving, which in two hours converts a drawing into an electroplate. Some of the pictures are also evidently prepared by one of the numerous heliotype processes, which consist in photographing the drawing upon the plate that is to be used in the printing-press. The photograph is eaten out by acids, without the intervention of a graver. Besides its economy, this process has the merit of fidelity to the original. Every line and touch of the artist is reproduced in facsimile, and they are delivered from the murderous botching of the engraver, who is their worst enemy. By these processes, a page of pictures can be prepared and printed as quickly as reading-matter, and at least as cheaply. The numbers of the Graphic before us show clearly what an immense field this new journalism has. One page presents the spring fashions; another sketches the burning of the Erie railroad ferry-houses and freight depots, the night before; on another is a portrait of the Bank of England forger, McDonnell, just arrested. The hanging of Foster gave a fine opportunity to show what could be done in the way of pictorial reporting. Foster was hanged at 9:27 in the morning, and before noon the first edition of the Graphic was on the street. It contained, besides a full letter-press account of the affair, a series of illustrations telling the story of the murder and trial, from the altercation in the street-car down to the hanging—giving every scene, and portraits of all the passengers of the tragedy. Those who have watched the progress of chemical engraving for the last year or two have never doubted the success of such a paper, if well managed, as the Graphic has certainly been. It opens a new era of journalism, in which reporters are to be artists, and newspapers, like illustrated moral handkerchiefs, will combine pictorial entertainment and utility in happy proportions. There can be no doubt but art and journalism are to be powerfully effected by the innovation. Its effect upon art cannot be much less marked than the effect of journalism upon literature. To the Graphic belongs the credit of beginning this movement, but it will probably be but a few years before the multiplication of processes for chemical engraving, and the growth of the public appetite for this pictorial journalism, will make illustration a matter of course with every daily newspaper in the country.

A GENTLEMAN traveling in Ireland said to a very importunate beggar, "You have lost all your teeth." The beggar quietly answered, "An' it's time I parted with um, when I'd nothing for um to do."

The Recovery of Jerusalem.

The Edinburgh Review has an article on "The Recovery of Jerusalem," briefly reviewing the results of recent explorations in that city. The writer thus speaks of the magnitude of Solomon's Temple:

The skill, the art, the mighty toil, that have been devoted to the adornment, and to the desecration, of this most ancient place of worship, have been of extraordinary magnitude. The grandest legacy of Egyptian antiquity, the Great Pyramid, demanded, indeed, a larger amount of naked human labor; but in Moriah there is a compulsion of the features of nature herself to the service of the builder. In actual bulk, the Great Pyramid is to the Temple rock as five to nine, if we descend but as far as the sills of the five double gates of the mountain of the house. If we carry the comparison down to the level at which the lowest foundation of the walls is inlaid in the rock at the angles of the inclosure, the bulk is three times that of the Great Pyramid. The cubic contents of the mason's work may not amount to a tenth part of that piled up by Souphis. But the hill has been honey-combed with chambers and galleries; and the declining part to the south covered with vaults and arches, to which Gizeh can show no parallel. No merely artificial structure could have so successfully resisted the resolute efforts of the two greatest military nations of the ancient world to destroy its existence and obliterate its memory. No other monument, long surviving the era of Asiatic and Italian power, can ever, like the noble sanctuary, mark by its very ruins the successive periods of its glory and its fall!

If we regard not so much the evidence of the labor devoted to the work of the Temple as the effect produced on the mind by its apparent magnitude, we may suggest the following comparisons: The length of the eastern wall of the sanctuary is rather more than double that of one side of the Great Pyramid. Its height, from the foundation of the rock at the south and near the northern angles, was nearly a third of that of the Egyptian structure. If to this great height of 152 feet of solid wall be added the descent of 114 feet to the bed of the Kedron, and the further elevation of 160 feet attained by the pinnacle of the Temple porch, we have a total height of 426 feet, which is only 59 feet less than that of the Great Pyramid. The area of the face of the eastern wall is more than double that of one side of the pyramid. Thus the magnitude of the noble sanctuary of Jerusalem far exceeded that of any other temple in the world. Two ampitheaters of the size of the Coliseum would have stood within its colossal girdle, and left room to spare. The Coliseum is said to have seated 87,000 spectators, and accommodated 22,000 more in its arena and passages. For such a number to have been crammed within its circle, the space for each person must have been limited to 17 inches by 20 inches. Allowing two cubits for each worshiper in the Temple, the sanctuary would have contained 30,000; the Chel, including the Priests' Court, 20,000 more, and there would yet have been room in the Great Court and the cloisters to make the total reach to more than 210,000.

Power of the Press.

For good or evil the press of the country wields a mighty power. It shapes and controls public sentiment by a silent influence always at work. A good paper is like the pure air—it imparts health and purity wherever it goes. A bad paper is like the noxious gas that steals unnoticed from the earth, carrying its pestilential poison and corrupting and destroying whole communities. Yet good men are to be found who permit bad papers to enter their hauseholds to poison the minds of their children. The seeds of depravity are scattered by the evil hand, and no effort is made to prevent it. Parents may not approve the sentiments uttered be these papers, but many appear insensible to their bad effects, and neglect to apply the correction. While they are careful to provide for the physical growth of their children, they neglect their moral training. They provide fresh air and wholesome food for the body, yet allow the mind to feed upon the poison elements of a corrupting literature.

This should be stopped at once. The paper that contains immoral sentiments should be as carefully excluded from the family circle as if it came from the pest-house, stamped with certain contagion and death. A rigid exclusion of these organs of wickedness from the decent family in our land would confine them within limits where their influence would soon be lost. They might still tend to encourage vice, but their power to corrupt and destroy would be gone forever. Every great citizen should have at least one family paper. It should be chosen from among the many, as a friend would be, or a daily companion. Its tone should be elevated; its sentiments pure; its integrity unquestioned. With such a silent companion in your family, you can feel confident that good impressions are being formed in the minds of your children. The impressions may not be noticed in a day, a year, but insensibly they will mould the character that is to lead the youth through the temptations of early manhood; protect and advance him through active life, and sustain him in honorable old age.

Natural Duration of Life.

According to Prof Faraday, the crime of suicide is very common in this age of the world, for he intimates that all who die under 100 years of age may be charged with self-murder; that Providence, having originally intended man to live a century, would allow him to arrive at that advanced period if he did not kill himself by eating unwholesome food, allowing himself to be annoyed by trifles, giving license to passions, and exposing himself to accident. Flourin advanced the theory that the duration of life is measured by the time of growth. When once the bones and epiphyses are united the body grows no more, and it is at 20 years this union is effected in man. The natural termination of life is five removes from the several points. Man, being 20 years in growing, lives—or should—5 times 20 years; the camel is 8 years in growing, and lives 5 times 8 years; the horse is 5 years in growing, and lives 25 years, and so on with other animals.

QUILL pens are again fashionable.

Newspapers.

The April number of the Old and New contains a thoughtful article on "The Abuse of Reading," by J. P. Quincy, in which the writer discusses newspapers as a means of culture, and ably combats the theory that our public journals are too trifling and ephemeral in the character of their articles to furnish either models of the English language or food for the thoughtful mind. He writes:

Doubt any one's good sense who speaks scornfully of newspapers. There is much in them that is trifling, and perhaps much demoralizing; but, in the best of them, how much that is wise and noble! I have a few choice volumes on my shelves, among them an Olivet Cicero and a folio Shakspeare; but I would save my newspaper scrap-book before either of them. I have no volumes that contain so much sound thought, good English, good sense and important knowledge. If you ask for wit, I will agree to match every jest and sarcasm in "The School for Scandal" with something from my scrap-book quite as good in the way of epigram, and flashed upon some mischief which it is important should be seen. Here are full reports of lectures on history by Hedge, poetry by Lowell, science by Agassiz and Tyndall. Here are Mill's speeches in Parliament, his free-trade letters to New York admirers, and Mr. Greeley's reply to them. You will find copious extracts giving the heart of the best modern books, and intelligent summaries of the systems they advocate. Here are occasional sermons into which leading American divines have put their most earnest thought. Here are vigorous expressions of the best political intelligence clipped from the leaders of the best newspapers. And, quite as important, here are little crisp criticisms of blundering political work from indignant citizens whose daily duty has brought them face to face with absurdities of legislation. Take the best newspapers by all means—and then take nine-tenths of their reading matter for granted. Some of it is good for nobody; much of it is good for somebody; but only a small part is wanted by you. But how precious are these fragments, if wisely chosen! If you are interested in the investigation of any political subject—and every American citizen should have some study of this sort—you will find in almost every newspaper an illustration of some aspect of it. Remember that it is better to subscribe to a few first-class newspapers, that you may read at home with the scissors in your hand, than to glance over a score of them in a public reading-room.

Valuable Fertilizer.

In the second book of Kings, 6th chapter and 25th verse, is a remarkable record:

"And there was a great famine in Samaria, and behold they besieged it until an ass head was sold for four score pieces of silver and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver."

It has been a question what peculiar properties that last mentioned material possessed, to have been so highly prized at that remote period of history.

A cab was a Jewish dry measure equal to one quart and five-sixths of a pint.

Through the extended valley of the Nile, as far as the first cataract, immense numbers of rough, shabby towers, principally made of mud dura stalks, abound in the villeges. They are usually of two stories, the upper one being wholly of earthen pots piled one above another, horizontally, with their open end turned outward. In the interstices sticks project and the rude structure is a colossal dove cote, the sticks being resting-places for the birds. Thousands of birds are thus housed—not for their flesh, feathers or eggs, but exclusively for their droppings. Frequent scraping of the pots furnishes the best quality, and under the roosts the next best. Fellah women are the principal managers. The manure is gathered in small bags, which are carried to the river, where there is always a ready market with passing boatmen.

So precious is it as a manure, a very tittle being sufficient, no one could think of raising rich, luscious melons if it could not be had. In all the essential properties of a powerful fertilizer it rivals Peruvian guano. That is why it is so much sought. A thousand years before the Christian era its reputation all over the land of Canaan was quite as high as in Egypt. There is much ammonia in it—perhaps the effect of climate in those hot regions. Seeds fed with doves' dung and water there germinate, bud and blossom almost like the rod of Aaron. Probably, therefore, in the dreadful sufferings for food in the siege the reason why a quart of this manure brought five pieces of silver (one dollar and thirty-two cents!) was because with it vegetables could be quickly grown to meet the urgent demands of a starving multitude.

A German Machine for Cigar-Making.

One of the recent German inventions consists of a machine for filling cigarettes without touching the tobacco with the fingers, and which can be used by smokers to fill their own cigarettes, as well as by manufacturers. To accomplish this, the plan consists chiefly in the use of a spiral tobacco feed, arranged to rotate within a tube, and combined with a movable guide or needle stopped thereon, all adapted to operate automatically when the spiral blade is turned. The receptacle being filled with tobacco, ordinary cigarette wrappers are next prepared, large enough to pass easily over a small cylinder—the length of these wrappers being the length of the cylinder inclusive of the stopper. The pouch is next taken hold of near the bottom, with the left hand, and pressed slightly. A handle or crank is next turned with the right hand, toward the right. This causes a spiral blade to be revolved, and to screw tobacco into the tube against the stopper. The tobacco, in fact, is forced out of the tube, and raises the stopper, to which the paper wrapper adheres. Thus the wrapper is filled with tobacco, and it is then automatically detached from the tube to make room for another. During the motion the wrapper is guided by a needle; and, by means of the simple operation thus described, the operation is accomplished in the most satisfactory manner.

THE memory ought to be a storehouse, not a lumber-room.

Foreign.

AN English blacksmith has just recovered an estate worth £70,000, which has been the property of his ancestors from the time of the Conquest, but the title deeds to which were lost about 100 years ago, and the family were dispossessed. The deeds were lately discovered in London, where they had been pledged as security for a small loan, and were recovered at an expense of £4.

QUEEN VICTORIA reads the daily papers, thinks, talks and writes on public affairs, practices the habits of a woman of business, and studies subjects of importance more diligently than nine-tenths of the educated gentlemen of the upper and middle classes of society. She has some practical skill in drawing and music, and a highly cultivated taste.

THE coolie traffic has assumed dimensions that fairly eclipse the East African slave-trade, which the Western powers are now trying to put down. Upward of twenty thousand Chinese subjects are annually shipped from Macao, in the China sea, under the various flags—French, Portuguese, Spanish, Italian, and Peruvian—for Callao, the guano islands, and elsewhere on that coast, never to be heard of more. No one of those thousands ever lives to come back and tell the tale of their wrongs and sufferings.

THE Indian Mail says that the taking of the census in Bengal, over an area of 250,000 square miles, inhabited by nearly 67,000,000 souls, has been accomplished at a very trifling cost. In England the cost of numbering 23,000,000 souls amounted to nearly £80,000, and in the United States the census of 1850 cost as much as £300,000 for a like number of people. But the census of Bengal, the first of which has just been fairly accomplished there, cost no more than £21,000.

THE Gatling gun, which will kill more men in a given time than any other machine in the world, except railroad trains, is becoming widely adopted. Great Britain is introducing it on a small scale; Russia, Turkey, and Egypt have each given large orders; and in the Army bill just passed an appropriation is made for the purchase of light guns of this pattern for use on the plains, and of others of heavy caliber to strengthen our defensive armament.

JOSEPH ARCH, the originator of the Agricultural Laborers' Union, and leader of that greatest of all the labor agitation of modern times, wields more power to-day, probably, than any other man in England. He has conducted himself with signal ability, firmness and discretion, keeping his movement out of the hands of political demagogues, and making it irresistible on the points upon which he concentrated its force. He is about forty years of age, and Mr. McCarthy describes him as a stout, robust, florid-cheeked, dark-eyed man, with that curious stoop of the shoulders, which, somehow, one seems to identify at once with the English agricultural counties.

An Impalpable Hat Rack.

One of the best things, in the shape of a practical joke was not long since perpetrated by Tim Startler. Old Startler, pater familias, is a merchant, wealthy and aristocratic, and it is his desire that nothing derogatory to his dignity shall find foothold in his family, or fasten itself on any member thereof.

In his boyhood Tim conceived a strong passion for the fine arts, and desired much to be a painter; but his father would not permit it. His son must either choose one of the learned professions, or follow in his father's footsteps and become a merchant. In spite of the paternal edict, however, young Startler cultivated his talent, and in the studio of an artist friend he spent many a pleasant hour, with brush and pallet in hand.

A few weeks since, Mr. Startler moved into his new house, on the avenue, and on the occasion he gave a grand reception to a party of select friends. A hat-rack had been ordered to the front hall, but it had not been delivered, and on the forenoon of the day of the party, word was sent up by the furnisher that the rack could not be finished before the following day.

Tim heard the message, and straightway the idea of a joke entered into his head. He got his paint and his brushes, and upon the blank wall of the hall he painted a hat-rack, and he did it with such force and accuracy of effect that every part stood out in relief as bold as though the solid wood had been set there.

The first man to arrive there was pater familias himself. He saw the rack against the wall, and having removed his beaver, he essayed to hang it upon one of the pegs. The hat fell on the floor. The old gentleman picked it up, and tried another peg, and with the like result.

"Bless my soul!" he exclaimed, picking up his hat a second time, "what can this mean?" He was about to try a third peg, when his daughter, shaking with merriment, informed him.

"Dear papa, that is not a hat-stand, at all; it is only one of Tim's tricks."

Had Master Tim been at hand he might have got a taste of the paternal indignation; but when, later, the guests began to arrive, and were in like manner deceived by the phantom stand, old Startler entered into a keen enjoyment of the thing, and not only forgave his son the trick he had played, but suffered him, for amusement, to pursue his artistic studies.—S. C., Jr., in New York Ledger.

ACCORDING to the last Mexican papers the country of Montezuma and Santa Anna has 9,186,052 inhabitants. The most numerous population of any one State is that of Jalisco, the capital of which is Guadalajara; population of the State, 924,380; the next, Guanajuato, 874,043. Mexico has about 568 miles of telegraph. The coinage for 1870-'71 was over $22,000,000. She has also about 345 miles of railroad. The value of real estate in the republic, as assessed, is over $341,000,000. This is only about one-third of the actual value of the real estate of the country, large tracts of uncultivated lands and considerable city property not being taxed.

A LAZY boy makes a lazy man just as sure as a crooked sapling makes a crooked tree.

The following beautiful touch of sentiment carries one back to the days of knight-errantry, when all men were brave and all women lovely. A colored Quincy Pauline eloped with a black and-tan Claude Melnotte last week, who was a porter on a palace car.— When the sable wooer told the brunette of his "pallus keah by the Lake of Ko-Komo," and ask, "Dust leike de picture, Pleine?" she blushed, and with a yaller bandanna sopped up the salivary secretions she could not control, and said, 'You bet—give me a gum drop to shaw.'

The Cincinnati Commercial Considers Congress snubbed and money wasted by the resignatied of Cladwell— only offered when he saw the Irishman's hint was surely to be applied to him. The object of the investigation was to place on record the evidence of Caldwell's guilt or innocence, and the object is defeated by his resignation— as far as the records of Congress goes, but not in the minds of the people.— The Commercial, however, adhearing to the Pickwickian sense, stubbornly says:

Ought there not to be a rule governing both Houses of Congress, that the resignation of no member shall be acceptev while charges of bribery and corruption, of any character, to work disqualification, are undetermined?— If we mistake not, there is a regulation in the army that renders the resignation of an officer impossible until trial upon charges and specifications of mis conduct has been had. The rule ought to be adopted by Congress.

As rheumatism and neuralgia are deases local to this place, the following difference between them becomes privileged to our columns:

Rheumatism is an inflammation of the fibres of a muscle; neuralgia is supposed to be an inflammation ot the tissue or case which surrounds a nerve.— If inflamed in the slightest degree, it consequently compresses the pulp or substance of the nerve, the cause is purely mechanical, and some times continues a very long time. Rheumatism yields to remedies much more readily. When neuralgia assumes that dreadful form called tic doloroux, ordinarily confined to nerves of the face, it seems to come by sudden paroxisms almost beyond the power of human endurance. That is probably due to mental excitation, stimulants, improper, indigestible food, which quickens the action of tho heart; and a quicker pulsation forces blood into the inflamed nerve case, and that explains it mechanically.

The people of Indiana will do well to keep their eyes on the figures, since the political issues seem to be reduced nearly to matters of financial economy. By the official circular of pork packing sent out from Cincinnati it is shown that Indiana, during the last year packed 610,482 hogs, of which the average weight was about 286 pounds gross. At three and a half cents per pound, which was about the price last winter, the average value of the hogs is just ten dollars apiece.— This gives the aggregate proceeds of the packed hogs equal to $6,104,820. The salaries of eleven Congressmen at the advanced pay $7,500, which, with the actual expenses of travel allowed, will bring the amount up to fully $85,000 per annum. It is likely that hogs enough were shipped out of the State and sold as dressed, &c., to make the hog crop sold worth 8,500,000; it may be more or less. Now, the bare expenses of being represented in Congress creates a tax of ten per cent on this great leading staple of the State. It is not unlikely that a good many farmers would prefer to dispence with representation altogether than turn over ten dollars of every hundred received for their hogs to pay for it.— This Congress business is becoming too expensive compared with the article of service received—it costs too much money comes so hard. If farmers got six or seven dollars per hundred gross for hogs, as they used to, the pinch would not be quite so severe. But to have salaries go up as pork goes down looks like coming insolvency.

'Do you know that I came near selling my boots the other day?' asked a gentleman of his sweetheart. 'How so?' Well, my dear, I had them half soled.

St. Jo has a man with legs so bow legged that he has his pants out by a circular saw.

The chief of police in Pittsfield, Mass., lately received a telegram, requesting him to 'look out for a run a way having a black mustache five feet ten inches in height with a velvet coat.'

An old minister the other day, asked a woman what could be done to induce her husband to attend church.— 'I don't know,' she said, 'unless you were to put a pipe and a jug of whisky in the pew.'

'I am a self made man,' said a sharper the other day, to a gentleman whom he had just got the better of in a bargain. 'I am glad to hear you say so,' responded the gentleman, 'for it relieved my Maker of a great responsibility.'

After asking your name, in the state of Arkansas, the natives are in the habit of further inquiring, in a confidential tone, 'Well, now, what was your name afore yer moved to these parts?'

Indiana State Sabbath School Union.

The next annual meeting of the Union will be held at Anderson, Madison county, June 3, 4, and 5, 1873.— The following programme has been adopted:

Tuesday, June 3—7,30 p. m. Welcome address, by the Rev. W. M. Grimes, of Anderson. Response by the Hon. Will Cumback, of Greensburg.

Wednesday, June 4—8,30 a. m. Devotional exercises. 9.00 a. m President's address. 9,20 organization and appointment of Committees. 9,50 reports from counties. 11,15 miscellaneous business. 11,45 question drawer. 12,00 m. adjourn.

2,00 p. m. biblical ilrustrations from personal experiences in Palestine by Charles F. Coffin, of Richmond, followed by question drawer until adjournment. 7.30 address by Dr J. H Vincent, of New York.

Thursday, June 5—8,30 devotional exercises. 9,30 a. m. the teacher preparing his lesson. Opened by the Rev Poarson, of Lafayette. Discussion follows. 10,30 the teacher teaching, opened by John H. Glover, Esq., of Evansville. Discussion follows. 11.45 question drawer. 12 m, adjournment 2 p. m., reports of officers and committee. 2,20 election of officers and miscellaneous business. 4,45 question drawer until adjournment. 7,30 what impressions have I received during the cauvention? Answers by volunteer three minute speeches.

Dr. Vincent, who is well known as one of the most effieient Sabbath School men of the nation, will be in attendance to take such duties as the convention may assign.

It is hoped every county will send their reports by May 1. to John W. Ray, Indianapolis. Entertainment will be furnished by the good people of Anderson, and as soon as the rail road arrangements are made, notice will be given.

Prof Fowlers Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnati have just issued a very important work, by Prof. O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and their Mutual Interrelations; Love, its laws, powers, &c.

'Know thyself!' was the profound injunction of the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to comply with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wives constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledge that Prof. Fowler has given to the world this work 'Sexual Science,' which is simply an explanation of the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas. It touches upon the questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested The terrible proctice of 'regulating the size of the families,' which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the event of Prof. Fowler's book with delight. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all. It is sold by subscription only and Mr. GEO. BITTINGER, Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q.C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The Graphic says: "It is telling no secret in saying that these Presidential progresses have an important political significance, and that General Grant is a candidate for re-election for a third term. A good many people laughed at Frank Blair when he said that if Grant once got a seat in the Presidential chair he would never willingly resign it. General Grant has manifested just that sedative tenacity which Blair prophesied, and has evidently come to regard the Government as his own private property."

* * *

President Grant and family are now on a pleasure tour of the Southwest. He believes the Modoes are fully able to take care of themselves, and that under the Kellogg government Louisiana is having its full share of amusement around Colfax Court House. Why should the head of the nation give himself any uneasiness? Nero fiddled while Rome was on fire, and his example is emulated by President Grant who junkets, while the Modocs are using the tomahawk and the devil's to pay generally in Lousiana. No wonder the President assisted in the salary steal, it will increase his pleasure as the executive loafer of the best government on earth.

* * *

The World very appropriately and pointedly remarks, "Let Grant look at his work in Louisiana. It is he who has interposed to prevent the will of the people of Lousiana from having its legitimate and peaceable way. He has put forth his hand to hold in power the representatives of a miserable minerity of white add black racals of the State. The result is what it was sure to be. The rascals, flown with insolence, confident of immunity and help from Washington. have set upon decent citizens, and in those parishes where rality is strongest chaos is come again We need not stop to pick up the threads of this tangeled skein even if it were yet possible. But for every item of this villainy the President of the United States, who hasset it on foot against the desperate protest of every Louisianian who had a character and standing to lose, is ultimately responsible. Let Louisanians whom he has exposed to anarchy, and all Americans whom he has disgraced. remember this responsibility and hold him to it."

A Specious Apology.

One of the Quaker Superintendents of Indians affairs under the peace policy arrived here to-day, and furnished he secretary of the Interior with a somewhat ingenious apology of the recent conduct of the Cheyennes in murdering a party of surveyors on the borders of Kansas. He says that the Indians regard surveyors as their mortal enemies, and as the precursers of their annihilation, and that they were futher instigated to the crime by whiskey furnished them by bad white men and he thinks therefore it may be attributed to the latter more than the Indians He is particular in advising against the policy of demanding that the tribe give up the murderer of the surveyors, and believes instead that it is the duty of the government, whenever it intends to send surveyors into the Indians in advance, in order that they may understand that the surveyors are not intended to drive them away. As a practical illustration of what the peace policy really is, this is perhaps the best that can be furnished from offical quarters, and at least furnishes its own comment.

A pretty good was played on two sports. They both set the same, it seems to whip an editor who exposed their business.

"Is the editor in?

"No sir," was the reply, he has just stepped out. Take a seat and read the papers—he will return in a minute"

Down sat the indignant man of cards, crossing his legs, with his club between them, and commenced reading a paper. In the meantime the editor quitetly pamosed down stairs, and at the landing met another excited man, with a cudgel in his hand who asked if the editor was in.

"Yes, sir," was the prompt reply, you will find him up stairs reading a paper."

The latter on entering the room with a fearful oath, commenced a violent assault upon the former, which was resisted with equal ferocity. The fight was continued till they had both rolled to the foot of the stairs, and had pummeled each other to their heart's content.

Why is an old coat like an iron kettle?—Because it represents hard ware.

Can a civil engineer inform us how it is that the mouths of rivers are larger than their heads?

'Refused.'

This is a familiar word to a country publisher.

Every little while a paper is returned to the office of publication with this word marked upon the margin.

The party to whom it was addressed does not want it any longer.

Therefore the postoffice official is directed to write "refused" thereon and send it back into the publisher's box.

The publisher receives the paper and turns to his book to erase the name, when lo!

There is money due him for three, six, nine, or more months—perhaps years.

There is a singular sameness in this respect with all refused papers.

The refuser owes for the paper.

Nine times in ten this is the case.

Of course it is not right to intimate that the party returning the paper is aware of his indebtedness.

The word "refused" frightens very few publishers—it is the inspection of the account of the subscriber that does the heavy scaring.

There is where the joke comes in.

Or in the words of the poet, There's where the gazelle entereth in and browseth.

It's the rub, because, perhaps, the subsciber has left the country; or perhaps he may be one of those who ought to leave; or it is an insult to his dignity, you know—although said dignity permits and occasions the necessity of the dun. And between the three perhaps, there is hardly a choice.

A little advice to those who are liable to stop papers by refusing to receive through the mail, may be wholesome.

This:

It is cheaper and better to call at the office of publication, pay what is due and in a respectable manner order the paper to be discontinued.

That is business.

But to refuse at the postoffice!

It ain't nice.—Exchange.

ABOUT FARMING.—A corespondent wants to know what we know about farming We are as familiar with farm labor as we are with the Greek lexicon. We know all about hunting hen's eggs, skimming milk pans and gathering spruce gum. We did that kind of work on a farm for ten years. Ours was a very convenient farm to work on. We could raise no wheat, corn, or flax seed. It was one of those magnificent Maine farms with a solid granite foundation, slate roof, chinked in with nigger heads and ornamented with with young mountains, two or three rods apart. Spruce gum was our only sure crop, and we used to raise a few of the large red, horse potatoes, common to New England soil. These potatoes, with cod-fish, are the staple commodities on the coast of Maine. The manner of cultivating them has been much improved, of late, under the direction of the great American agriculturalist, Schuyler Colfax, assisted by the combined wisdom of the Bethlehem township Early Rose debating club. the soil is enriched with a few tons of fresh cod-fish before the potatoes are planted, and the result is a good crop of cod-fish and potatoes. Every potatoe is a perfect cod-fish ball, and the farmers along the coast are happy. If these hints are not useful to our correspondent in this locality he had better go East, where the country has grown up, and farming is reduced to a science.

Our inquisitive correspondent wants to know the best time to salt cattle. From all we can learn after consulting our butchers we are of the opinion that about twelve hours after slaughtering is a very good rule. In the Atlantic states, beef is kept in a good state of preservation by reason of cattle drinkieg salt water. For the same reason no salt is required in butter.

We take pleasure in bucolic pursuits, and are always ready to give our readers the benifit of "what we know about farming."—Logansport Pharos.

The Springfield Republican passes in this manner on the Modoc war: "It is time the Christian people of this country, who read the New testament and go to church Sundays should wake up to the true character of the war now waging in the Oregon lava beds. It is a war between savages; and the worst savages engaged in it are educated gentlemen wearing the national uniform and theoretically representing a Christian civilization 'They are the worst because they "know better," and the copper-colored wretches, who are making a last hopeless stand for their miserable homes do not.

A leading article—A blind man's dog.

Gibson the Washington correspondent of the New York Sun, and the father, as it were, of the Credit Mobier sensation, is getting out a book which is to give a concise and complete history of the Credit Mobilier of America from its origin to its close, explaining everything so as to bring it within the comprehension of all. In this book will be one or more chapters devoted to each person connected with the matter, reviewing the testimony taken before the Poland and Wilson committees. And lest some mistake be made in the individuals the book will contain the pictures, finely executed on steel, of the whole lot—Ames, Colfax, Patterson, Garfield, Kelley, Dawes, Schofield, Bingam, Brooks anc Hooper Mr. Gibson is the man who ferreted out the original Credit Mobelier testimony the monthly record of a Philadelphia court last summer, and exposed the great scandal to the public. He knows more about the affair than any other live man. Gibson said recently: "If after I am dead anybody thinks enough of my memory to put up a stone up to my grave (and by the way I don't care a ——whether it is done or not), I hope they will place upon it the fact that I stole the record from a Pennsylvania court, and printed the facts which led to the Credit Mobelier exposure."

Amendments to the School Law.

The following are the amendments of the school law not contained in the county superintendency law:

Section 5 of the school law is amended so that the common council of cities and the boards of trustees of incorporated towns shall, at their first meeting in April, elect their school trustees, who shall hold their office one, two and three years, and annually elect one trustee. The trustees to determine by lot, which shall serve one year, which two years, and which three years. The treasurer of the board is to give bond and to be held personally responsible for all moneys that may come into his hands, The other members to give bond one half the treasurer's bond. All vacancies in the board of trustees to be filled by the appointing power of the town or city.

Section 12 is amended, increasing the rate of special school tax to 50 cts on each $100, and $1 poll just double the present rate.

Section 20 is amended by striking out the words, 'such school meetings shall have the power to designate their teachers. The school year is also changed so that it begins on the first day of July.

Section 74 is amended by fixing the rate of interest on all school funds at eight per cent.

A supplimental section was added which autherized two or more districts or municipal corporations to unite in building joint graded school.

The State superintendent's salary was increased from $1,000 to the state Normal School, was increased to $15,000, and $2,000 additional for contingent expenses.

The State university received an additional appropriation of $15,000, making the total annual income $30,500. Twenty thousand dollars were also appropriated for a new building.

An act passed consolidating, $38,000 of the sinking fund, $17,000 of escheats to the State, swamp land funds, and various other claims that were scattered and becoming less very year, to the amount of $170,000 the State assumed the ownership of these assets, and gave to the school fund a non-negotiable bond, drawing six per cent. interest.

Trustees are required to make their annual settlement with the commissioners on the Monday following the second Tuesday in October.

The State superintendant will hereafter make appointments of school fund on the 4th Monday of May and January 1.

Section 44 provides that trustees having charge of congressional lands belonging to the township found, must make a detailed report of rentals, annually, to the county auditor.

Trustees of incorporated cities and towns are authorized to employ superintendents, and pay them from the special fund.

An appropriation of $60,000 was made to Purdue university, to assist in erecting the main building of the institution.

The law regulating the pay of members of the State board education, has been changed so as to allow each $5 per day and five cents per mile for the distance necessarily traveled.

All tax-payers, except married women and minors, are allowed to vote at school meetings.

THE STEAMSHIP ATLANTIC.

Lost Off Halifax, N. S., Tuesday, April 1, 1873.

BY CHARLES DAWSON SHANLY.

All Fools' Day:
Dark the sky, dark the sea,
Rough the rocks that lie on the lea
Of the gallant steamship that squares away,
Short of coal, for Halifax Bay.
But short though she might have been of coal,
No lack had she of human souls:
For, stowed in her berths, that night there lay
Men, women and children, many a score,
Reckoning up ten hundred or more—
Forty miles from Halifax Bay,
In the blustering dawn of All Fool's Day.

A ship complete;
Compound pressure, high and low,
Iron masts, with sails to show
In case the screw mishap should meet;
Pumps that were built all others to beat;
Hull constructed so water tight
As to render sinking impossible, quite.
Tell-tell telegraph. What could compete
With a ship so thorough in each detail,
Ready to steam, ready to sail,
As right for the rocks she steered her way
Ere the sun had risen on All Fools' Day?

Onward she bore
Black the sea, black the sky,
Wicked the leer in the ill-wind's eye,
Sullen the mighty tempest's roar
As the good ship, nearing the terrible shore,
Right to the brow of a beetling rock
Drove stem on with a fearful shock,
That shivered her life to the very core;
And the sea flows into her water-tight hull,
Till the shrieks that arose gave away to a lull,
For hundreds are smothered too quick to pray
In the awful morn of All Fools' Day.

A shattered wreck;
Sea-washed, tempest-lashed,
Beams that snapped and bolts that crashed;
Women crushed by the parting deck,
Children drowned on mothers' neck;
Struggling men who each other follow
Down in the whirls of the vortex hollow;
For Sambro Light was only a speck.
But the beacon that blazed on Prospect Head
The White Star ship to perdition led,
Cheating her hopes of Halifax Bay
With the dismal drolling of All Fools' Day

A ship of woe;
Homeward bearing, two days more
Had borne her to a friendly shore;
But five hundred never will know
To what their terrible fate they owe;
Water-tight, ably manned,
Warranted any sea to stand,
Down in the deep she sank away,
And with her sank five hundred souls,
[Perhaps for the want of a ton of coals];
But what of that?—enough to say,
"'Twas on the morn of All Fools' Days."

PICKPOCKETS.

I.

Some months ago, while going down Broadway in an omnibus, as I was looking at the people on the sidewalk, I felt a hand very softly and gently making its way behind me, evidently progressing toward the pocket in the skirts of my coat. Recollecting there was nothing but a handkerchief in one pocket and a pair of gloves in the other, I knew that I could not lose very much, and therefore sat still to enjoy this new sensation. The hand had very nearly reached my pocket when I turned to study the "artist." He was a man about forty years of age, plainly and neatly dressed, and looked like a very respectable citizen.

The instant I began to turn toward him his hand was swiftly but quietly withdrawn, and when I faced him he was looking gravely at something on the sidewalk. As I continued to study him he turned his head, and we had a good "square" look at one another for a moment without a word being said by either. He then pulled the strap and left the stage to seek some other sphere of action.

II.

A few days ago, while standing on the front platform of a Fourth avenue car, I happened to cast my eyes down, and saw to my astonishment that my vest was unbuttoned. As it could not have unbuttoned itself, and as I certainly had not done it, I took occasion, while slowly rebuttoning it, to quietly look around and decide, if possible, which of my neighbors had been thus attentive to me. I made up my mind from the relative positions of all on the platform, that it must have been done by a gentleman standing nearest to and just in front of me, and who must have seen me return my pocket-book to the inside pocket of my vest after paying my fare. Yet it seemed preposterous to think so, for he was a very decent-looking man; his clothes were neat and well cut, and there was nothing "loud" or extravagant about him. He appeared perfectly respectable, and it seemed utterly impossible that he could be a pickpocket. I noticed, however, that he carried on his left arm a light coat in a "bunchy" way, which would very effectually conceal his right hand when raised for such an operation, and, since I had to choose between believing that my vest unbuttoned itself, or that he had done it, I felt forced to believe the latter. I noticed, also, that he and I were the only ones that were quietly studying our neighbors. The rest had the usual straight-ahead look of passengers intent upon their journey.

I had uttered no exclamation when I made my discovery, so the gentleman in question appeared perfectly at his ease. I felt convinced, however, that if he were a pickpocket, he must be in the front rank of his profession for gentleness of touch, dexterity of fingers, and imperturbable demeanor. After studying us all quietly for a few moments, he made his way unobtrusively to the rear platform, and spoke to a taller, but younger man, who, singularly enough, had also a light coat, carried in the same bunchy way, on the left arm. After talking together a few seconds, they left the car on the corner of Fourteeth street, and I saw them no more.

III.

Not long ago a car conductor gave quite an interesting account of how his pocket was picked, which I shall repeat as nearly as possible in his own words:

"It was not on my own car, or on my own line. You see, I had got a day off to attend to some business in Brooklyn, where I had to make a payment of $50. As I was leaving the house, my brother-in-law said to me: 'Take care you don't get your pocket picked.' 'Well,' said I, 'if any one picks my pocket he's welcome to all he can get.' When I got to the other side of the river, I went to pay my $50, but I no sooner touched my pocket than I knew I had been robbed. I was thunderstruck. My pocket had really been picked after all. So I just sat down and thought it all out, and when I got through it was just as clear as noonday. You see, as I was getting on the car, I noticed some suspicious looking characters on the platform, so I just buttoned up my pantaloons pocket, where I had my money. Well, Lord bless you, I might just as well have told them in so many words, 'Here's my money;' for they're all the time on the lookout for just such things as that, and they understand in a moment what such a movement means.

"The first thing they did when I got on the platform was to knock up against me and make me angry, for when you get a man angry you get him off his guard. There was no seat, so I stood against one side of the door, and one of these fellows leaned against the other side, so as to make the passage as narrow as possible. Then another went to push through, and as he came rather too much on my side, I pushed him off. He drew back, and then, making another push, got through, and then went on toward the front of the car. Well, you see, the first time he went to push through he unbuttoned my pocket. The second time, he slid his hand down and very gently took out my pocket-book at the very time that I was resenting his pushing against me. I saw it all when I thought it out, but it was too late then; so I paid for my lesson."

IV.

A young friend told the writer recently that his mother was sitting not long ago in an omnibus, when she became aware that the "gentleman" on her right was feeling for her pocket under her cloak. For a moment a cold shiver passed through her, but as it was broad daylight, and as there were evidently many persons in the omnibus to whom she might apply for protection, she took courage, and recollecting that in the dress she wore her pocket had, much to her previous annoyance, been sewed on the wrong side of the skirt, concluded to sit still and await the course of events. After having been sufficiently entertained by the vain efforts of her neighbor to find the pocket, she turned to him and said quietly, "My pocket is on the other side, sir." The man immediately jumped up, pulled the strap, and disappeared with most amusing rapidity, the contemptuous coolness of the lady having been too much for his artistic nerves.

V.

The passengers at one of our crowded ferry-boats were much amused one day at seeing a gentleman very deftly pick his friend's pocket of his pocket-book and transfer it to his own. They were still more amused at seeing a third "gentleman" take the pocket-book even more deftly from the amateur and disappear in the crowd. The denouement soon came. Number Two asked Number One to let him see his pocket-book, and, when his friend could not find it, proceeded with a smile to restore it to him. His smile, however, was soon changed to a look of intense surprise, which was very much enjoyed by the bystanders, for they expected that "gentleman" Number Three would soon appear and unravel to his friends this amusing mystery. But, alas! Number Three never came back. He was, it seems, a true "artist," who had coolly robbed the amateur as publicly as the latter had robbed his friend. In the hurry and confusion of landing Number Three made his escape, so the amateur was obliged to compensate his friend for the contents of his pocket-book, probably resolving at the same time to eschew ever after any such practical jokes.

VI.

While the writer was one day conversing in a car with a friend on this subject, he told the following story: The best joke I know of about pickpockets is what happened to a gentleman named A——, who at the time was President of one of our New York banks. I had occasion to go to Philadelphia to attend to some business in which A—— was interested, and in the cars met a friend, an old gentleman and his grown-up son. When we reached Philadelphia, the old gentleman declined getting into the coach of the hotel to which we were going, preferring to go more cheaply by the horse-cars. We had got to the hotel before him, and when he joined us he said he had his pocket picked on the cars. He and Mr. A—— had been talking with a friend about something else, but catching a word or two of the conversation he asked me about it, and when I told him what had happened, he said: "Oh! I can never have any sympathy with a man who has had his pocket picked. Why, when I was getting on the cars at New York a fellow reached across me very roughly, pretending that he wanted to reach the knob of the door. I looked at him and knew in a minute that he was a pickpocket; so I just put my hand on my breast pocket, where I carried my pocket-book and papers, and kept it there, while I looked at him so as to let him see that I knew who he was and what he was after."

We then went on conversing about the business that had brought us to Philadelphia. After discussing it for some time Mr. A—— wished to show us some memoranda he had made, and put his hand into his breast pocket to get his pocket-book, in which they were. I saw him start, and asked what was the matter, when he exclaimed, with a countenance expressing the most intense astonishment, "Why, my pocket-book is gone."

It was very clear that the man that reached across him had taken his pocket-book, and that he had been ever since feeling the other papers in his breast pocket, and been thus deluded with the idea that his pocket-book was safe. It was a very nervous business for him, for he had brought on about $30,000 worth of notes of Philadelphia merchants to negotiate for his bank, and he had besides some five or six hundred dollars in bills. He asked me what he should do, when I advised him to telegraph immediately to New York, and put an advertisement in the newspapers offering at least $2,000 for the return of the papers. He replied, "Oh! no; $500 will do." "Very well," said I, "try it." He did try it, and received a note stating that $2,000 were required. He tried to negotiate for less, but was finally compelled to pay the price named. Since then I have occasionally amused myself by quoting to him his own remark: "Oh! I can have no sympathy with a man who has had his pocket picked."

VII.

A well known prestidigitateur was one day showing some gentlemen some of the tricks of pickpockets. One gentleman remarked: "Well, I don't think anybody could take out my breast-pin or my pocket-book without my knowing it." "Don't be too sure of that," said the Professor, reaching across his breast and patting him on the further shoulder. "I am inclined to think," said he, reaching across again, and patting him as before, "that even so wide-awake a man as you may have his pocket picked. Suppose you show us your pocket-book."

Much to the gentleman's astonishment, his pocket-book was gone, and when asked for his breast-pin, he was amazed to find that also missing. The magician then, much to our amusement, produced the pocket-book and breast-pin, and restored them to their owner. He explained that when he first reached across to tap the gentleman on his shoulder he loosened the pin, and the second time he took it out.

The pocket-book was extracted in the usual way by the forefinger and the middle finger, which he had trained to take a strong yet delicate grip, and he had judiciously yet carefully inserted them into the pocket in the course of conversation.

He also explained that one of the distinguished marks of a pickpocket is the position of these fingers when in repose. A man's hand usually, when resting on his knee, has the fingers separated equally, but those of a pickpocket are apt to have the forefinger and middle finger nearer to each other, so that it is possible sometimes by looking around in an omnibus or car to notice this difference and thus be more upon one's guard.—New York Times.

MR. JAMES SMITH, an Australian journalist, has received a spiritual communication that the world is to be "burned as black as a forgotton toast, by a wave of fire," within a year.

THE editor of the Roman Catholic paper Germania has been sentenced to four months' imprisonment for republishing an article from the London Spectator criticising the action of the German Government towards the Church. This is a very pregnant illustration of the kind of civil and religious liberty which now prevails in Germany.

A MARRIED man was recently discovered to be courting a young girl at Sheffield, England. A crowd took possession of him, carried him to a public house, tattooed him, and fined him $1.25. He was then handed over to a large number of women, who shaved the hair off his head, applied a huge treacle plaster, cut off his whiskers, and emptted several bags of flour over him.

DIAMONDS to the value of $10,000,000 were exported from Cape Colony last year, and the sources of supply being almost inexhaustible, fine gems may for many years be expected from that country. New gold diggings are also being constantly discovered, and the fields newly discovered at Marabstad, in the South African Republic, are filled with miners.

THE authorship of the following epitaph has been jokingly attributed to Mr. Gladstone:

Here lies the bones of Robert Lowe,
A faithless friend, a bitter foe.
Who shall pronounce, now he is dead,
Whither his restless soul has fled?
If to the realm of peace and love,
Concord no longer reigns above;
If it has found a lower level,
All must compassionate the devil.

THE eccentricities of genius are forever coming into view. It is said by a recent writer that when Bismarck saw his son disappear where the battle of Gravelotte was fiercest, he left the royal party and went into a tent to hide his expression of grief. Unfortunately the tent was too small, and it is implied that the grave Premier's legs ludicrously stuck out to evince by their action the emotion of their possessor.

M. Thiers and the French Soldier.

Apropos of M. Thiers a very amusing story is going the rounds of Paris now, said to have been told of himself by the President at one of his last receptions. M. Thiers was walking one morning lately alone in the new camp which he has established near Versailles at Villeneuve L'Etang. He saw a soldier stationed on guard, and at the same moment vigorously engaged in eating bread and cheese.

"Good morning, mon garcon," said M. Thiers.

"Good morning, ma petite vieille" (my little old woman), replied the soldier.

"Eh bien! You don't get tired, do you, of your camp life?"

"That depends on the hour. At present, not. I am off duty and am eating my bread and cheese, as you see."

"And the camp bread, it's good, isn't it? I find it far superior to that they gave us before."

"Tiens! do you eat it? What are you, then? Are you an oil merchant or an hospital nurse?"

"Better than that," replied M. Thiers.

"Bah! Then you're a second lieutenant."

"Better than that."

"Captain?"

"Better than that."

"General?"

"Better than that; I'm the President of the Republic."

"You are Thiers! Sacrebleu! Then quick, hold my bread and cheese so I can present arms to you!"

"THEM STRINGS."—A Louisville drummer was the other day giving his experience in the Red river country. I chanced to be a listener. "In a small town below Shreveport," he said, "I was going around with my samples, when I met a green, gawkish, country fellow, with two fancy red strings, hanging down on each side of his boot-legs, which I supposed, were drawer-strings, not knowing that they wore red strings around their legs in that country for ornament. In a spirit of kindness, I said, 'Stranger, your drawer-strings are hanging down.' He gave me a savage look, put his hand on his pistol-belt, and drawled out, 'Look-a-here, mister, are you running them strings?'"

THE RELIGIOUS SECTS.

The Development of the Churches in Twenty Years.

The following table of the various religious denominations in this country, compiled from the ninth census report, presents an array of figures important to consider. These figures indicate the drift of religious opinion, as exemplified by the church history of the last twenty years. It will be seen by them that church property has more than quadrupled during the last twenty years, while membership has increased only fifty per cent. Other facts are summarized which suggest thought:

Trade in Fancy Eggs.

There appears to be a flourishing trade in eggs between the North of Scotland and London. At a meeting last week of the Perthshire Society of Naturalists, the President, in the course of his address, gave the prices of a few eggs which he had received from a London house: Golden eagle eggs, £1 5s each; merlin, long-eared owl and tawny owl's eggs, 1s 6d each; white wagtail, goldfinch, lesser redpole's eggs, 6d each; siskin's eggs, 2s 6d each; Northern diver's eggs, 10s each; and the common snipe's eggs, 6d each. These prices being so remunerative, the consequence is that in many places, and especially on the breeding grounds in the North, people find it worth their while to occupy themselves all the breeding season in getting eggs for the London collectors, and the President mentioned that while in the North isles of Shetland some years ago he visited a schoolmaster, who showed him a lot of eggs collected by himself on commission for a London agent, all most beautifully and scientifically blown—a boring instrument and sucker being used for the purpose—and in one box alone were 300 snipe's eggs, equal at 6d each to £7 10s. Any person who is fortunate enough to possess a golden eagle hen that is a regular daily layer might easily make at this rate between £400 and £500 a year. Such a bird would be a fortune to a small family.

A Curious Climate.

The climate of Peru is set forth by a correspondent as exceedingly peculiar and strange. It never rains there, we are told, but during certain seasons, and when the atmosphere is filled with clouds, a "dew falls so thick, heavy and continuous that it will saturate the heaviest clothing in less than half an hour." The coming and the going of the clouds that distill this dew is another strange thing connected with Peru. The changes are reported so rapid and violent as to startle the stranger. One may be walking along the street, glorying in the rich warmth of the sunshine, and admiring the deep, clear blue sky, when suddenly, and almost imperceptibly, a change takes place, "and from the southward a mass of dark clouds come rolling swiftly across the firmament, and soon the blue sky is replaced by a somber pall, and to the glorious sunshine succeeds a drizzling, penetrating mist." And this is also as suddenly changed again; even while one is preparing to guard against the mist, the sunlight and the sky reappear in all their brightness and beauty.

THE scheme for the consolidation of the ocean telegraph companies has received an unexpected, and what is likely to prove a fatal, blow. A clause which has hitherto lain unnoticed in the charter of the New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company is found to give the Newfoundland Government the power to buy in the line in 1875, when the first twenty years of its franchise expires, paying for it only the first cost, nothing for the good-will or prospective profits. The company, of course, asked for an extension of their charter, but the Government has refused it.

A Story of Cannibals.

Dr. Cooke, who not long since died in Albany N. Y., had a remarkable incident in his life to relate. In 1807 the Doctor, then surgeon of the British man-of-war Belcher, which was cruising off the Tonga Islands, went ashore with twelve of the crew to gather herbs for medical purposes. They were all captured by the natives, who proved to be cannibals. They were immediately bound with strips of bark and thrown into a sort of hole or cave in the side of a hill, and kept there until the next morning.

During the night the unfortunate victims heard the yells of the savages, who were preparing for the horrible feast of the morrow. In the morning they were brought out into the light; unbound, stripped entirely naked, again firmly bandaged, trussed, and laid upon their faces on the ground in two rows and about four feet apart. The male savages, who had assembled from the surrounding islands in large numbers, formed a circle, and the woman and children were placed inside of the circle. The latter beat tom-toms, and yelled in fiendish chorus, while the males performed a devil's dance for fully an hour.

This done, twenty-six brawny, naked savages—the whole gathering of demons, old and young, male and female, were perfectly nude—twenty-six powerful savages advanced; two of them seized each of the victims by the hair and dragged them about 2,000 feet to a sandy beach, upon which the copper-colored sun sent down its fierce, quivering, broiling, and unobstructed rays. Here was gathered wood in thirteen piles—one for each victim—and the savages were seating themselves in groups around each pile. Another ring was formed around Dr. Cooke and his companions, and a short dance was performed, when, at some signal from the chief—a magnificent brute, nearly eight feet tall and made in proportion—there was a dead silence. The hungry-looking savages sank on their haunches upon the sand, licking their chops like famishing wolves.

The chief then approached the helpless victims and began a critical examination of the physical condition of each. He lifted their upper and lower lips; examined their teeth; drove his powerful thumb into their arm-pits; pressed his hand upon their ribs, and felt of their legs and arms, all the while wearing the expression of a bloated epicure.

During the progress of this examination the thirteen fires were lighted, and added their heat to that of the relentless sun. The chief finally approached Dr. Cooke, turned him on his back, wreathed his hand into his hair, and lifted him upon his feet. The savage marked with his finger upon the loins of the trembling doctor the portion of the carcass he had selected for himself. As he did this, the eyes of his savage and dinner his met. The doctor inadvertently, and more by a spasmodic action of the muscles than otherwise, gave a semi-masonic sign. The chief started and gazed fixedly upon the doctor's face. The doctor repeated the sign. The chief answered it, and immediately uttered a cry of amazement, followed by some gibberish, which was received with a yell of disappointment from the whole gathering of demons, who sprang to their feet and rushed upon the Christians. The chief swung his tremendious war-club, and plastered the bound bodies of the Englishmen with the brains of a score of the heathen devils before you could articulate Jack Robinson. He then gave a command to a subordinate, who came up and with a sharp flint cut the bonds of the white men, and they were free.

The bodies of the savages just killed were strewn down in six potash kettles which had been cast ashore from a wrecked vessel in 1804, and the horrible wretches glutted themselves upon the bodies of their late comrades. Dr. Cooke and his men stayed upon the island four days, during which time they were guarded with great care by the chief—whom the doctor christened Chul Chug—which is cannibal for life-preserver. They were treated with great hospitality, and escorted by a long procession of savages to the beach where their boat lay, when they took their departure.

It seems some five years before the date of this narrative an English captain was cast ashore from a wreck—he being the only soul saved. He managed to get into the good graces of Chul Chug, and gave him the first two degrees of Masonry. During the four days that Dr. Cooke remained on the island, he gave Chul five more degrees—in consideration of which "the heathen savage" was overcome with gratitude. The doctor returned to the island in 1809. He found there a large and flourishing Masonic Lodge, and two missonaries from England, one of whom was roasted and eaten in honor of his return.

Mr. Dolmage has heard Dr. Cooke say that whenever his mind recurred to that fearful scene of the sandy beach, he (the doctor) could feel the stubby finger of the giant savage tracing the choice parts of his body.

An Extraordinary Infant.

The following literary curiosity appears in a Memphis (Tenn.) paper of the 13th inst., and as a specimen of "highfalutin," is so grand that the author might let himself out for a gas meter, or an assistant dictionary and spelling book for public schools:

Died, in this city, on the 22d of February, ——, infant daughter of —— and ——, aged two months and five days.

The shades of eternal night has clouded forever the infantile Stella, who rose as a star and beamed lucently with a meteoric resplendency along the horizon of her parents, lightning their pathway with the sheen of hope. A lovely gem of beauty gleaming brightly in their casket of jewels has her earthly luster eclipsed to corruscate with renewed effulgence in the spirit world. A gentle rose-bud, whose vernal freshness impregnated her parental hearts with its fragrance of love blooming sweetly in the bouquet of flowers that garlanded their happiness, has, by the blighting upas of disease, faded away to bloom with more brilliant angelic hues in that land of parennial purity and bliss to which little children by divine behest are welcomed.

A DUBUQUE testator formally gave, devised and bequeathed his wearing apparel to his wife, for the reason that she had been accustomed to wear 'em during her married life.

WHEN THE COCK BEGINS TO CROW.

Some [illegible] I have seen,
Of some I have read,
Who waste away their precious time
By being fond of bed.
But if you would take my advice,
You'll find it good and true—
How to win both health and wealth,
I'll quickly tell to you.

Jump out of bed, jump out of bed,
Lying long looks lazy—
If the morn be wet or dry,
Or if it should be hazy,
Light or dark, get up with the lark,
Don't care for frost or snow,
Jump out of bed, jump out of bed,
When the cock begins to crow.

I never saw a lazy man
I could depend upon—
I never saw a lazy man
Who ever did get on.
Idle and inactive, they
Will lie in bed all day,
For they prefer—just like the sloth—
To sleep their time away.

I love to see the farmer
In the fields at early morn—
He looks so gay and happy,
As he works among the corn.
Early off to bed he goes,
Too long he never sleeps,
For well he knows the adage,
He must "sow before he reaps."

So, if you would be healthy, wealthy,
Prosperous and wise,
Never lie in slumber when
The sun is in the skies.
Spend your ev'nings soberly,
Don't stay out too late,
Be early up to sow the seed,
And your harvest will be great.

THERE is a famous story of Alexander Dumas, the younger, which may take rank with any of the "Anecdotes of birth." A dissolute young French nobleman, intent on insulting him, observed: "Your father was a mulatto, I believe?" "Yes, sir." "And his mother was a black woman, was she not?" "It is said so." "And her father was an ape, I have heard?" "It is true, sir; my genealogy begins where yours ends."

TO MAKE home happy. The man who answers an advertisement to the following effect says his curiosity is satisfied: "If you would learn how to make home happy, send a postage stamp and twenty-five cents to P. O. Box No. —, Cincinnati." He did send the necessary cash, and soon received this answer: "If you are as big a fool as we think you must be for giving us your money, you can make home happy by leaving it and going West by yourself." And yet that man is not happy.

OLD 'SQUIRE HENSHAW, of Slawsons, always favored the idea of the village young men that they could do better in the city, and always stood ready to help them with his counsel. He said: "You go down to New York, young man, and watch the newspapers pretty closely. Pretty soon you'll see an advertisement of an ear-ring lost, and then you look around till you find it, and take it to the owner and get the money. In the country here there's no such chances." It is a little singular, but there is not even a street in New York to-day commemorating the name of Mr. Henshaw. —Danbury News.

Paper Currency in San Domingo.

From Monte Cristo Mr. Hazard took passage in a schooner for Cape Haytien, a distance of about sixty miles. His first experience in the negro republic was anything but pleasant. Starting in the evening, and expecting to reach there by daybreak, there was not a mouthful of food on board. Delayed by a calm, the schooner did not come to anchor until noon. The custom-house officers were at breakfast, and kept our hungry voyager waiting two hours for permission to land, and then the aggravating police officers took up all the rest of the day in examining his papers, before he was allowed to gratify his raging appetite. "What will you have?" asked the polite waiter, when, worn out with hunger and vexation, he seated himself at a table.

"Everything and anything—beer, bread, fruit, cheese—bring it all at once," was the response; and the waiter's prompt compliance tended greatly to soothe the traveler's exasperated sensibilities.

The next morning Mr. Hazard experienced a new sensation. He suddenly found himself a millionaire. His first act on rising was to adapt himself to the country, and ask for a "cocktail." It was well fabricated, and enjoyed with zest. Then ensued the following dialogue:

"How much?" I asked.

"'Thirty dollars, monsieur.'

"I start back horror-struck. Thirty dollars for a drink! I see it. I am a poor, miserable American, disowned by his Government, in a foreign land, and these miserable barbarians know it, and now they want to swindle me. But the old spirit of '76 comes strong upon me, and I get reckless. I vow I will not pay it; and drawing from my pocket a silver coin of the realm of America, value ten cents, I declare it is all the money I have.

"To my amazement the mild bar-keeper says, 'I haven't the change, sir.'

"Ah! I begin to see it; and with a princely air I say, 'Oh, keep the change!'"

Later in the day, Mr. Hazard was informed by the banker to whom he applied to have a draft for a few hundred dollars cashed: that one dollar in gold was worth four hundred dollars in the paper currency of the country, and that if he had his check cashed he would need half a dozen mule-carts to take away the bills! He left the draft at the bank and drew only a few thousands for spending money.—Harper's Magazine for April.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Shaving the Meadows.

A sensible correspondent of the Country Gentleman discusses the question why the hay crop is growing lighter from year to year. Among other things, he says:

Another reason has been whispered, which is this: That on account of the great competition among the different mowing machine manufacturers, as to which machine shall shave—yes, literally shave—the surface of our meadows, the closets, the roots of the grass are really and permanently injured by leaving them bare, and thus very liable to be frozen out absolutely. We believe a good deal of clover is killed out in this way, the crowns being sliced off to the very roots. Close mowing of grass, like close cropping of the human hair, is a very senseless practice. The "velvet cut," as it is called, which makes men with dark brown hair look for all the world like monkeys, deprives the head, to all intents and purposes, of its natural protection. So "shaving" the meadows deprives them of that natural mulching which is such a protection against the droughts of summer and the rigors of winter.

Roots and Oil Cake for Sheep.

If growers of combing wools should raise sheep primarily to produce mutton; should also try to mature them early, so as to sell the carcass—we should have wool from well fed, healthy, strong, fat sheep, which is just the wool wanted for delaine purposes. Farmers cannot keep these large sheep on lean pastures, with but little care of them, and have good wool. And the great reason the combing wool sheep run out when brought from England and Canada is, that they do not get the same care and treatment they had in those countries, and are often kept on soil they are not adapted to, and are not fed sufficiently. The wool from a Leicester sheep that has been in the United States two years is generally harsher, leaner, and worth much less than it would have been if the sheep had staid in Canada or England. Now, this will not always be so, for growers will yet learn that these large sheep need more to eat than the small Merino, and their food should not consist of Indian corn, but they should have some roots and mangle wurzel. When sheep are fed on corn, they are too hot and feverish, and the wool becomes harsh and brittle, while a proper supply of roots with other food would produce soft, round and elastic wool.

How to Prevent Clover from Growing Too Coarse.

It is sometimes objected to clover that it is too coarse as a feed—this being the case where it is grown on strong ground, making a large stalk. This can be remedied by sowing thick, and thus getting a fine-stemmed crop, also shorter in length, the stalks varying from 15 to 25 inches, according to the quality of the land, the season, and whether plaster has been used. But the point is, to sow thick—from ten to twelve quarts per acre, evenly scattered on even, mellow soil, and brushed in if sown with spring grain. This forms a close growth, and must be cut before it lodges much, and this is generally about the time of flowering. Also, if lodged badly, and permitted to remain for some time, it will partially rot and lose much of its quality as a feed. But harvested in time and well cured, there will be no deterioration of the high value which this plant has obtained among our best dairymen. Three tons per acre may thus be realized; and if the season is a good one, the amount may be doubled by two cuttings; and clover should always be cut twice, each time at about the blossoming period. We prefer the medium size or June clover, as it is earlier and finer-stemmed than the large kind, and less apt to lodge, and always permits of two cuttings. On poor land clover may be grown successsully, improving the land. But it may be raised on the richest of land with the most gratifying results; only get it close so as to have it fine-stemmed, and cut it in time.

Domestic Recipes.

LIQUID BLUING FOR CLOTHING.—Take of soluble Prussian blue. two ounces; oxalic acid, half an ounce; water, one gallon. Mix.

ZINC WHITEWASH.—Mix oxide of zinc with common size, and apply it with a whitewash brush to the ceiling. After this, apply in the same manner a wash of the chloride of zinc, which will combine with the oxide to form a smooth cement with a shining surface.

MARBLED VEAL.—Take some cold roasted fillet of veal, season it with spices, and beat it in a mortar. Skin a cold dried tongue, cut it up, and pound it to a paste, adding to it nearly its weight of fresh butter; put some of the veal into pots, then stew in lumps of the pounded tongue. Put in another layer of veal and again more tongue; press it down and pour clarified butter on the top. This cuts very prettily, like veined marble. The dressed white meat of either fowl, rabbit or turkey will answer for the purpose as well as veal.

TO MAKE OLD BLACK SILK LOOK LIKE NEW.—Unpick the garment, and wash the pieces in hot soapsuds; rinse by dipping up and down in hot water; then dip in second water, prepared as follows: Boil two ounces of logwood chips in five quarts of water; add a quarter of an ounce of copperas; strain through an old bit of calico, and dip your silk into this dye. Let the silk be pinned on to a line by the corners, and hang until it is nearly dry. Then take it down and iron it between two pieces of old black silk. It will look like new.

RHUBARB PIE.—Prepare the stalks by peeling off the thin, reddish skin, and cutting in half or three-quarter inch pieces, which spread evenly in your crust-lined tins. Sift on a little flour, to which add a bit of butter and a tea-cup of sugar—sour taste is not relished; a pinch of soda may be used to advantage, with less sugar, as it goes far towards neutralizing the acid. (We would here add: save all your surplus pie-plant, prepare as for use, and dry in the sun, as stove-heat turns it dark-colored. Soak and stew for winter use with sugar and soda as above for pies. It makes also a nice sauce for tea.)

TO STOP THE RAVAGES OF MOTHS.—Camphor will not stop the ravages of moths in carpets, after they have commenced eating. Then they pay no regard to the presence of camphor, cedar or tobacco. A good way to conquer them is to take a coarse crash towel and wring it out of clean water. Spread it smoothly on the carpet, then iron it dry with a good hot iron, repeating the operation on all suspected places, and those least used. It does not injure the pile or the color of the carpet in the least, as it is not necessary to press hard, heat and steam being the agents, and they do the work effectually on worms and eggs. Then the camphor will doubtless prevent future depredations of the miller.

San Salvador's Calamity.

A Panama letter, dated April 11, says: The intelligence received by previous mails from the north is not only confirmed, but comes to a climax with the entire destruction of the capital of San Salvador and the ruin of a population of 40,000 people. The first really violent shock occurred on the 4th of March, at about 5 p. m., destroying many houses. The quaking continued at frequent intervals until the morning of the 19th, when, at 2 a. m., two light shocks, succeeded by a heavy one, destroyed the entire city.

Loyapango, Ilopango, San Tomas, and Santa Teca have all suffered to a lesser tent, as well as every town within a radius of twenty miles. Fortunately, owing to the alarm of the 4th, such residents as had not left the city were living in the patois or in the public plaza, hence the number of lives lost, though great, was diminished. Only two buildings, the Hotel del Plaque and the Government Palace, are left standing. The loss is estimated at $12,000,000. The aggregate killed and wounded is 500.

The New York Herald has a letter from San Salvador of March 24, giving the following particulars: "The ground is stitl shaking slightly at intervals. On the road out of the city to a place called Cedro there are large tracts where the ground looks as if it had been newly plowed, while in other places there are cracks and fissures. Loyapango and Ilopango, two neighboring villages, are entirely down. Even straw houses shared the fate of the more substantial edifices. At San Martin only the church and a couple of old houses are standing, while on the road thence to Cojutepeque almost every building has been destroyed. Cojutepeque itself has not been injured. Shortly after the severe shock a fire broke out in a ruined store, and had it not been for the energy displayed by the President, who directed the work which resulted in its extinguishment, and tooh charge of one of the hose, it is more than probable that what the earthquake left undestroyed the flames would have consumed. No foreigners have been injured. In some few cases roofs have remained standing, supported by the uprights, but in every case all the tiles have been shaken off. A couple of thieves who attempted to ply their vacation while ruin was rife were promptly shot by order of the President. A great deal of material will be good for rebuilding, and for this reason Government has issued a decree that the capital will not be removed, as many had supposed it would be. A decree has also been issusd permitting people to squat on all vacant lots. San Miguel, Santa Anna and other towns which did not feel the effects of the earthquake, immediately forwarded liberal supplies of money and provisions, which were very scarce here for a couple of days."

See her pallid countenance, but a short time ago the picture of ruddy health, the envy of the school and the pride of the household. She was always welcomed by her schoolmates, for her lithe form and pleasing disposition carried cheerfulness into their ranks. Diligent, punctual and exemplary, obedient and graceful at home, she won the hearts of all. But, alas, we are sorrowed. Those rosy cheeks and ruddy lips are blanched by consumption. The voice once so enchanting in laugh and song is feeble, husky and supplanted by a hollow cough. Let us approach her couch gently and take her hand. Do not shudder because of the feeble and passionless grasp. The hand once so hearty and plump is emaciated and shows bony outlines, while the cords and tortuous veins are plainly mapped upon the surface. The pulse that bounded with repletion, carrying vigor to the whole system, and imparting life, beauty, vivacity, health and strength, is delicate to the touch. The feeble heart can not propel the the thin, scanty blood with force. Must we lose her while yet in her teens? Companions and friends gather around with words of cheer and consolation, and depart with moistened eyes and sileut steps. Must we lose her? No! there is relief! We can stay this destreyer of our happiness and not suffer the loss of so bright a gem. Something more is required now than dietary and hygienic observance, for nature calls for aid and she shall have it. Take this pleasant medicine. It is invigorating. How it allays the irritable cough, improves the appetite and digestion and sends a healthy tingle through the frame. The blood is enriched, nervous force increased, and the heart bounds with a new impulse. See her face brighten by degrees; the color is returning, her voice is getting clearer, and pleasant words are spoken. The strength falters yet, but is gaining. Let us take her out in the warm sunshine. In a short time she will be able to go without our aid, a cheerful girl. This delightful medicine must be God-blessed. It is restoring health to our loved one. She is emerging from her sickness sweeter and nobler than before, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery must have the credit. It has raised her. Sold by all first-class Druggists everywhere. 637

WHILE there are about ten thousand men who think they know all about the perpetual motion principle, it is safe to say that there is not a solitary soul in this universe who can explain why a railroad engineer blows his whistle as he shoots by a passenger train. People who have popped up from their seats and clutched their scalps on these occasions are somewhat interested in an explanation.

Ladies' Suits, Underwear, &c.

J. W. Griswold & Co.'s manufactory for cloaks, suits and underwear, 54 and 56 Madison street, Chicago, is a hive of industry. Their main workroom, 30x110 feet, is filled with girls sitting each side of long benches fitted with sewing machines run by steam, each machine making 1,000 stiches per minute. Their labor-saving attachments and machines are truly wonderful. They advertise to sell ready-made goods at about the price of the material, and it looks as though they could do it. Certainly dealers will do well to look in upon them. Their stock, styles and prices would seem to satisfy any one.—Chicago Tribune.

FARMERS and stock raisers have frequently told us that they have seen very good results from giving Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders to cows and swine before and after they drop their young. The powders put them in good condition, and give them strength to care and provide for the sucklings.—[Com.

CHAPPED HANDS, face, rough skin, pimples, ringworm, salt-rheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and the skin made soft and smooth, by using the JUNIPER TAR SOAP, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York. WE have often wondered whether there is a person in all New England who does not know and appreciate the value of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment as a family medicine? It is adapted to most all purposes, and is the best pain killer that can be used.—[Com.

Prop the Falling.

It is a great blessing to have by nature a strong constitution, but not more than one-half of the inhabitants of the civilized world are thus provided. Many constitutions are feeble to begin with, many others, originally vigorous, are crippled by over-exertion, dissipation, unhealthy surroundings, grief, privation, or some other portentous cause, before the prime of life is attained. But is this an evil without a remedy or a palliative? No! constitutions can be replaced. Hundreds of thousands of instances might be adduced in which constitutional decay has been arrested by the continuous use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as an invigorant. It is constitutional strength that enables one man to recover from a disease which would be mortal to another destitute of this element of resistance. Whenever a malady of any kind obtains a foothold in any part of the human body, and becomes a chronic fixture there, it is proof positive that the constitution has been mastered by the disease and urgently requires help. In such a case Hostetter's Bitters should be taken at least three times a day, until the natural powers of the system are recruited. Then the morbid principle which generated and feeds the complaint will have to succumb to the influence of animal vigor, aided by the toning, regulating, purifying operation of the Bitters upon the organ or organs in which the ailment is located. There is nothing like this mighty tonic to "prop the falling."

Best and Oldest Family Medicine.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely Vegetable Cathartic and Tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements o Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your Druggist for it. Beware of imitations.

SOONER OR LATER, a neglected Cold will develop a constant Cough, Shortness of Breath, Failing Strength, and Wasting of Flesh, all symptomatic of some serious Lung Affection, which may be avoided or palliated by using in time Dr. Jayne's Expectorant.

A DOSE every two days is the way to take Shallenberger's Fever and Ague Antidote. One dose stops the Chills, and a cure is certain.

DR. RANSOM'S
HIVE SYRUP AND TOLU
HONEY SYRUP

Dr. Cox's Hive (Croup) Syrup has been known and used by the medical profession over 100 years, and as a remedy for Colds and Coughs has an older and better reputation than any other Cough medicine ever offered to the public. It is known as the Compound Syrup of Squills, and a formula may be found in every medical dispensatory.

Dr. Ransom's Hive Syrup and Tolu, in addition to the ingredients for Cox's Hive Syrup, contains Balsam of Tolu, decoction of Skunk Cabbage Root and Lobelia, a combination that must commend it to every one as a superior remedy for Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs and Colds, indeed for all affections of the Throat and Lungs where a Cough Medicine is necessary.

This Syrup is Carefully Prepared under the personal direction of a regular Physician of over twenty years' practice, whose signature is attached to the directions on the bottle.

Its taste is very pleasant and children like it.

Every family should keep it as a ready remedy for Croup, Colds, etc., among the children.

D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Propr's, Buffalo, N. Y.

DR. J. R. MILLER'S UNIVERSAL MAGNETIC BALM.

It cures as if by MAGNETIC INFLUENCE, Neuralgia and all pain, and is therefore very properly termed "Magnetic Balm." It is purely a vegetable preparation. It has no equal as a remedy for Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic and all Bowel Complaints.

Its timely use will cure Colds, Croup, Diphtheria, Quinsy, and all Throat affections.

When properly used, Fever and Ague, and other complaints incident to our western and southern climates, are easily broken up.

Nervous Pain, Sick-Headache, and Rheumatism are cured by this medicine when all others have failed. Toothache, Earache, Burns, Chilblains and Bruises are relieved at once by its use.

The genuine has D. Ransom & Co.'s private Revenue Stamp on the outside, and Dr. J. R. Miller's Magnetic Balm blown in the bottle.

Examine closely, and buy none but the genuine.

Sold by all Druggists. Price 25 cents per bottle.

D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Propr's, Buffalo, N. Y.

Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Mandrake Pills.

These are the only Medicines that will cure Pulmonary Consumption. Dr. Schenck, of Philadelphia, has been in constant practice for over thirty years, continually examining lungs, and knows his medicines, if properly taken, will cure Consumption. His Mandrake Pills cleanse the liver and stomach; his Seaweed Tonic dissolves the food, stimulates the coating of the stomach and aids digestion. His Pulmonic Syrup ripens the matter, and nature throws it off without any exertion. For sale by all druggists.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, will cure a cough in one-half the time necessary to cure it with any other medicine, and it does it, not by drying it up, but by removing the cause—subduing irritation, and healing the affected parts. For all cases of Hoarseness, Suppression or Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Severe Chronic or Lingering Coughs, it will be found to surpass any medicine that has ever before been offered to the public. While it cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By its great blood purifying properties, it cures all Humors from the worst Scrofula to a common Blotch or Pimple.

Four to six bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum or Tetter and the worst kind of Pimples on the face, Boils, Carbuncles, Sores, Erysipelas and Blotches among the hair. Eight to twelve bottles are warranted to cure Running of the Ears, corrupt or Running Ulcers, Scrofula and the worst forms of Secondary and Tertiary Diseases. Two to six bottles, Liver Complaint. $1.00 or 6 bottles for $5.00, by all Druggists. Manufactured at the World's Dispensary, Nos. 80, 82, 84 and 86 West Seneca St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

No Preparation Has ever given such universal satisfaction as the OLD STYLE BITTERS. They stand upon their true medicinal qualities, and are composed of Purely Vegetable Standard Tonics. The Medical fraternity acknowledge them the most pleasant and reliable remedy ever offered.

For Dyspepsia, From whatever cause, the OLD STYLE BITTERS is a never failing remedy.

For Liver Complaint and Biliousness—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are a sure cure for any trouble of the Liver. When torpid and diseased the Bitters stimulate to action, causing a free flow of the stagnant bile, leaving the Liver in a natural and healthy state.

Jaundice—Is one of the results of a disorganized Liver, for which OLD STYLE BITTERS is a sure cure.

Catarrh.—Thousands are suffering from this painful and dangerous disease. The persistent use of OLD STYLE BITTERS will cure, if taken according to directions.

Fever and Ague—The OLD STYLE BITTERS strike this disease right at the point for sure eradication, and are a positive preventive and certain cure.

For Headaches, Dizziness, Rheumatism, Uneasiness, Distress and Enlargement of the Spleen, Irritation and Derangement of the Stomach, Kidneys and Liver, there is no medicine yet produced equal to the OLD STYLE BITTERS.

Loss of Appetite.—If you desire to become vigorous and strong eat good plain nourishing food and take OLD STYLE BITTERS before each meal. This will produce the desired effect.

Consumption.—This disease spares neither old or young, but quietly takes its victim to the grave. If taken in time the OLD STYLE BITTERS are a never-failing remedy.

Female Weakness and General Debility.—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are especially adapted for Females, as they contain nothing that will injure the weakest physical form. Debilitated young ladies and those giving birth and nursing children are in constant need of an invigorating Tonic to build up their constitutions. The OLD STYLE BITTERS are just the thing. The world has not produced better. They are perfectly harmless and very pleasant to take.

A Tonic.—OLD STYLE BITTERS are unsurpassed by any Tonic or Bitters and grateful thousands acknowledge them the "Wonder of the Age."

Will any one take Vile, Nasty poisons, falsely called Tonics, when such a pleasant and effectual remedy as OLD STYLE BITTERS can be had? Those who love life will not.

Beware of Counterfeits.—None genuine without the signature of Dr. A. H. Smith also his name and trademark blown in the bottle.

The Auburn Courier
Thursday, May 8th, 1873

Hon Daniel D. Pratt is to be added to the list of honest men, who refused the contamination of the Congressional steal and we honor him for it. There are nine more from Indiana to hear from.

The will of Napoleon is published. He leaves all his property, a half million of dollars, to the Empress Eugenie, and the throne of France to his son, a lad of seventeen. He will be of age when he gets it.

We used to hear much said of U. S. G., and "Unconditional Surrender Grant," that Gen Grant earned on the surrender of Ft Donellson. Now he is justly entitled to another, thus: "Unblushing Salary Grabber."

An exchange says, such men as Clay, Benton, Webster, Calhoun, Cass, Silas Wright, &c., served in Congress for half a life time, at eight dollars a day, and without any stealings; but under the increased salary law the pay will be fifty-three dollars a day, and stealings thrown in.

This pure, loyal, economical, honest Administration is always doing things which look suspicious. It is now claimed that a number of Vienna Commissioners bought their appointments, and that others are in the pay of interested parties. Are all loyal men "on the make?"

The Emperor of Austria opened the Grand Exposition on Monday, in a speech about the length of Gen. Grant'. These big fellows don't believe in wasting their breath on ordinary occasions. Saving it probably to cool their porridge.

It is said that Samuel Shellabarger of Ohio drew his back pay and invested it in a Bank at Springfield. The President has since appointed him on the Civil Service Reform Commission, showing that Gen. Grant don't care a copper about the back pay swindle.—It's only the green ones who are making a fuss about it.

The official result of the Connecticut elections has just been made known. Ingersoll, the Liberal-Democratic candidate for Governor, is elected by 5,813 plurality over Haven, Republican, and 3.237 majority over the com vote of Haven and Smith (Temperance candidates.) The remainder of the Liberal Democratic State ticket has about 1.200 majority. On the Congressional vote the Republicans have a majority of 1,781 in the entire State.

The news from the seat of the Modoc war is now satisfactory. It is now thought that it will be an all-Summer job to hunt the little handful of Indians down. The result will be the murder of a large number of settlers, and the destruction of many homes. Had these despicable frauds, the Peace Commissioners, never been appointed and the army acted promptly every Indians Agents might have been killed by this time. There is now a probability that we shall have a general Indian war.

Senator Morton is about to take a trip for his health. We advise him to sojourn for a while among the Modocs, and, if possible, instruct Captain Jack in ways that are dark and tricks that are sometimes vain, if conducted on certain peculiar brother-in-law principles, for which the great War Governor has a patent. It will be very apt to fetch Jack, because it has very nearly brought Morton. Behind a pedregal, under certain fortunate circumstances, Morton could yet be supremely happy.

Because a number of scalawag democrats voted with the Republicans in favor of the Salary steal, some Republican journals are willing, and, in fact insist that the Democratic party should receive a share of the blame. In no wise can this be entertained. The Republicans in Congress were largely in the majority! They were elected to look after the interest of the people. They had the power to defeat the iniquitous measure, and in failing to exercise that power they became wholly responsible. Thereis nothing clearer than this, and the person that contends that the Democratic party had any share in the outrage is either a demagogue or a fool. The President also aided in the theft by giving Executive sanction. The Salary Steal is wholly a matter for which the people will hold the Republican party accountable.

FREE BREAKFASTS.

The Radical press were seized some time last year with a furious attack of gesticulation, because Congress had repealed the duty of three cents a pound on coffee and fifteen cents a pound on tea. The workingman was congratulated that he could now have what was called a free breakfast, and was called upon to join heartily in offerings of gratitude to Congress for its wonderful kindness. The duty paid on these articles amounted to about nineteen millions of dollars annually, or about fifty cents to each inhabitant.

When this question was in the Senate Mr. Trumbull argued that the duty should more properly be removed from woolen goods, which averaged 68 per cent. We produced 176 million of dollars' worth and collected duties there on amounting to 29 millions Now if the increased cost occasioned by the enormous duty be added to the price of the goods imported, it will appear that to obtain these 29 millions for the Treasury the people actually paid 70 millions to our own woolen manufactures. As the working people very generally require blankets, we would like to see where the gratitude comes in for releasing them from the payment of 19 millions, and tucking 70 millions on them for the woolen men and 29 millions more for the Treasury.

But are the people releasd from this payment of nineteen millions a year after all, when tea and coffee have both advanced in price since the repeal ot the duty in question? This holding the word of promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope, has become so common a thing that we wonder the charm has not at length lost its power

It is refreshing to know that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that a Life Insurance Company must pay a policy once in a while, their absurd conditions and exceptions to the contrary notwithstanding. In the case of the Mutual Insurance Company of New York against a Mr. Terry, who committed suicide, the decision was given in favor of the latter though the policy of the Company provided against suicide. The insurance companies must revise their blanks Most of them that exempt themselves from liabilities in the case of the suicide of the policy-holder phrase the condition "voluntary suicide," or put it in equivalent shape. The Supreme Court said that Terry's reason was dethroned, and that suicide was not his voluntary act. If we did not now and then have such a decision all men would be lunatics who should take out Life Insurance policies.

From Washington comes the pleasing intelligence that a good deal of correspondence and consultation is now going on between prominent Liberals and Democrats in reference to the issues which should be made before the country: Among the ideas pressed by some Western politicians are: First, the affirmation of free trade and direct taxation, to be accompanied by a change in the Constitution, making property instead of representation the basis of taxation. Second a demand for the abolition of the national banking system, substituting therefor a free banking law authorizing any one to circulation redeemable by the government to the value of government securities retired by him, and returned canceled to the Treasury. Third, an internal improvement system by the government, directed chiefly to the development of our inland water resources, connecting those inland with the seaboard by and river improvements.

The frightful calamity at Dixon, Illinois, on Sunday afternoon, by which nearly a hundred persons were hurried to a terrible death, is scarcely a day old, when news is received of a similar accident near Sedalia Missouri, in which out of twelve workmen engaged upon the bridge, three were killed outright, and eight others wounded, leaving only one man unhurt. The frequent recurrence of these sickening horrors leaves a strong impression on the mind that there is culpable carelessness somewhere. Somebody is fearfully responsible. The bridge at Dixon could not have been much less than a death trap.

Hon James Brooks, member of Congress from New York, and one of the proprietors of the New York Express died in Washington on Wednesday night. Mr. Brooks was born in Maine in 1810. He always acted with the Democrats. There is but little doubt that his death was hastened by the expose of his connection with the Credit Mobelier.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

The roads are pretty good.

A street concert was given last Monday

Toy peddlers visited our town the forepart of the week.

Early Rose seed potatoes for sale at Eldridge & Rainier's.

Work is being pushed rapidly on the new brick block.

The new brick hotel is the finest one in Northern Indiana.

George Picker's house on Seventh-st., street is going up lively.

The very best coffee in town is found at Eldridge & Rainers.

Circuit Court next week. There are about two hundred cases on the docket.

This bright weather gives everybody employment, who are not too lazy to work.

Have you tried that No. 1 Young Hyson tea at Eldridge & Rainier's?

We are indebted to Hon. S. B. Saylor for several volumes of public documents.

A circus this season that don't advertise twelve tents is considered a small concern.

If April showers are conducive to May flowers— then our floral prospects are very flattering.

The new Lutheran church is progressing finely. It will not be long before it will be ready for service.

The bright warm sunshine inspires all with new energy and life. We trust that it may be long in the land

At the election, in Fort Wayne last Tuesday, Col. Zollinger was elected Mayor, S. P. Freeman Clerk, and C. Kelly Marshal.

The work on the crushed buildings still goes forward very very slowly, the large force of one man being employed thereon

Mr. Fluke is getting material on the ground for a new residence at his fine location, in the orchard, near the Saginaw Road.

C. C. Shaffer will commence his two story brick, on Main street, next month. This building to be 70 feet long and 23 wide.

The United Brethren will hold their 3d quarterly meeting for this conference year at Green's Corners, May 17th and 18th. Elder Martin will officiate.

A family named Kailles, living near Salem Crossing in Laporte county, were burned to death last week, in a log house before help could reach them.

After six months of uninterupted inactivity, work has again been resumed on the Odd Fellows' Hall. A few days will suffice to furnish the brick work.

Davenport & Co., are selling wall paper at greatly reduced prices. They have hundreds of new and tasty paterns, to select from. Go and see them.

Our chanpion gum chewer appeared on the street one day last week. She is a pretty girl and chews gum gracefully, even when her hands and feet are tied tight.

Judge E. V. Long, of Warsaw, has swung himself into the abyss of matrimony, and no doubt could do it again with both hands tied. We congratulate him

If there is any truth in the old adage "A cold April the barn will fill," our farmers had better be enlarging their barns, for the crops will be unprecedentedly heavy.

The beautiful Rosewood, the shining White and red Thorn, the stylish Malacca and the jointed Bamboo canes of all thicknesses, at Abright & Shepherd's jewelry store.

Sportsmen should bear in mind that the recent Legislature enacted a law prescribing a penalty of $50 for hunting on the land of another, without permission from the owner.

The new half dimes are beginning to make their appearance. They closely resemble in every respect the silver half dimes of the good, old fashioned Democratic times.

Messrs. Baals & Steger, at Fort Wayne, opposite the Aveline House, keep a large assortment of early fruits and vegetables, and are always in advance of other dealers in early seasonable green groceries.

The best cigars are at the Bakery, the celebrated "Golden Treasure's" and they are a treasure and a luxury. The Baker Bro's. keep all kinds of cigars, and smokers will find a good article always on hand.

The vigorous action produced in the nervous system by the toning and stimulating properties of Smolander's Buchu [illegible] and supports the entire nerve structure. It is also the panacea for kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, gravel, youthful errors or indiscretions, and nervousness. It buoys up the human constitution.

Instead of using your influence to retard improvements, exert it to encourage every laudable enterprise which builds up the town and country. The latter course is wisdom, while the former is foolishness.

Laporte papers gives a list of Lodges represented at the celebration of Odd Fellows in that place, from which Auburn Lodge, No. 116 is omitted. Due credit should be given, as there were two of its members present.

Dr. A. G. Morey, writing to the Omaha Agriculturalist, says Hydrophobia can be cured—he has never known it to fail.—Take the bark from the root of the white ash, steep it strong, and drink freely of it. It will cure after symptoms of Hydrophobia have commenced.

The largest assortment and the most beautiful styles of suspenders can now be found at the popular store of C. Klotz, who is agent for the Bay State suspender company. They make the finest article in the country, while their prices are very low. Examine this fine assortment.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is now located through DeKalb county, and runs one and a half miles south-west of Auburn, very much to the chagrin of the the Auburnits. But no local aid being given, the company did not consult their wishes.—LaGrange Standard.

The above, with three or four exceptions, is about correct.

Shall our Main streets be graded and graveled this year, or remain as they are, a hideous mass of mud during the wet season. This can be answered by the new Beord. Are we to have the necessary sewers and ditching done, is also another question for the consideration of this Board.

The wagon manufactory of J. W. Shaffer is now turning out a first class vehicle superior in fact to those made at South Bend and other points, from the fact that they are hand made and are consequently put together in a much more serviceable manner. A pretty good stock is now on hand, and we would advise those wanting a good wagon to give Mr. Shaffer a call.

Messrs Martin & Haverly are again established in the harness business, after the crash, and are making some very handsome work. We saw a set of single harness from their shop the other day, that is really fine for the price. They keep a good stock on hand and are ready at all times to supply customers with any article in their line.

Fathers of marriageable daughters should bear in mind, that this is the proper season of the year for repairing front gates, by putting on new hinges, strong and durable, and see to it, also, that the latch is in true. Nothing is more detrimental to matrimonial prospects of a young lady, than a rickety gate. Young men won't endanger their lives by leaning on them.

Mr. Fuller, of this place, is canvassing for an excellent work called the History of the Various Christain Demonstrations, and is meeting with great success, having already taken a large number of orders.—He is in every manner worthy the confidence and patronage of the public. The work is published in two styles of binding is neatly and finely printed, and ought to be in every household.

A BEAUTIFUL SCENE.—A young man with "lots" of oil on his hair, nice clothes on his back, and a great quid of tobacco in his chops, and he squirting the juice all over the church during a lecture or divine service. If we will use the filthy stuff, can't we respect the feelings of others enough not to beslaver a church or hall all over with our filth? Boys think of this, and when you go into church take your "chaw" out of your mouth and lay it on the fence or under the steps until the close of services.

The New Era, at Albion, has been enlarged to six colums, and Bro Alvord is making it a live sheet. We take the following from last weeks issue:

"The McKay Brothers, contractors for eight miles of the Baltimore & O. Extension, through Albion, are men of the true go-ahead energy. But a few days have elapsed since they came here, and already they have the track cleared of timber for eight miles, and this week they commence digging down the hills and filling the hollows. A heavy force of men and teams is rapidly organizing for a "short, sharp and victorous campaign."—The work in and near Albion is the most desirable in a hundred miles, and the contractors are well pleased with it. Neil McKay, Esq., has been on the line, and announces that along here, the ground is in excellent condition for work, and no delay will occur."

The "beautiful snow" is proper enough in its place, but after enduring a long and severe winter we had begun to think ourselves entitled to at least a few brief intervals of sunshine and pleasant weather. The farmers especially who were unable to put in their usual March crops, owing to the prolonged cold and who have seen, in keen disappointment, all of April pass away, without an appreciable improvement in that respect, would much prefer a little sunshine to another snow storm. We have made extensive inquiries and can learn of but few farmers who succeeded in sowing any oats, and they were able to put in but a few acres. The season of corn planting is near at hand and yet the ground remains very wet. Such things try the patience of our agricultural friends. We hope they are all blessed with a high degree of Christian resignation. Otherwise we fear profanity will be on the increase in the rural districts.

Hidden Crime.

The Dead Body of an Infant Found

Last Sabbath afternoon as three boys, two brothers by the name of Likins, and a companion named Witt, were rambling through the woods to enjoy the beautiful weather which had just dawned upon us, they discovered a box in Little Cedar stream, just west of the Poor Farm, on the property of Henry Shull, about two miles North-west of Auburn. The boys having a curiosity to ascertain what a box was doing there, reached out and pulled it to the shore, where they opened it and found to their horror the corpse of a male child supposed to be from two to four months old. The box seemed to be a common goods box with a part of a shelf for a cover. Seven auger holes were made in one end near the top, and five in the other. The box was 20 inches long and 10 wide, and 7 high, and was filled, besides the corpse, with stones. The body showed that life had been extinct sometime, probably several months.

The following is the verdict of the Coroner's Jury.

We the undersigned Jurors empaneled and sworn on the 5th day of May in the year 1873 in the township of Richland, DeKalb County, State of Indiana, by J. J. Latson County Coroner, of said county, did hold an inquest over the dead body of a male child, found in the Creek on Henry Shull's farm in said county and township above named. Said body was found on the 4th day of May 1873. After hearing the evidence and examining the dead body we find that the deceased came to his death by voilence by some person or persons unknow to the jury.

TOWN ELECTION.—Our corporation election went off rather tamely and but little interest was taken in the matter. After many of our Republican friends agreeing to nominate a ticket without regard to politics, they finally wheeled into line in time to put out a straight Republican ticket. This so thoroughly disgusted so many of our citizens that but 77 votes were polled. This fully satisfies us that the interests of our town have no influences where party is concerned We believe, however, that this policy is only confined to a few one-horse politicians, who set themselves up as dictators for the party to lead the unsuspecting around by the nose. The Democrats declined to put a ticket into the field, because many of them had said they would not support a party ticket in an election like this. We regard the present Board as not much of an improvement on the last, but we hope that we are mistaken, and that something will be done for the good of the place.—And now that a new set of officers take position, would it not be well to let the people know what condition our town finances are in, and what has been done for the past year. It is usual in other places to publish a statement each year so that the tax payers may know where their money goes, but no such statement has been published in Auburn for several years past. Has not the taxpayer a right to know something about this matter? In order to show that we have no selfish motive in this matter we offer the columns of the COURIER for that purpose.

And "worse than ever," it comes to us with the following: "Allen county and the city of Fort Wayne can beat the world for furnishing monstrosities. Just after chronicling the birth of a child part monkey and human, the intelligence comes that within a week past there was foaled and killed a horse colt part human. It had the neck, head, breast and fore legs of the horse but the hind half was human It could not rise more than to get on its fore feet. It would have lived and been the greatest singular monstrosity ever created, but the owner of the human animal is said to have killed it. It was foaled upon a farm about six miles from the city on the Bluffton road.

Fort Wayne, the largest Railroad City in Indiana, is still increasing. More rail roads are being built this summer, but Rothchild & Bro's, proprietors of the Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block are not back of their business.—Their trade is increasing, as they carry the heaviest stock in Indiana. Good goods are the only kind allowed in our store, and sell goods alike to every person, and so we go on. (May 1, 2m.

Union Temperance Meeting.

In accordance with arrangements made by the Ministers of the different churches, on last Sabbath evening a Union Temperance Meeting of the friends of temperance was held at the United Brethern Church. The house was filled to its utmost capacity at an early hour by the best citizens of the town, showing most conclusively that the subject for discussion was one that deserved their earnest and efficient support. Rev. Sanford Basset was called to the chair, and R. M. Lockhart appointed Secretary. Prayer was offered by Rev. J B Fowler, after which a committee of three on resolutions was adopted, consisting of Rev. J B Fowler, Rev C H Kiracofe and A C Jackman. While the committee were engaged in preparing their report, R M Lockhart was call on to address the meeting, after which the committee on resolutions made the following report.

1. Resolved, That we, the citizens af Waterloo, are grateful to God for providentially giving us a law whereby the ruinous effects of intoxicating liquors can be in a measure suppressed.

2. Resolved That we, as good citizens and friends of temperance, hereby pledge our undivided influence for the enforcement of the law.

3. Resolved, That we will stand by the officers of the law, in their efforts to enforce the provisions of said law.

4. Resolved, That we hereby request the corporation board to pass an ordinance, requiring of each licensed liquor seller an advance fee of not less than $100 or more than $500.

5. Resolved, That the thanks of this community be tendered to our representative in the legislature, Hon S S Shutt, for his support of said law; and also to his Excellency Gov T A Hendricks, for signing the same.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted, each one separately, the second and fourth calling out an extended discussion, which was participated in by Reverends Baker Fowler, Kiracofe and Bair, and Messrs. Charles Kelley, A C Jackman, Dr. Chamberlain, R. Clutter, J W Jeffords Dr Johnston, J D McAnally, A J Sinclair, Mrs B B Long and R M Lockhart. From the short speeches made, it could be easily seen that a feeling of determination pervaded the minds of this community that the law we have given to us by our late legislature can, must and will be carried out in the town of Waterloo; and a determination was evinced to support no man for office excepting those that were known to be strictly temperance men. On motion, the meeting adjourned, to meet again Wednesday evening, April 30th, at the Methodist Episcopal church On motion, it was requested that the proceedings be published in the COURIER and Press. Meeting closed with singing, and the benediction by Rev Bassett.

A rural poet thus breaks forth: "O, the snore, the beautiful snore, filling her chamber from ceiling to floor! Over the coverlet, under the sheet! Now rising aloft like a bee in June; now sunk to the wail of a cracked bassoon! Now, flute like, subsiding, then rising again, is the beautiful snore of Elizabeth Jane. Speaking of feet reminds us that Markly, Shrader & Co., have the finest covering of them to be found in Fort Wayne. Their stock of all descriptions of boots, shoes, gaiters, etc., are tip top. All are invited to take a look at them and learn prices.—Those new goods that they have just received, are fascinating, captivating, charming, surprising, bewitching, enticing, inviting, delightful, beautiful, splendid, elegant, artistic, stylish, unique, glossy, highly finished, all new and superior to all others in town. Call and see them at No. 4, Keystone Block, Ft. Wayne.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Another enormous bank defalcation has been brought to light in New York. F. L. Tainter, the Cashier of the Atlantic National Bank, has been speculating with the funds of the institution for over five years, during which time he has succeeded in squandering over $600,000. Being hopelessly involved, he delivered up the keys of the safes and vaults, confessed his crime, and aided the Clearing-House Committee in investigating the affairs of the bank, pointing out the evidences of his crime with a coolness that was most extraordinary under the circumstances. Altogether, F. L. Tainter is the most self-possessed rascal in the annals of crime. The bank is hopelessly bankrupt, and has been stricken from the Clearing-House list....A heavy defalcation is reported in the New York Postoffice ....The Purchasing Committee of the Board of Indian Commissioners have just purchased in New York 18,000 butcher-knives and 1,500 skinning [scalping?] knives for the noble red men of the far West. A few thousand rifles, revolvers and tomahawks will probably be added to the list....It is rumored in New York that the Atlantic and Great Western and Erie railroads are to be consolidated....Carl Schurz sailed from New York for Europe last week....The formidable league which was to have been formed in New York for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law has assumed the shape of a secret session of twenty-seven delegates from various trades-unions, which resolved to do nothing until next year.

Tainter, the defaulting cashier of the Atlantic National Bank, of New York, has been confined in jail. He is a nephew, by marriage, of August Belmont.

Lizzie Ness, a girl of 14, was brutally outraged and murdered near Pittsburgh, Pa., last week. Two Swedes, now under arrest, are believed to be the authors of the horrid crime.

The mill operatives throughout Rhode Island have struck for ten hours work by the day, or sixty hours per week....Hon. James James Brooks, Representative in Congress from New York, died last week in New York, aged 63....Richard Pettit, a well-known Philadelphia lawyer, committed suicide the other evening. He was to have been married the following day to a wealthy English lady....Mrs. Pridecker, of Kingston, N.Y., in a fit of insanity, took her infant child in her arms and leaped into a cistern. Both were drowned....John R. Thompson, for many years editor of the Southern Literary Messenger, at Richmond, Va., and more recently connected with the New York Evening Post, died in New York last week....Jay Gould had his nose tweaked and his jaws slapped by a young New York attorney, while taking lunch at Delmonico's, in New York, the other day. Gould submitted meekly to the punishment, but subsequently had his assailant brought up on a charge of assault and battery.

The West.

A general outbreak of Indians in Eastern Oregon is threatened....Business in San Francisco is seriously interrupted by the epizootic....A terrible calamity happened at Otis, Ind., a few days ago. The house of a man named Klees caught fire and burned so rapidly that an old gentleman by the name of Kreist, with his daughter, Mrs. Klees, and five children were burned to death. Mrs. Klees could have escaped alone, but went into another room endeavoring to save her children and was lost. Mr. Kreist was lying with a broken leg perfectly helpless, and could do nothing but await his fate. Mr. Klees and his brother-in-law, Mr. Kreist, escaped, but were severely burned. So great was the heat of the fire that the bodies were burned to ashes, only a few bones being found....Chicago had five suicides during the week ending April 28....Arthur Arnold, aged 16, son of Hon. Isaac N. Arnold, of Chicago, was drawned in Rock river, near Dixon, Ill., a few days ago, by the capsizing of a small sail boat.

The horses of the cavalry at the lava beds are disabled by the epizootic. Without cavalry the Modocs cannot be surrounded, and if they break up into small, straggling bands, as it is thought they will do, they cannot be pursued until the horses recover....The City Council of Chicago has passed, and the Mayor approved, an ordinance requiring all liquor saloons to be closed at 11 o'clock in the evening....A report comes from Fort Garry, via Toronto, that there has been severe fighting between the United States troops and Blackfoot Indians, and that large numbers of the former were killed. It is feared this is the beginning of a general war with the Blackfoot tribe, who number several thousand, and are well armed and equipped....The stage between Hamilton and Pioche, Nevada, was recently robbed by highwaymen, who killed the driver, but did not molest the passengers.... A young hackman named Benjamin Franklin Murphy has been appointed a cadet at West Point from the First Illinois District (Chicago), having distanced all competitors in a competitive examination....An extraordinary suicide is reported from Corwin, Ohio. A man named Richard Williamson, while laboring under a temporary fit of insanity, built a large log-heap fire in an old log-house, then stripped himself of his clothing, and cast his body on the burning pile, and was burned alive.

The Board of Indian Commissioners are of the opinion that their most important field is among the Sioux Indians, who number about 35,000. Spotted Tail's band is said to be very restless, and threatens to go on the war-path. A rising is feared in the Black River and Powder Hill country, should a new expedition seek to open that country....Two men, working in a field, were recently poisoned in Tama county, Iowa, by eating wild parsnips.

Rev. Mr. Frazell, a Methodist minister of Elmwood, Ill., was publicly whipped, a few days since, by a widow lady named Mrs. Leslie, on account of indiscreet remarks made by him in a temperance lecture, reflecting on her character....The stories of Indian outrages in Southwestern Kansas are pronounced pure inventions....There is a moving band of Musquakee Indians in Iowa, which are now encamped on Skunk river, in Jasper county. A short time ago a member of the tribe murdered one of his comrades. The Indians put the murderer to trial, and decided that he should be punished by being starved to death. The sentence was carried out to the cruel letter. The Indian was tied to a log out in the woods, and several Indians were detailed to carry the sentence into affect, which took eight days, other cruelties, known only to the red devils themselves, being added to the torture of strarvation.... A fire on West Washington street, Chicago, on the 1st inst., destroyed $100,000 worth of property....Resolutions approving the "present peace policy" of the Government towards the Indians have been tabled by the Ohio Senate....A number of American and half-breeds are reported to have been killed at a trading-post in Manitoba by the Sioux, in retaliation for the murder of their chiefs, who were poisoned by some American traders....The Governor of Illinois, in a formal proclamation, calls for the general observance of May 30 as a day for the decoration of the graves of soldiers who fell in the civil war, and recommends the clergy of the State to hold commemorative services on Sunday, May 25.... Gen. Davis is now in command at the Lava Beds. Gen. Sherman has determined to send to his support all the available troops on the Pacific coast, but says there are not enough soldiers in the whole army to carry out the idea of surrounding the Modocs. One hundred and fifty thousand men were unable to close a circle round Atlanta, which was only five miles in circumference, while it is thirty miles around the Lava Beds....Capt. Thomas, killed by the Modocs, was the son of Gen. Lorenzo Thomas, formerly Adjutant-General of the Army....The epizootic has caused a great depression of business in San Francisco, and a number of heavy failures are reported.

The South.

Hon. William L. Sharkey, of Mississippi, one of the most distinguished jurists of the South, died last week at Washington, aged 82.

The business part of Como, Miss., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $75,000....John White recently murdered his brother, Daniel White, near Senatobia, Miss., by shooting him with a pistol....A negro mob at Harrodsburg, Ky., recently took a colored boy out of jail and hung him to a tree. His offense was an attempted rape on a young negress.

Washington.

The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New York to sell $1,000,000 in gold on the first, third and fifth Thursdays, and $1,000,000 on the second and fourth Thursdays, in all $6,000,000, and to buy $500,000 in bonds on the first and $500,000 on the third Wednesday of May, in all $1,000,000. ....A Washington dispatch has the following item of interest to liquor and tobacco dealers: "The liquor and tobacco dealers, and others subject to license on special tax under the internal revenue laws, will, from the 1st of May, be required to pay the tax under the provisions of the act of Dec. 24, 1872, instead of waiting for assessment. They will be required to pay in advance, the same as State licenses, and the penalties are heavy for doing business after the 30th of April without having paid the tax. The tax receipt, to be procured at the office of the Collector, is to be posted conspicuously in the place of business of the tax-payer. THE MODOC WAR.

A Reconnoitering Party Ambushed and Massacred—Complete and Terrible Rout of the Troops.

We are called upon to record another bloody chapter in the Modoc war. On the morning of the 26th ult. two companies of dismounted artillery and a company of infantry advanced as skirmishers upon the lava beds. They came suddenly upon a party of Modocs who were lying concealed in the crevices, and who at once opened a murderous fire upon them. Such was the position or our soldiers that they could do little else than stand and be shot down by the hidden and securely intrenched enemy. The result was that out of three companies, numbering about sixty-nine men, nineteen were killed and nine wounded. We condense from the telegraphic accounts the following particulars of the last bloody massacre:

A reconnoissance, composed of Batteries K and A of the Fourth Artillery, and Company B of the Twelfth Infantry, left camp at 7:30 in the morning, proceeding in the direction known to lead to the Modoc stronghold, Capt. E. Thomas, of the Fourth Artillery, being in command. A dozen or so of the Warm Spring Indians were expected to co-operate on Capt. Thomas' left. The troops, having formed a line of skirmishers, advanced without hesitation until they arrived at the foot of the bluffs south of the lava beds, having in the mean time signaled to the camp that no Indians could be found. On reaching the bluff, the Modocs opened a severe fire, causing the troops to seek such shelter as they could find in the crevices and chasms, and, as usual, the foe was unseen. The first position became untenable, owing to the fact that the Indians obtained both a cross-enfilading fire and a direct fire. The troops were completely at the mercy of the red devils, and were shot down like dogs. In an incredibly short time nineteen of the poor fellows had received their death wounds, and nine more were so badly wounded as to disable them for service.

A portion of the Batteries A and K, Fourth Artillery, Company E, Twelfth Infantry, finding themselves in danger of being outflanked, took shelter in a hollow spot, which afforded a partial cover. Some twenty had no sooner done so than the Indians, who knew and commanded every egress from the cavity at that point, and numbered twenty-one warriors, detached seven of their number on one side, fourteen remaining on the other, and opened a cross-fire on the poor fellows, who could not show head or hand without the certainty of being struck. Very few escaped injury, and the rest were either killed or wounded.

It was impossible, at last accounts, to ascertain the number of Modocs killed and wounded. The Warm Spring Indians captured four scalps, which is probably the whole number killed, as they were very careful to destroy as far as possible all traces of their casualties. burying the dead in caves and burning the dead bodies. Their wounded are supposed to be hidden in caves.

When the news of the massacre reached the camp, soldiers who had grown gray in the service, wept like babies at the fate of their officers and comrades.

The New York Herald's special correspondent gives the following account of the disastrous affair:

The force under Capt. Thomas, which started to reconnoitre the position supposed to be held by the Modocs, numbered 69 men. The object was mainly to find out how the Modocs were situated, and whether the mortars could be brought up and used effectively against them. As the troops approached the cave in the lava beds, about half-past 10, our command was brought to a halt and the men allowed to take a rest.

The story of the first fire is differently reported, some saying that five or six shots were fired, and others only four, but Ticknor states positively that it came from a party of nine Indians who occupied a bluff to the eastward of where the troops were stationed. Maj. Thomas immediately threw his men into skirmishing order, with Lieut. Wright's company on the right. The latter, however, had not got into position before they were flanked to the right by a party of 14 other Indians, that had come up to the advance of those who fired first. The cross fire on Wright's men proved very demoralizing, and they broke back in confusion, leaving their gallant leader in an exposed condition, and supported by a few of his non-commissioned officers. In the meantime another small party of Indians had obtained a position to the left, and opened a raking fire on the two batteries of artillery. It was a fearful trap, and the first four shots were only fired to draw the troops more directly between the fire of the 24 Indians on the right and left. The rout was complete, and with the exception of the officers and non-commissioned officers, the majority of whom lay stretched on the rocks with their life blood ebbing fast away, the watchword was sauve qui peut. Confused and demoralized as they were, the men became an easy prey to the Modocs, who, confident in the protection of their native rocks, shot them down like so many frightened deer. Occasionally news was brought in by the scared stragglers, exaggerated in the extreme, but significant of some dire disaster. Many of these men, who had deserted their officers in time of peril, had seen 100 Indians all around them. Fear had distorted their vision, and made them so hopeless that one of their number was afterward found dead on the field without a shot. He had been butchered by knives, and so panic-struck that he could not fire a shot in his own defense. There was a mystery about the attack that nobody appeared to solve, as to how the troops were so completely surprised. If in camp, where were the pickets or advanced skirmishers? It appeared so strange that a party of 69 men should be almost surrounded by the Indians without their being aware of a sign of an Indian as far as they could see. This fact alone will give the public an idea of the nature of the ground in which these Indians fight, and what our soldiers have to contend against. During the night the Indians were creeping through the rocks to scalp and strip the dead soldiers. A man coming through Col. Green's line told him where the remains of Batteries K and A were to be found. Col. Green immediately moved forward his line to the place indicated, and there, hid in some sage brush, were the naked bodies of Maj. Thomas, Lieut. Howe, Sergt. Rower, and six others. Col. Wright's body lay a little to the left, and on the right was Lieut. Harris, severely wounded, and the bodies of five of his men, stripped of all their clothing. Forty-nine were killed and wounded out of a command of 69 men.

The Wheat Crop.

The following is a summery of the condition of the winter wheat, issued from the Agricultural Department: On the first week of April a considerable portion of the northern belt of the winter wheat area was covered with snow. The condition of that visible gave promise of general exemption from winter injury, leaving the crop subject to the meteorological vicissitudes of April. In the middle States, a great improvement upon the showing of last spring is everywhere conceded, especially in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The prospect in the States south of Maryland is less favorable than last year, and there are indications of a diminishing area in the cotton States, although the acreage is not intended to be given in this report. Michigan, the only State in the northern border in which winter wheat is mainly grown, presents a green and vigorous growth where the snow has disappeared to reveal it, and Ohio makes far more favorable returns than last year

In Kentucky, a more checkered showing is made, giving the present appearance a decidedly unfavorable cast, with indications of future improvement as the weather becomes settled. In Indiana and Illinois, the unfavorable returns outnumbered the rose-colored. The dry autumn retarded seeding and germination, and left the plants too weak and shallow-rooted to endure well the effects of the winter's change of temperature. Similar causes affect the condition of wheat in Missouri, but a great improvement over last year is reported, and a still more favorable condition exists in Kansas. In Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and Nebraska, as far as known, very little winter wheat is produced, but full reports are given of such experiments. The indications from California all point to an other year of great abundance, scarcely a county reporting an unfavorable condition. As a whole, the wheat prospect at the close of the winter is more favorable than at the same date in 1872.

The Tainter Defalcation.

The defalcation of F. L. Tainter, of the Atlantic National Bank, of New York city, is one of the largest, boldest, coolest, and most reckless and remarkable of all the many specimens of commercial rascality that have ever been unveiled. It involves in disgrace not merely the Cashier who actually appropriated over $600,000, but the President and the officers of the bank, the Committee of the Clearing-House, and the Government Bank Examiner. The character and success of the embezzlement are such as to create wonder that it could have been perpetrated in the manner described, and to throw contempt upon a banking system which, under the direction of responsible officers, and with the watchfulness of a common association of all the bankers and the officers of the Government, admits such an embezzlement as possible. Had the defalcation been of a smaller amount and extended over a few months' time, it might have been possible, without throwing any blame upon those who were not guilty in actually participating in it, and it might have been traced to the ingenuity of a remarkably cool and adroit scoundrel. But the details of the transaction, as far as known, leaves no opportunity for recriminations and reproaches between the bank officers, the Clearing-House Committee, and the Government officials. They stand before the community guilty to a certain degree of the gross and criminal negligence which alone could permit an embezzlement under their very eyes of such enormous proportions.

Mr. Tainter, the cashier, was his own accuser; otherwise the defalcation might have gone on apparently until every dollar in the bank had been exhausted without attracting any attention. In delivering over the keys of the bank to the Clearing-House Committee, Tainter acknowledged having stolen about $400,000. The subsequent examination which was made showed even a more serious condition of things. The result of the examination was as follows:

Liabilities, less realized assets.......	$ 66,000
Securities, left in bank..............	162,000
Capital..............................	300,000
Surplus..............................	76,000
Total..............................	$604,000

According to the statement of the defaulter, his career of speculation has extended over five years, which has resulted in the embezzlement of over $600,000. The stockholders in the bank, who had elected directors to watch their interest, lose every dollar they invest. The depositors, who rely at once on the Clearing-House system and the Government Examiner, will lose 50 per cent. of what they had intrusted on the faith of such protection. But the severest blow falls upon those who left moneys and securities on special deposit, not delegating the right of use in any manner, and who now have no means of availing themselves of what little there is left of the bank funds to the extent in which they would be proportionately represented. The sum of $162,000 has been stolen outright in this way.

The cool deliberation with which Tainter confessed his gilt and exposed the condition of things, of which neither the Bank Directors, Clearing House Committee, nor Bank Examiner had the slightest suspicion, has something of a stagey character. It may be natural to the man, but it is more likely to be the result of a general lethargy in this country in regard to crime of all kinds, which has almost approved, and certainly tolerated, various kinds of public and private theft which are known by other names. The greed for wealth which has led public men, occupying some of the highest positions in the nation, to take part in gigantic swindles of the Government, to appropriate the people's money in the most impudent fashion, and to set an example of disdain to every disgrace which cannot be reached by the law or punished in the penitentiary, has something to do with the causes that led to Tainter's defalcation. But all these these things have been still more active agents in promoting the spirit of indifference and establishing the tone of unconcern with which Tainter meets the situation. Perhaps he feels that he is dividing the responsibility with not only the bank officers, banks in general and officers in general, but with the American people. —Chicago Tribune.

Portrait of Capt. Jack.

Capt. Jack, the chief of the Modoc tribe, is a full-blooded Indian of about thirty years of age, though he looks much older. He has a good head, though like all Indians, the forehead is low and retreating. His complexion is black, being a bright copper-color, and his eyes are black, full, and piercing. His hair is long, hanging down to the shoulders, and his face is entirely destitute of beard. His mouth is large, and its shape indicates firmness and determination, though it by no means indicates cruelty and baseness—traits which Jack seems to possess above all others. In manner he is cool, self-possessed, and very dignified. He insists upon being treated with the greatest respect by all with whom he comes in contact, and the chief ruler of forty millions of people could not be a greater stickler for official etiquette than is this same miserable savage. He never smiles. His greeting of his visitors on the occasion referred to was a splendid exhibition of indifference and haughtiness, notwithstanding at the time he was so ill he could not stand up. Before this act of treachery he was believed to be the soul of honor. Settlers in the neighborhood who had many dealings with him said that they never knew Capt. Jack to do a mean or base act, nor would he knowingly permit any member of his band to do one. If any of the ranchmen ever complained of any act of peculation or other annoyance, Jack was sure to visit punishment upon the head of the offender. He was elected chief of the tribe two or three years ago, and Squire Steele, of Yreka, acted as judge of election—a fact which has always made Steele Jack's fast friend. He was the last man in the tribe who it would be thought could be guilty of so base an act—an act entirely out of keeping with his past character.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The New York Commercial Bulletin is of opinion that some Congressmen need back-bone more than back pay.

THE INDIANS.

How They Live and Where They Are.

Our Indians, exclusive of the 70,000 in Alaska, are estimated by the Indian Bureau as numbering in all about 300,000. The following tables will show at a glance how this total is divided (approximately) as regards means of livelihood, reservation, treaties with the United States, and civilization:

HOW MAINTAINED.

Self-supporting................................	130,000
By the Government (in part)...................	84,000
By the Government (entire)....................	31,600
By hunting, marauding, etc....................	55,000
Total.....................................	300,000

AS TO RESERVATIONS.

On reservations under agent..................	150,000
Roaming and coming occasionally to the agencies.......................................	95,000
Roaming but never coming to agencies....	55,000
Total.....................................	300,000

AS TO TREATIES.

Living under treaties..........................	180,000
With reservations, but without treaties....	40,900
Without reservations or treaties, but controlled (partly) by agents...................	25,000
Without treaties and uncontrolled by agents...	55,000
Total.....................................	300,000

AS TO CIVILIZATION.

Civilized..	97,000
Semi-civilized..................................	125,000
Wholly savage.................................	78,000
Total.....................................	300,000

The following table shows how the redskins are distributed in the States and Territories (excluding Alaska):

1. In Minnesota and States east of the Mississippi river...........................	32,500
2. Nebraska, Kansas, and Indian Territory	70,650
3. Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho	65,000
4. Nevada, and Territories of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Arizona......	84,000
5. California, Oregon, Washington.........	47,850
Total.....................................	300,000

About one-twelfth of the Indian population, or 25,000, are out of tribal relations and reside among the whites, By glancing at the tables above it will be seen that there are at least 55,000 redskins over whom the Government has no control. They are savage; they have no treaties with the Government, and they have no reservations. It would not be unfair to estimate that one-half of those who come to the reservations occasionally are not effectually controlled by Government agencies. The number of redskins which the army has constantly to watch is between 100,000 and 125,000—that is, between one-third and five-twelfths of the whole number. We do not mean to assert that this number of Indians are ever in arms at one time. Such a thing is impossible. Nor do we mean that the whole body is hostile. This is not so. But roving spirits will do mischief. Indians not on reservations are dangerous. They steal when they are hungry. The settlers are not partial to thieving, and an Indian killed in retaliation for thieving operations might lead to an Indian war. In fact, the 100,000 Indians over whom the United States exercises no control are rather the materials out of which the warlike Indians of the times are selected than the fighting army itself. Persons who reflect on these numbers and on the immense tract of country over which they are distributed, together with the smallness of the United States army, will be apt to wonder that more depredations have not been committed than have actually occurred.—New York World.

A Spirit Child.

There's a school-marm down East, who has a phantom scholar, you've all heard about. But a Southern lady was in this city last week who has a spirit baby. Four months ago she lost a child of five months. She is a delicate, fragile creature, and the loss of her baby nearly killed her. Four days after the little creature's death, and just at dusk, she became aware of something pulling at her dress, and there was her little baby back upon her bosom. From that time to this the baby comes back to be nursed as the evening shadows fall. She cannot see it, but she feels its little hands paddling about, as a baby's will, and those around her can see her dress disarranged, her collar pulled, and the indentations on her bosom made by the invisible fingers of the spirit baby. Her physician is staggered. There is no alteration in her physical condition; everything goes on as if she was nourishing a living child. The lady is not a spiritualist, is excessively refined and aristocratic, and she shrinks from making the phenomena public, but every night she cradles in her arms her intangible baby. She feels its unseen mouth warm against her, and she bends with bitter tears above the invisible little visitant. It is not a desirable possession, and I should advise her to wean it as soon as possible.—New York Letter.

Dense Populations.

The Memorial Diplomatique gives the following interesting account of the density of population in the great centers of humanity throughout the globe: There are nine cities having a population exceeding 1,000,000 souls, viz.: London, 3,251,000; Soochow, 2,000,000; Paris, 1,825,000; Pekin, 1,648,000; Yeddo, 1,554,000; Canton, 1,236,000; Constantinople, 1,075,000; Sian-tan, in the province of Hunan, 1,000,000, and Tchautchaon-foe, in the province of Fokien, 1,000,000. It will be seen that, although London holds the first place, the Chinese empire can still boast of possessing more populous cities than all the civilized States of the West. The number of cities possessing a population from above half a million up to a million is twelve, viz.: New York, Vienna, Berlin, Hangkaow, Philadelphia, St. Petersburgh, Bombay, Calcutta, Fowchow, Tchehing, Bangkok, Kioto. Twenty cities have a population of from 300,000 to 400,000 inhabitants, thirty-three of from 200,000 to 300,000, and ninety of from 100,000 to 200,000 inhabitants. Europe alone possesses 171 cities containing more than 50,000 inhabitants, at the head of which stand London, Paris, Constantinople, Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburgh.

A Sister's Sweet Affection.—One of our agents, writing from La Grange, reports that a few days ago a little negro girl, eight years old, living on the plantation of Senator George Peavy, in Meriweather county, growing weary of nursing her little baby brother, laid him on the floor, and with an ax split the baby's skull open, after which she cut his hand off and put it on the mantel-piece. On being questioned as to why she committed the awful deed, she replied she would treat all of them in like manner if left in her care. But a few weeks ago she threw the same child she killed into the branch, as she declared to drown it. —Atlanta (Ga.) Herald.

A gigantic railway fraud, involving $13,000,000, has just been unearthed in Costa Rica. Fraudulent bonds were placed on the London market—very much after the manner of the Memphis and El Paso swindle in Paris—which were sold to the amount of $15,000,000, $13,000,000 of which found their way into the pockets of a little ring of adventurers.

An instance of the steady accumulation of interest is afforded by an account in the New Hampshire Savings Bank. April 15, 1834, he deposited $15, and April 9, 1835, $15 more—making a total deposit of $130. Neither the principal nor the interest has ever been drawn, and the present amount of the two is $1,228.84, with a share in an extra dividend to be made.

A Beautiful Experiment on Sound.

The following beautiful experiment, described by Prof. Tyndall, shows how music may be transmitted by an ordinary wooden rod. In a room two floors below his lecture-room, there was a piano upon which an artist was playing, but the audience could not hear it. A rod of deal, with its lower end resting upon the sounding-board of the piano, extended upward through the two floors, its upper end being exposed before the lecture-table. But still no sound was heard. A violin was then placed upon the end of the rod, which was thrown into resonance by the ascending thrills, and instantly the music of the piano was given out in the lecture-room. A guitar and a harp were substituted for the violin with the same result. The vibrations of the piano strings were communicated to the sounding-board, they traversed the long rod, were reproduced by the resonant bodies above, the air was carved into waves, and the whole musical composition was delivered to the listening audience.—Popular Science Monthly.

An Englishman, Dixon by name, has for some time past been exploring the two remarkable chambers, known as the King's and Queen's chambers, in the Great Pyramid. By means of a wire introduced between joints of the masonry, he found a space, and was thereupon induced to bore into the walls of the Queen's chamber, when he discovered a passage-way, eight by nine inches square, evidently a ventilating flue, whose terminus has not yet been found. Within the passage-way he found a bronze hook, supposed to be the oldest specimen of that metal; also a piece of carved cedar wood, and a granite ball, which is believed to have been an Egyptian weight.

The Poetry of Commerce.

Track its history for a moment from the earliest period. In the infancy of the world, caravans, like gigantic silk-worms, went creeping through the arid wastes of Asia and Africa, with their infinitesimal legs, and bound the human family together in those vast regions. Its colonial establishments scattered the Grecian culture all around the shores of the Mediterranean, and carried the adventurers of Tyre and Carthage to the North of Europe and the South of Africa. The walled cities of the middle ages prevented the arts and refinements of life being trampled out of existence under the iron heel of the feudal powers. At the revival of letters, the merchant princes of Florence received the fugitive arts of Greece into their palaces. The spirit of commercial adventure produced that movement in the fifteenth century which carried Columbus to America. The deep foundations of the modern system of international laws were laid in interests and rights of commerce, and the necessity of protecting them.

Commerce sprinkled the treasures of the newly-found Indies throughout the Western nations; it gradually carried the colonial system of Europe to the ends of the earth, and with it the elements of future independent, civilized republican governments. But why should we dwell on the past? What is it that gives vigor to the civilization of the present day but the world-wide extension of commercial intercourse, by which all the products of the earth and the ocean, of the soil, of the mine, of the loom, of the forge, of bounteous nature, creative art, and untiring industry are brought by the agencies of commerce into the universal market of demand and supply. It is no matter in what region a desirable product is bestowed on man by a liberal Providence, or fabricated by human skill. It may clothe the hills of China with its fragrant foliage—it may glitter in the golden sands of California, it may wallow in the depths of the Arctic seas, it may ripen and whiten in the fertile plains of the sunny South, it may spring forth from the flying shuttles of Manchester in England, or Manchester in America—the great world-magnet of commerce attracts it alike, and gathers it all up for the service of man.—Edward Everett.

Transfusion of Blood.

The first experiment was tried on a man aged twenty. He was beheaded at eight o'clock in the morning; eleven hours later all trace of irritability had disappeared from most of the muscles of the body. Injection into the muscles was begun at ten minutes past nine in the evening; the quantity of blood (which the operator took from his own veins) was enough for a limited part of the body; he therefore confined his experiment to the hand. Injection was made by the artery in which the pulse is usually sought, a little above the wrist, and, of course, in the direction of the fingers; it was urged at first quite fast, then slowly. The blood which went in bright colored, passed out dark from the vein, as is the case in life. The operation continued thirty-five minutes, and, ten minutes after that time, irritability had returned; a movement in the muscles of the hand could be artificially excited.

With the second subject, injection of the blood of a healthy dog was made; the blood had been first deprived of its coagulable matter, and beaten up in the air; there was about a pound of it. The subject was a strong man, forty years old. Death had occurred at eight o'clock in the morning; at twenty-five minutes past ten in the evening rigidity was complete, without a trace of contractibility under the influence of stimulus. The arm was amputated, and at twenty minutes past eleven Brown Sequard effected injection by the brachial artery. The skin at first took a livid color, but very soon the roots of the hair grew erect, giving the effect of goose-flesh, as it is called. This artificial circulation was so entirely successful that the veins on the back of the hand presented a bluish tinge; a beating like that of the pulse lifted the main artery of the wrist, muscular life revived; the fingers soon lost their stiffness, and at forty-five minutes after eleven irritability had reappeared in the muscles of the arm; it was still perceptible at four in the morning of the next day.—Popular Science Monthly.

Benefits of Vaccination.

The small-pox epidemic has been very prevalent for some time past in Vienna, and numerous cases are constantly occurring, taxing the abilities of the medical profession and the capacities of the various hospitals to the utmost. The benefit of vaccination, however, is shown by the unanimous testimony of those who have been most concerned in the treatment of the disease. The general result is summed up as follows: 1. The mortality has been ten times greater in the unvaccinated than in the vaccinated. 2. The intensity of the disease has also, as the general rule, been very much greater in them. 3. Cases of hemorrhagic small-pox occurred much more frequently in the unvaccinated. 4. In the Children's Hospital, where the mortality has been so enormous, and has specially prevailed in the hemorrhagic form, its fatal course has chiefly been among the unvaccinated. These facts will, at a latter period, be demonstrated by the publication of the full statistical data, and it is hoped they will teach the opponents of vaccination a much-needed lesson.—Editor's Scientific Record, in Harper's Magazine for May.

Flying.—Unless we are willing to believe that birds fly by some power distinct from any which physical science deals with, we seem justified in believing that the bird may be matched or surpassed by the flying machine, as surely as the swiftest animals are surpassed by the locomotive. It is encouraging to consider that the actual amount of power necessary to convey a weight through the air—if that support is derived directly from the air—is very much less than required to convey the same weight by sea or land. In the presence of failing coal supplies, this consideration will one day assume first-rate importance.—London Spectator.

Sudden Grayness of the Hair.

The author J. Pincus—Wiener Medical Presse, No. 2, 1873—has gleaned the following facts relating to this interesting phenomenon. One case, that of a physician in Berlin, he gives in the sufferer's own words, as follows:

"My wife and daughter had gone to spend the summer in one of the neighboring baths. I was awaiting a letter informing me of their arrival and domestication in their new abode. The expected letter arrived as I was about to drive in company with my oldest daughter. I opened the letter and read that my daughter had suddenly died. Instantly my hair became gray, with here and there a remaining brown one. I had to go that afternoon into the country to visit some patients, and I met those I knew and who had seen me twenty-four hours before. They were astounded to see I had turned gray 'in a night.' I must state that I was then, always have been, and am still a strong and healthy man."

Another case emanates from the Netherlands, on the authority of Dr. Kooman:

"A young man thirty or thirty-five years old, with black hair and beard, was in the habit of visiting me. One day he came into my office, and I was at a loss to recognize the man who stood before me, for it was my friend, with hair and beard white as snow. He saw my surprise, and told me the following tale: A few weeks previous to his visit to me, while passing through the streets and canals of Rotterdam, he saw a crowd of people excited and calling for help. As he drew near he heard that a little boy had fallen into the canal. Being a good swimmer, he jumped into the water and rescued the boy, but life was extinct. He at the same moment recognized the lad as his own little son. Instantly his hair became gray.

"In this instance the physician who noted the case thought that the individual hairs became gray throughout their entire length, and not merely at their roots. In such cases the author has thought that the rule is for the hairs which grow after the date of the shock to become gray, while that which is block at the time of fright remains black."

A Floating Graveyard.

From Cornelius Brown, member of the House from this county, we have the following particulars concerning the destruction by water of the Perkins graveyard. This cemetery was opened in 1844, at which time it was owned by Constantine Perkins, who died during the war, and is sixteen miles below Little Rock, on the Arkansas river. The river was very high on Friday of last week, at which time the yard commenced caving gradually into the river, exposing to view moldy coffins, and in some instances their contents. The water kept rising until the cemetery was swept completely away, and about 500 coffins were washed into the river. It is thought they will all be recovered, as the graveyard is situated in what is known as the "Horse Shoe," between the river and a lake, where the water forms an eddy. When the graveyard was opened it was situated about 900 yards from the river, but each succeeding rise has washed more and more of the bank away, until the last flood came, which destroyed every vestige of the hallowed spot wherein were the loved remains of many citizens. The last body was washed into the river Sunday, at which time the citizens were summoned out by the Justice of the Peace to rescue the bodies from the river, and at which time about thirty-five were recovered. It is thought that all the bodies will be rescued, except those which have lain in the ground until they have decayed. Among the bodies recovered and recognized were those of Seeley Pillow, a woman who died six weeks ago, and Shade Shaley, a man who had been dead about a year. The wildest excitement prevails in the vicinity of the destroyed cemetery, as the men and women are searching in the muddy waters of the Arkansas for the remains of their dead friends.—Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.

Foster's Remains Not to be Disturbed.

When J. C. Colt murdered Mr. Adams in the building corner of Chambers street and Broadway there was an attempt by Colt's relatives—according to the managers of Greenwood Cemetery—to defy public opinion by the purchase of a prominent lot in that burial ground, for the purpose of interring the culprit there, and erecting a grand monument over the remains. Col. Colt, of Hartford, and another relative of the murderer, living in Paterson, and endeavored to obtain the lot, but their purpose being divined by the officials of the cemetery the lot was refused, and Colt was buried secretly in the country. Foreseeing the occurrence of similar difficulties, the trustees enacted that no person executed for a capital offense should be buried within the grounds. This rule is incorporated in No. 1 of the conditions upon which lots are conveyed by the institution.

It seems that the President of the Association was unaware of this regulation, and expressed surprise, when told of it, that the clerk of the cemetery should have issued a permit for the burial of Foster, supposing then that this proviso concerning criminals was in the charter, and that the interment was therefore a violation of it. As there has been some comment, if not objection, on the part of the stockholders to this proceeding, inquiry was made yesterday at the office. It was found that no trouble was expected among the lot-holders. One who owns a burial place near that belonging to the Fosters was in the rooms of that society, and he said that he believed that a vote taken among those near Section 33, Chapel Hill, where Foster's body lies, would be in favor of its remaining, provided no attempt was made at erecting a prominent tomb.

The officials lay much stress upon the fact that Foster's father bought the plot before the rule above given was enacted, and that no such proviso was upon his deed.—New York World.

On a recent trial in South Wales to test the validity of a will, it was proved that in 1867 the testator became impaired in intellect to such an extent that he went to the postoffice with a postage-stamp stuck on his forehead, and requested to be sent by mail to a place he mentioned.

Croup.

Croup is one of the most dreaded complaints to which children are liable. It is an inflammation of that delicate membrane which, continued from the mouth, lines the whole inner surface of the larynx and windpipe, and finally of the bronchial tubes, or air passages.

Both from the importance of its situation and the rapidity with which it runs its course, croup is one of the most dreaded and fatal affections in the range of juvenile diseases.

The symptoms begin with restlessness, which in a few hours is followed by wheezing in the throat and hoarseness, most heard during sleep, while a short, dry cough soon after succeeds, attended with a tightness and constriction in the throat, indicated by the child frequently raising its hands to the parts as if to remove some obstruction. The difficulty of breathing becomes rapidly more distressing, and the face assumes an aspect of great anxiety; the veins in the neck become swollen and knotted, or varicose, and the voice, every time the child speaks or coughs, has a sharp metallic ring, which soon settles in a steady sound, like the crow or croupy noise made by fowls when caught and held in the hand—that character, in fact, which has given to the disease the popular name which it bears. The cough, at first dry, is after a time attended by a thick, ropy expectoration, which, clinging like glue to the fauces, and extremely difficult to remove, causes the child great suffering to expel, the patient appearing half suffocated in its abortive attempts to void the adhering whitish phlegm. With these symptoms come on thirst, heat and considerable fever; the pulse is quick and vibrating, while the efforts of the child to obtain air cause it to arch the neck back in a manner most distressing to witness, till the anxiety of countenance and difficulty of respiration increasing, the little patient expires about the third day, strangulated from the interruption of air to the lungs.

The paroxysms of this disease usually come on in the evening, and become intensified about midnight, the patient seeming free and better during the day.

All efforts should be lent to induce the reabsorption of the false membrane, loosen it from its hold of the windpipe, and cause it to be expelled. Warm bathing, or sprinkling with warm water, may be resorted to, and moderate vomiting produced until the services of a physician can be secured, a matter which should never be neglected, unless one has had much experience in such cases.—Western Rural.

How to Make Soft Soap.

Keep your ashes dry, and when put in the hopper preparatory to making soap, have from a half a peck to a peck of unslacked lime put in with the ashes. Before putting the grease in, swing the kettle off the fire and let it hang a few moments. If there is any potash in it, take a shovel and take it out; for if there is too much potash in it it will not make good soap. Pack the ashes well, adding water enough to dampen them. Then put three or four buckets of water on each day for two or three days, until you think it sufficiently soaked, and lastly, pour on boiling water to run the lye off. As soon as there has enough run off to commence boiling, put your kettle over the fire, and boil the lye as fast as it will boil, still adding more lye as it boils down. Continue in this way for a whole day. By evening it will probably be sufficiently strong to eat a feather in passing it three times across the liquid. Now put the grease in, all you think it will eat, still boiling as fast as you can without its running over. If it eats the grease all up, add more. Leave the kettle to hang over the fire all night. In the morning if there are any scraps of grease that are not eaten up, boil again for an hour or two, and if they do not dissolve take them out. Then take out a few spoonfuls of the soap and set it away a little while to cool. When cold, if there is no lye under it, and it appears free from grease, set the kettle off, and hang another one to boil more lye. Managing in this way, there can generally be made from sixteen to eighteen gallons of nice white soap in two days, and often in one day and night. By pursuing this plan, or a similar one, any one can make strong, nice soap.

An Interview with Don Carlos.

A New York correspondent has had an interview with Don Carlos, who justifies his present course by saying that the act by which the throne of Spain was given to Isabella was a violation of the organic law of the Kingdom, and therefore illegal, and he proposes to continue the fight for the rights of his house which was begun by his grandfather. His programme of government is that everything shall be done through a free Cortes. There shall be complete decentralization in everything but general politics. Castelar and Figueras, Don Carlos holds, are men of great ability, but the Republic is never possible in Spain without assuming the wildest socialistic character. Of Thiers Don Carlos says that he has not much reason to fear his intrigues or hostility. As to Cuba, he holds the abolition of slavery to be indispensable, but gradual, and not at the expense of the proprietors. No government, however, dare allude in Spain to the alienation of Cuba.

Pulling a Hippopotamus' Tooth.—Not long ago, the old male hippopotamus at the Gardens suffered much from a decayed tooth. In former times he would have been shot, as was poor "Chunee," the elephant at Exeter 'Change. Mr. Bartlett, Superintendent of the Zoological Gardens, with his ever-ready talent in meeting all emergencies, determined to pull out the tooth. He ordered the blacksmith to make a pair of "tooth-forceps," and a tremendous pair they were. The "bite" of the forceps just fitted the tooth of the hippo. By skillful management Bartlett managed to seize Master Hippo's tooth as he put his head through the bars. The hippo, roaring frightfully, pulled one way, and Bartlett and the keepers pulled the other, and at last out came the tooth, and the hippo soon got well again.—Popular Science Monthly.

The New War Ships.

Orders have been issued to the Navy Department to lay the keels and begin the work of getting material ready for the construction of four of the new naval vessels. Three of the class of the United States steamer Nipsic, of about six hundred and forty tons, are to be constructed of wood; one at Portsmouth, one at Boston, and the third at Norfolk. The plan is to attain the greatest speed with the heaviest battery the size will permit. The fourth vessel is to be a novelty in American naval architecture, and will be constructed at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The work of laying the keel having, in fact, already begun, this vessel, also to be constructed of wood, is designed to be the most formidable in the service. She will be to the American navy what the Raleigh, recently launched from an English dockyard, is to the British navy—an entirely new type of ship, so far as the models heretofore followed. It is not intended she will be so large as the Raleigh, but greater strength, durability and fighting capacity will be provided for. The novelty will be the balancing power, by which a level gun-deck may be had with all the armament on one side. Speed also will be one of the features of this new war craft. It will probably be two months before the plans of this vessel are completed. In the meantime workmen will be engaged in getting out the material for construction of the hull. The breaking up of the Philadelphia Navy Yard prevented the building of one of the new vessels at that place. The Board of Engineers engaged in perfecting the plan of the League Island Navy Yard, to which all the machinery, etc., at the Philadelphia Navy Yard are to be transferred, have nearly completed their labor and will be ready to report in a few days. The new yard, as designed, will not be completed for at least fifty years. A small wooden screw vessel will be constructed at Mare Island Navy Yard. The remainder of the number—three—will be built of iron, specifications for which are now being prepared and will shortly be published. —Washington Letter.

The East India Company.

It is significant that, at the time American citizens are going into the governing business in the West Indies, the British Parliament is preparing the way for the complete abandonment of the famous East India Company. By an act of Parliamet of 1857, the governing powers were virtually taken from the East India Company, and the functions and powers formerly exercised by the proprietors and Board of Directors have been vested in the Queen of England, who has governed the territory as Empress of India. This act, however, did not wind up the affairs of the company, though the value of stock materially declined after the loss of its political powers. It is now proposed in Parliament to abolish the company altogether. A bill has been introduced providing for the redemption or commutation of the dividend on the capital stock, for a transfer of the security fund to the Government, and for the final dissolution of the company. By this bill, the dividends on East India stock are to cease after the 30th of April, 1874. Another bill authorizes the Government to pay £200 sterling for every £100 of stock, after the same date, to all those who refuse to assent to the terms of commutation. The conviction seems to be that the company will be finally dissolved.

What Befell an Indiscreet Dog.

A couple of dogs were having a dispute on the opposite side of a slat fence on High street the other morning, when one of them, letting his valor get the better of his discretion, plunged his head through the slats in hopes of nipping his antagonist. That was where he made the mistake. The head went through nicely, but wouldn't pull back. The other pup, seeing his foe was in chancery, leisurely commenced eating up the front part of his head and ears. There was "music in the air" about that time, and the yelping brought the juvenile owner to the rescue. He took in the situation at once, and freezing onto that dog's tail, and bracing against the fence, he pulled his level best. For a moment it was doubtful which would give way first, the tail, the head or the picket; but, with a final surge the boy brought away the pup minus the biggest part of both ears. The first jump that the dog made when loose was something over twenty feet, and, with a continuous wail of grief he disappeared round the corner.—North Bridgewater (Mass.) Press.

Lord Hope's Choice, Mrs. Ann S. Stephens' new novel, has just been published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, Pa., and will meet with a very large sale, for Mrs. Stephens stands among the first of our American novelists, always teaching a good moral, and writing in a fascinating manner. The scenes and characters in "Lord Hope's Choice" are mostly English, the parties coming from their house in New York under assumed names, on account of family difficulties. It will prove to be immensely popular. "Lord Hope's Choice" is issued in a large duodecimo volume, and sold by all booksellers at the low price of $1.75 in cloth, or $1.50 in paper cover; or copies will be sent by mail, to any place, post-paid, by the publishers, T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, Pa., on receipt of the price. All of Mrs. Ann S. Stephens' nineteen books are put up in a neat box, bound in morocco cloth, full gilt backs, etc. Price, $33.25.

A Newspaper Maniac.—The Paris Presse has been sold at public auction for 250,050 francs. Its purchaser, M. Debrousse, is a newspaper maniac, who has sunk already during the past year half a million in the Courier de France. A few years ago Mires had bought of M. de Girardin the same Presse for 1,400,000 francs. After that the paper adopted a conservative Catholic policy, and had lost all influence when the Empire fell. Latterly it has been inspired by M. de Lagueronniere, apparently in a Bonapartist sense, but with spasmodic efforts to approach the flesh pots of Versailles. It was thus that the Presse served M. Guyot-Monpayroux for an organ, when the latter began the campaign which ended with the constitution of the Committee of Thirty.

An American Editor About to Marry a Princess.

It is reported in newspaper circles that James Gordon Bennett, the monarch of the New York Herald, who is now on a protracted visit to Europe and Northern Africa, cherishes a fondness for one of the daughters of King Christian IX., of Denmark, and that for the purpose of properly paving his way to the haughty old King, he has shrewdly managed the European department of the Herald, in order to impress the great influence of his newspaper more firmly upon the old man's mind. The discovery of Livingstone was his masterpiece, and broke down the last barrier between himself and every court of continental Europe. Mr. Bennett's infatuation for the young princess is said to be intense, he having first met her in Berlin four years ago. Since then he has spent much of his time in Europe, always within hearing distance of the throne of Denmark, and it is stated that there is the best authority for the announcement that a marriage has been agreed upon. There is also a wild report that King Bennett is about making large purchases in Spain, for the purpose of some day becoming Governor or President of the Southwestern Peninsula. Indeed, Sickles and Bennett have been charged upon various occasions as being directly concerned with the abdication of Amadeus, they having offered sufficient inducements for his retiring from the throne.

Census of India—All for Honor.

The British Government has lately taken the census of its East Indian possessions. The Calcutta papers tell of the trifling sum which this work cost in the great province of Bengal, which has an area of two hundred and fifty thousand square miles and a population of sixty-seven millions. It seems that the leading inhabitants in every district were appointed to carry out the task without payment, and so dearly was the privilege rated by them all that many who had been passed over as unfit or superfluous, petitioned the Government to let them share in the honorable work. We are told that much of the work was very trying to those engaged in it. Most of the enumeraters in Hughli had to wade in the mud from village to village under the fierce sunshine or the drenching rain of the Bengal September. One of them died at the close of his work, and five more have since been invalided. We don't get any of our government work done in this way in the United States.

Marshal Bazaine.

The Bazaine case, in France, has become curiously complicated. M. Thiers, who has never believed Marshal Bazaine to be guilty, has become very anxious over the suit, which has been prolonged nearly a year in the hope of changing public opinion. Recently M. Thiers tested the popular pulse by publishing some semi-official statements in the columns of the London Times, which had the effect to raise a storm of indignation in the French republican journals. Still more recently M. Thiers expressed himself in favor of discontinuing the case, but the Marshal says his honor will not admit of such a termination after ten months' imprisonment, and after the serious charges which have been made against him. Thus the matter stands at present, M. Thiers being unwilling to go on with a trial which he is confident will end in acquittal and an after-suit for defamation of character, as in the case of Gen. Trochu, and the people demanding immediate trial.

Something New in Chignons.

It seems that multitudinous hair-pins are not sufficient to keep chignons in their places, and Dore, not him of Paris, but him of London, has devised what he naively terms "a simple and complete contrivance for securing hair on ladies' heads." The invention consists in a kind of frame to be worn instead of a comb, and made to fit the head and covered with some soft material. The natural hair is drawn through holes in the frame and made up into a knot; then pins are passed through the soft material into the natural hair and serve to hold the frame in position. The chignon is then attached to the upper part of the frame, and is arranged to fall in such fashion as to completely cover the latter.

Excellent Confection.—This is the season for oranges. The peel of this fruit preserved in sugar is one of the most delightful confections which a family can use, far superior to the extracts sold in the shops. The peel should, of course, be perfectly clean, and should be cut in long, thin strips. Stew in water till all the bitterness is extracted. Throw away the water and stew again for half an hour in a thick sirup made of a pound of sugar to one of peel, with just water enough. Put away, in a cool place, for flavoring puddings, pies, etc. For this purpose it should be chopped very fine. No better or cheaper flavoring can be furnished a household.

The Creed of Life.—Abstain wholly from liquor and tobacco. Be temperate in all things. Remember that cleanliness is next to godliness. Be cheerful and unselfish. Do not let care corrode your heart. Do your duty as your conscience prompts, and leave results to Him who alone can control them to the furtherance of His designs. By so doing you will have—so far as human means can contribute to it—health, long life, and substantial happiness.—P. T. Barnum.

Rock Cream.—Boil a teacupful of the best rice till quite soft in a new milk, sweeten with powdered white sugar, and pile it upon a dish, lay all over it lumps of jelly or preserved fruit of any kind. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth, add a little sugar flavored with what you please. Add to this when very stiff about a tablespoonful of rich cream—drop over rice, giving it the appearance of a rock of snow.

Cousin Sally Dillard.

[Scene—A Court of Justice in North Carolina.]

A beardless disciple of Themis rises and thus addresses the court: "May it please your worship, and you, gentlemen of the jury, since it has been my fortune (good or bad I will not say) to exercise myself in legal disputation, it has never befallen me to be obliged to prosecute so direfully marked an assault. A more willful, violent and dangerous battery, and finally a more diabolical breach of the peace has seldom happened in a civilized country, and I dare say it seldom has been your duty to pass upon one so shocking to benevolent feelings, as this which took place at Captain Rice's, in this county, but you will hear from the witnesses."

The witnesses being sworn, two or three were examined and disposed of. One said that he heard but did not see the fight; another that he saw the row, but he did not know who struck first, and another that he was very drunk and couldn't say much about the scrimmage.

Lawyer Chops—I am sorry, gentlemen, to have occupied your time with the stupidity of the witnesses examined. It arises, gentlemen, altogether from a misapprehension on my part. Had I known as now that I had a witness who was acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, and who was able to make himself clearly understood to the court and jury, I should not have trespassed so long on your patience. Come forward, Mr. Harris, and be sworn.

So forward comes the witness, a fat, chuffy old man, a "leetle" corned, and took the oath with an air.

Chops—Harris, we wish you to tell about the riot that happened the other day at Captain Rice's, and as a good deal of time has already been wasted in circumlocution we wish you to be compendious, at the same time as explicit as possible.

Harris—Adzakly (giving the lawyer a knowing wink, at the same time clearing his throat). Captain Rice, he gin a treat, and Cousin Sally Dillard she comes over to our house and asked me if my wife she moutn't go. I told Cousin Sally Dillard my wife was poorly, being as how she had a touch of rheumatics in the hip, and the big swamp was up in the road, there having been a great deal of rain lately, but howsomever, as it was she, Cousin Sally Dillard, my wife mout go. Cousin Sally Dillard then axed me if Mose he moutn't go. I told Cousin Sally Dillard that he was the foreman of the crap, and the crap was smartly in the grass, but as it was she, cousin Sally Dillard, Mose he mout go.

Chops—In the name of common sense, Mr. Harris, what do you mean by that rigmarole?

Witness—Captain Rice, he gin a treat and Cousin Sally Dillard, she came over to my house and axed me if my wife she moutn't go, and I told Cousin Sally Dillard—

Chops—Stop, sir, if you please; we don't want to hear about your Sally Dillard or your wife, tell us about the fight at Rice's.

Witness—Well, I will, if you will let me.

Chops—Well, sir, go on.

Witness—Well, sir, Captain Rice, he gin a treat, and Cousin Sally Dillard she came over to my house and axed me if my wife she moutn't go—

Chops—There it is again. Witness, please to stop.

Witness—Well, sir, what do you want?

Chops—We want to know about the fight, and you must stop this impertinent story. Do you know anything about the matter before the court?

Witness—To be sure I do.

Chops—Well, go on then and tell it and nothing else.

Witness—Well, Captain Rice, he gin a treat—

Chops—This is intolerable. May it please the court, I move that the witness be committed for contempt. He seems to be trifling with the court.

Court—Witness, you are before a court of justice, and unless you behave yourself in a more becoming manner you will be sent to jail; so begin and tell me what you know about the fight at Rice's.

Witness—Well, gentlemen, Captain Rice, he gin a treat, and Cousin Sally Dillard—

Court (after deliberating)—Mr. Attorney, the court is of the opinion that we may save time by letting the witness go on in his own way. Proceed, Mr. Harris, with your story, but stick to the point.

Witness—Yes, gentlemen. Well, Captain Rice he gin a treat, and Cousin Sally Dillard came over to our house and axed me if my wife she moutn't go. I told cousin Sally Dillard that my wife she was poorly, being as how she had the rheumatics in her hip, and the swamp was up; howsomever, as it was she, cousin Sally Dillard, my wife she mout go. Cousin Sally Dillard then axed me if Mose he moutn't go. I told cousin Sally Dillard that he was foreman of the crap, and the crap was smartly in the grass, but as it was she, cousin Sally Dillard, Mose he mout go. So they goes on together, Mose, my wife, and Cousin Sally Dillard, and they comes to the big swamp, and it was up, as I was telling you; but being as how there was a log across the big swamp, cousin Sally Dillard and Mose, like genteel folks, walked the log, but my wife, like a darned fool, histed her petticoats and walked through.

Chops—Heaven and earth, this is too bad—but go on.

Witness—Well, that's all I know about the fight.

A Western musical critic thus speaks of a prima donna: "She had, and we suppose still retains, a magnificent voice for a fog whistle. Its compass was perfectly surprising. She would shake the chandelier with a wild whoop that made every man instinctively feel for his scalp, and followed it up with a roar that would shame a bassoon."

In Bedford county, Pa., recently, a spigot worked out of a whisky barrel during the night, and several gallons of the liquor ran out on the floor of the cellar where the barrels were stored. The following morning a number of rats were found lying in the liquor in a complete state of intoxication.

The Assessment Law.

One of the first problems that came before State Auditor Wildman, upon assuming the duties of his office, was that of equalizing taxation throughout the different parts of the State. As it has been the practice of County Assessors from time immemorial to place an incorrect on undervaluation upon all property it has been an exceedingly difficult matter to get at the true valuation of the property in the State. It became apparent that some measures would have to be adopted whereby the actual valuation could be ascertained before any further steps could be taken to remedy the evil. Circulars were therefore sent to the County Auditors about the first of April requesting them to instruct the assessors to assess taxes upon property at as near its full value as possible, instead of one-third or one-half as heretofore, and they were furthermore instructed to report progress before the 15 inst. In pursuance of this request about thirty County Auditors have reported to the State Auditor. These communications are all of a very encouraging nature, and from them it would seem that assessors, property-holders and railroads will do the best that is in their power to follow the requirements of the law to the letter, and will render all the assistance possible to secure the desired end. From the information that has thus far been received Mr. Wildman estimates that the valuation of the property as shown by the State duplicate for the present fiscal year will reach a figure nearly if not quite double that of any previous year. The wisdom of this course is apparent to all, for as soon as it is in full operation and its results fully known it will have the effect of reducing the per cent of taxation which, while not materially altering the actual amount to be paid, will enable the authorities to fix upon an equitable rate of taxation to which end the Auditor is laboring industriously.—Ind. Journal.

The Religous World—Faith vs Reason

Mankind is divided into three great divisions on the subject of religion. They are:

1. Those whose ideas on the subject are based upon Faith.
2. Those who rely upon human reason.
3. Those who combine a mixture of the two in their belief and opinions,

Faith we should define as "the evidence of things unseen." The advocates of Reason sneer at Faith, and ask what there can be of value that is not based upon the former, How can men believe that which is opposed to the evidences of their reason revolts? The reply of the votaries of Faith is that, as human reason if bounded within a narrow compass—that, as it is fallible and earthly, it affords not safe ground to solve the great problem and mysteries of existence, which are entirely beyond all earthly ken. They claim that a religion which can be perfectly comprehended by human reason bears upon its face the marks that it is man-made, and, therefore, must be false. The great doctrines of the Bible rest upon faith. Who can understand the mysteries of the Trinity? Who can with reason reconcile the inconsistencies of Foreordination and Free-Will—a Providence who knew the destiny of every human being before he was created, and yet gave man the entire responsibility for each and all of his acts? Who by the light of reason, understands the justice by which the whole race of Adam was made to suffer for his fault, and eternal punishment decreed for the sins of a few brief and fleeting moments of time? Reason cannot grapple with these questions, yet that affords no evidence that may not all be true. Man knows that he is on the earth. How he came here his reason does not tell him. If it is defective in regard to his own origin, how much more so must it be with that infinity of creation that lies beyond it. Every thing seems to indicate design and a systematic plan. There are no accidents—scarcely any material exceptions in nature. As between the adherents of Faith and Reason exclusively, have not the former the best of the argument?

We have spoken of two of the religious schools. What of the third, which combines a mixture of Faith with reason? This stands on a delicate ground like all those who favor compromise in this world. It is frequently asked why it accepts some tenets as opposed to Reason, and yet favors others that must rest entirely upon Fatih for their belief. Like all other middle parties it is troubeled with schism, dissension and division. Some of its believers are constantly going over to Reason, while others are inclined toward Faith. But yet it argues with spirit: that to follow a blind Faith is to run the danger of being governed by superstition and imposture and, that therefore, to a certain extent, they must be under the dominion of Reason.

The President Memorialized.

We find the following communication in our local to-day:

CINCINNATI, April 23, 1873.

"To President Grant: Sir Having heard with deep regret of the awful massacre of nearly one hundred colored men at Colfax, Grant Parish, Louisiana we pray that you will cause the perpatrators of this bloody crime to be hunted down to the last man, and that swift justice may be dealt out to the murderers of those men, who were in discharge of their duty in sustaining your Government. The blood of those men cries out from the ground for satisfaction. Justice and the maintainance of a righteos Government demand it.

"Done by the order of the Union Babtist Sunday-school, April 20, 1873.

"Rev, J. H. Magie pastor,
"Rev. Joseph Emery, Sup't,
"Fountain Lewis, Esq..
"Committee."

We don't think the men of peace, whose names are signed to the above know any thing about the circumstances of the case in which they call for such vigorous action. Suppose that a mob in this city should proceed to our Court-house and expel from it all the county officials and suspend all operations of the the county government? suppose that, in addition, they should perpetrate all sorts of outrages upon the people, and then when the Sheriff with his posse, should attempt to regain possession of the rightful public property, and replace the officials unlawfully deprived of their offices, and a flag of truce from him should be fired upon by the mob after they themselves had invited it—what would we think of such conduct? If all the mob were killed in the recontre that would natureally follow, who would sympathize with them? This was the case in Grant Parish, Louisiana. The nergoes were the aggressors. They were nothing more or less than outlaws. We do not know that the fact that they were negroes, which is conspicuously called attention to by these Christian warriors and Reverends, constitutes a reason why they should be allowed to rob, mob, plunder and murder with impunity. The Pastor and Superintendent of the "Union Babtist Sunday-school" had better attend to their spiritual business, and leave the temporal authority to manage temporal affairs.—Cin. Enquirer.

Prof Fowlers Greatest Work.

The National Publishing Company, of Cincinnat have just issued a very important work, by Pro O. S. Fowler, on Manhood, Womanhood, and the Mutual Interrelations; Love, its laws, powers, & 'Know thyself!' was the profound injunction i the ancient sage, and it is the neglect to compo with this precept which causes nearly all the misery and sickness of the world. Husbands and wines constantly feel the need of more light on the subject of their relations to each other, especially concerning the great duty for which marriage was instituted—the begetting and rearing of a family.

It is for the purpose of diffusing this knowledg hat Prof. Fowler has given to the world this work textual Science,'which is mainly an explanation f the laws which govern the sexes in their relation to each other.

His book is pure and elevated in its style and ideas. It touches upon the questions and discusses them thoroughly, in which every married person is interested The terrible proctice of 'regulating the size of the families,' which prevails in many parts of our country, is shown in its true light, and we commend the chapters concerning it to every husband and wife.

All friends of morality and purity in social life will hail the event of Prof. Fowler's book with delight. Young men who value their domestic happiness, should not fail to read his remarks on the subject of selecting a wife, as the information it contains is beyond value.

The low price at which it is issued brings it within the reach of all. It is sold by subscription only and Mr. GEO. BITTINGER, Spencerville, Ind., who is the authorized agent for this section, is now canvassing for it.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

A country minister of "limited capacity" recently married for a second wife a widow of some property. Being an ardent servant of mammon, a former neighbor asked him if he did not do well by the second marriage. "Oh, Yes, indeed," he said, with animation; and then as an expression of reverent awe stole into his face he added, "And what is very remarkable, the clothes of my wife first husband just fit me.

An old bachelor said; "There's a darned sight more jewelry worn now-a days than when I was young. But there's one piece that I always admired that I don't often see now." "What is that? asked a lady. "A thimble," was the reply. He was regarded with contempt and scorn by every lady in the room for the rest of the evening.

The Deacon's Swill barrel.

Just outside os the house stood [illegible] deacon, tugging oway at a big lump of ice in the swill barrel:

"Bad business, that," said, I, resting my hands on my sides.

"Not half so bad as it might 'a been," was the reply, as he lifted the cake of ice out by a stick that had frozen up in the swill.

"Many an' many a bar'l has busted for me that wouldn't if this knowledge had only come to me sooner," said he. "You see when this cold snap came on suddenly, I thought of the swill bar'l away in the night, and I said, 'Well it can't be helped now.' It happened however, that the stick I stir with was left poked down in the swill, and that was all that saved it. A bar'l or a tub or a pail may freeze up solid, and if a stick has been put down in the water, the vessel can't bust But it took me a good while to find it out—never knew it till last winter; lived seventy years before I knew it,' and his eyes twinkled knowingly.

'Why, that's on the same plan,' said I, 'of putting a spoon in a glass jar when you are canning fruit; if you do that, the jar won't break.'

'Same philosophy. exactly,' said he, as he gave the ball of ice a kick and sent it rolling off down the hill.

WHAT ARE WE COMING TO.

Civil War rages in Louisiana! The Modoc Indians are slaughtering our troops, and defying the power of the Government! Anarchy and corruption prevails in the New York Custom House! Business paralyzed in consequence of the black-mailing Official! Our Nation disgraced in the eyes of the world! Our Commissioners carry their corruption to Vienna, and flaunt our disgrace in the face of the whole world! Chief Justice Chase, the great and pure Statesman, lying dead from over work! The whole country feverish and unsettled, business stagnant—the farmers of the great west suffering from the effects of monoply and misrule as no people ever suffered before! And what do we behold? The sickening spectacle of the President of the United States—with his salary squal to any lordly potentate, made so by his own efforts and made a law by his own hand—this President deadheaded around the country—taking his ease and pleasure—and when he comes to Chicago,—a municipal law suspended for the very purpose of giving this President an opportunity of driving horses faste than eight miles an hour! What statemanship! What a lover of law! What damming disgrace has this man yet in store for the people of the United States? We have had Presidents before who have worked themselves to death on one-quarter the salary that our beloved President does! O, or one hour of Old Hickory's rule! What will the people do?

The New York Tribune says the close of the Pennsylvania Legislature was characterized by the most undignified and disgraceful proceeding. The Speaker of the House was literally driven out of the chair, during the night session before adjournment, by a fusilade of cigar boxes, bibles, paper balls, etc. In an unguarded moment, one of the Roosters members, by way of ridiculing the reform movement made so earnstly by Senator McClure, moved that the lone Liberal-Reform Senator be waited on by a committee to request him to address the House on the issues of Reform. The motion amid the yells of derisive applause, and the committee appeared before the Senate and stated their mission. Senator McClure promptly started followed by the whole Senate and the crowd of loiterers about the the closing session, and was greeted in the House with applause, yells, and, groans, and a storm of paper missiles. He was conducted to the Speaker's chair and presented to the House Speaker Elliot, when the tumult instantly ceased, and he turned the tables upon the Ring House in the following bungent speech. Badly as the Ring men were caught, they made no demonstrations of disrespect, and stood the merciless fire they had provoked with philogophy. The Senator said:

Mr. Speakers and Commoners of the State of Pennsylvania: I thank you for the distinction you have conferred upon me by your invitation to address you on the subject of reform. I know of no other body of men, either of the present or past, that needs instruction on the necessity of both public and private morality so much as the House of Representativas of this State now before me [laughter], or that has so broadly and deeply experimented in the line of individuals and offical profligacy. [Laughter and applause.] I am not surprised, however, that it is so when I consider that of the members serving in this House from my own immediate locality, many were not even nominated, and few if any. were ever elected. [Shouts of laughter.] I sent you reform bills which cost me many days of anxious thought [illegible] to perfect, but you danced not when I piped to you, neither did you weep responsive to my mourning over the degenracy of the politic. I must admit, however, that you were prompt executioners, for every bill that looked toward reform was negative with a yell as fast as rules would allow. But in political, as often in moral and religious circles, the darkest hour is just before the dawn of day, and it is gratifying that, after you have consummated all the harm you can possibly inflict upon the State, you have, by a unanimous resolution, called for a confessor. It was well to pause thus, just for the sake of novelty or reference, so that when the storms breaks you can point to this becoming act of contribution for the wrongs of your constituents and to the Commonwealth. [Applause and sarcastic shouts.] Most of you who have for three months been serving in places to which other persons have been elected by the people, have discounted the retributive wave of popu- reprobation bp creating offices by legislative enactments to which you hope to retire; and those unprovided for hope to be placed on the indefinite pay roll of the pasters and folders of the House, in accordance with the prevavalent custom here to pension decayed statesmen. (Shouts of laughter.)—That you seek Liberal counsels to have good seed sown in the chaos of virtue that surrounds you is a hopeful sign of the times, and if you do not in cheao more than thirty thousand in Philadelphia next fall, the places that know you now will know most of you no more forever. (Laughter.) But I turn to the faint silver lining on thd deep cloud of your record. One act of this House gladdened the hearts of the whole people of the State, and reinspired hope throughout the lengte and breadth of the Commonwealth. I refer to your vote in the midst of disorder, that at a Philadelphia fire would be called a riot, on Monday evening last, fixing an early day for final adjournment. (Laughter and applause.) I have heard of no citizen of the State who did not heartily approve of that act. Laughter) I am happy to point to it as the oasis in the withered desert that you have made about you, and to record you credit for it, Hoping gentlemen, if I may be pardoned for the use of term that the length of your official lives may correspond with the measure of your virtues, and that you will be succeeded by petter men than yourselves, I bid you good night.

The Senator then retired amid roaring applause and a liberal shower of paper balls.

The Rhode Island Locomotive Works are building a locomotive which they claim will run a mile in forty seconds.

"All Steal."

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, relates the following incident showing what Oakes Ames thought of the Congressional salary grab: Oakes Ames said the wittiest thing to Mr. Niblack, of Indiana, that has been said on this subject. After voting for the previous question Mr. Niblack said, as he passed him, just after voting yes;

"So Ames, you go for the increase?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Ames "it don't hurt me you know. I have nothing to lose, but, confidentialy, this is a bigger steal than Credit Mobelier."

"How so?" asked Niblack.

"Well, the men who had that did pay a little something for it, but this is all steal."

A Ghastly Freshet.

[From the Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette.]

From Cornelius Brown, member of the House from this county, we have the following particulars concerning the destruction by water of the Perkings graveyard:

The cemetry was opened in 1844, at which time it was owned by Constantine Perkings, who died during the war, and sixteen miles below Little Rock on the Arkansas river. The river was very high on Friday of last week, at which time the yard commenced caving into the river, exposing to view mouldy coffins, and in some instances their contents. The water kept rising until the cemetry was swept completely away, and about five hundred coffins swept into the river. It is thought they will be recovered, as the graveyard is situated in what is known as the "Horse Shoe," between the river and the lake, where the waters form an eddy. When the graveyard was opened it was situated about 900 yards from the river, but each succeeding rise has swept more and more of the pan away, until the last flood came which destroyed every vestige of the hallowed spot wherein were the loved remains of many citizens. The last body was washed into the river Sunday, at which time [illegible] of the neighborhood were summoned out by a justice of the peace to rescue the bodies from the river, and at which time about thirty-five were recovered. It is thought that all the bodies will be rescued, except those who have laid in the earth until they have decayed. Among those of Seely Pillow, a woman who died six weeks ago, and Shade Shaley, a man who had been dead about a year. The wildest excitement prevailed in the vicinity of the destroyed cemetry, as the men and women are searching in muddy waters of the Arkansas for the remains of their dear frends.

The Precise Man.

The precise man sometimes parts his hair in the middle, and when he does, he counts the hairs on each side of his head, and splits some if necessary, the make the thing end even.

If he is a married man, everything must be just so—if he is a bachelor it must be more so.

He always sets a hen on 12 eggs and has a great horror for odd numbers.

He gets up at just such a time in the morning and goes to bed at just such a time of night, and would as soon think or taking a dose of strychnine for the hiccoughs as to cut off a dog's tail when the moon was in the last quarter.

The precise man has got a few brains and they are as well broke as a scatter dog's, for he seldom has a false point about him.

He is a bundle of facts and figures and is as handy in the neighborhood as a pair of platform scales or a ready reckoner

He is invariably an honest man, but often as much from pride as from principal.

He loves his children, if he has any and would rather have them perfect in the multiplication table then in the Iliad of Homer.

His wife is soon broke to act and think as he does, and she is known far and near for the excellence of her soft soaps.

A few years ago, a gentleman who had lost his nose was invited to tea. "My dear" said the good lady of the house to her little daughter, "I want you to be very particular and to make no remarks about Mr. Jenkens' nose," Gathered around the table, everything was going well; the child peeped about looked rather puzzled, and at last startled the table; "Ma, why did you tell me to say nothing about Mr. Jenkens' nose? He hasn't got any!"

Learn to say 'no.' No necessity of snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully.

THE SPINNING WHEEL.

BY WILLARD B. COULTER.

Buzzing and whirling with merry sound,
Buzzing loudly as the wheels went 'round,
The leathern band slipped o'er its circular track,
From wheel to wheel with a clickety-clack!
All keeping time to the musical clank
Of the up and down stroke of the treadle-crank—
As grandmother moved it with steady beat
Hour by hour with her slippered feet,
And drawing out with her agile hand
The yarn from the spindle, strand by strand.

While, soft and beautiful as the snow
Dropped from the clouds to the earth below,
Pure and bright as though spotless of sin,
Was the carded wool she used to spin;
And each moment, as the spindle flew,
The threads were twisted and the white skein grew,
Smoothly and evenly, spun with care,
Ready for knitting and future wear.

As grandmother turned the wheels, anon,
What were her eyes resting upon?
For they gazed only at empty space—
But the keen expression on her face
Evinced that her mind was occupied
With something more than the wheel beside—
Thoughts, perhaps, of her absent dead,
Who encircled her hearth in the years now fled.

Children and friends that on earth were fond,
One by one had departed beyond—
The spirit of Death one morning came chill,
And grandfather too grew cold and still;
In the church-yard, 'neath the willow's shade,
His form at rest was mournfully laid;
Yet grandmother bemoaned not her fate,
But patiently waited the opening gate.

* * * * * * *

The wheel still turned and the spindle whirled,
But grandmother's thoughts were beyond the world,
And often that voice caught her ear,
None but grandmother herself could hear,
"Why, do you not hear those words?" asked she;
"Grandfather is here singing to me—
The very hymns we were wont to sing
In family prayer and worshiping."

Sometimes her eyes would kindle with light,
(For grandmother was blest with second sight)
"He is now standing beside my chair—
Look, he is smiling so kindly there!"
And she would point the place with her trembling hand,
But we were too mortal to understand;
Buzz and hum! the wheels would run,
Slowly the carded wool was spun.

* * * * * * *

But the spinning-wheel has seen its days,
Hid in the attic from people's gaze;
Covered with dust, as the years creep by,
It is going to ruin silently;
The spindle turns on its spool no more,
And the straps are worn that played of yore,
Treadle and crank alike are dumb,
With the creaking wheel and busy hum.

Its life is gone with the buzz and whirr,
And it is among the things that were;
The feet that once the treadle propelled,
The hands that once the white wool held,
That guided the swift revolving thread,
And the life that gave the power are dead;
But grandmother's spirit is only gone,
And beyond the grave, in joy, lives on—
No grief oppresses, no anxious care,
Nor burdens of sorrow or pain to bear.

The skein is finished, the life is spun,
The wheels are stopped, and her work is done.

THE HIGHWAYMAN'S BRIDAL.

Mine were the days for gallant robbers, whom fine clothes, high bearing, reckless hardihood and (frequently) high birth took away from the superficial observer much of the darkness of crime actually surrounding their deeds and lives. You were divested of your rings and purses, often, with a demeanor so polished that really it resembled paying a toll to good manners more than submitting to a highway robbery—a robbery it is true, yet still it was more soothing to the feelings at the time than being knocked down with the butt end of a pistol, or bullied as well as plundered. Fashion, too, capricious in this as all else, affected some knights of the road above all others, and fine ladies interested themselves amazingly about deeds of highwaymen, conspicuous for handsome persons or brave conduct, or rather daring villainy. The fair dames were also much concerned in their heroes' final incarcerations and execution at the fatal tree of Tyburn. But highwaymen had, as everybody knows, been still more popular in the preceding reign; yet, ever and anon, as the profession seemed to be on the verge of decay, and likely to dwindle down into mere common theft and murder, some new candidate was sure to start up and revive the dying embers of the road chivalry.

One in particular was notorious enough in his brief day, for most of the qualities I have described, as sometimes attributes of these knights of the road. He was well connected, too, his uncle being clergyman in a high-church appointment. His manner elegant and courtly, his person faultless, and he was rash in an extraordinary degree. Mingling freely in fashionable society in his real name, his deeds of robbery were the talk of the town under his assumed one. His proper designation was Richard Mowbray—that belonging to the road; his whole source of revenge was Capt. De Montmorency—a patronymic high-sounding enough. I do not mean, however, that any suspected the man of fashion and the highwayman to be one and the same person; that was never known till the event which I am going to relate took place.

Richard Mowbray had spent his own small patrimony years before the period at which this story commences, in the pleasures of the town. It had melted into ricittos, play-houses, faro, horse-flesh and hazard. He had exhausted the kindness and forbearance of his relations, from whom he had borrowed and begged till borrowing and begging had become impracticable. He had known most extremes of life; and, moreover, when debts and poverty stared him in the face, knew not one useful art by which he could support or pay dividends to his creditors. What was to be done? He eluded a jail as long as he could, and one eventful night, while riding on horseback and meditating gloomily on his evil fortune, he met—covered by the darkness from all discovery—a traveler well mounted—plethoric—ladened with money and bags, and bearing likewise the burden of excessive fear.

It was a sudden thought, acted upon as suddenly. Resistance was not dreamed of. Mowbray made off with his booty, considerable enough to repair his exhausted finances, and pay his most pressing creditors. It was literally robbing Peter to pay Paul. And so by night, under the shelter of its darkness, did the ruined gentleman turn highwayman. People who knew his circumstances whispered their suspicions when it became known that Richard Mowbray had paid his debts, and that he himself had made more than his customary appearance. Now his person was clad in the newest braveries of the day, and in his double character many a conquest did he make, for he disburthened ladies of their jewels and purses in so fine a manner that the defrauded fair ones forgot their losses in admiration of the charming despoiler, and Richard, in both his phases, drank deep draughts of pleasure, till he drained the Circean cup to its veriest dregs. Just as even pleasure becomes wearisome, when festive and high-bred delights palled on his sated passions, and the lower extremes of licentiousness and hard drinking, roughing and fighting, diversified by the keen excitement and threats of danger which distinguished his predatory existence began to satiate, a new light broke on the feverish atmosphere of life. He loved.

Yes! Richard Mowbray, the ruined patrician—De Montmorency, the gallant highwayman, who had hitherto resisted every good or civil influence, pure or earth stained, offers to its votaries, succumbed to the simple charms of a young, unlearned and unambitious girl—so youthful that even her tastes and habits, childish as they were, could scarcely be more so than suited to her years. Flavia Hardcourt had just attained her sixteenth year, had never been to a boarding school, and loved nothing so much, even her birds and pet rabbits, as her dear old father, an honest country gentleman and a worthy magistrate. Flavia had never been to London, for Mr. Hardcourt resided at Aveling, a retired village about twenty miles from the metropolis. Barring hard drinking and fox hunting, the old gentleman himself on his side took pleasure only in the pretty, gentle girl, who, from the hour of her birth, which event terminated her mother's existence, had made her his constant companion. And it was to this simple wild-flower that the gay man of the world, haughty, reckless, unprincipled, impudent, irreligious and rash, presumed to lift his eyes and elevate his heart; and, oh! strange yet to this being, the moral antipodes of her pure self, did Flavia Hardcourt surrender her youthful, modest, inestimable self-love. It must have been her very childishness and purity that attracted the desperate robber, the hard-hearted libertine, now about to commit his worst and most inexcusable crime.

As he accidentally met Mr. Hardcourt at a country hunt, had, with others of his companions, been invited by the honest gentleman to a rustic fete in honor of little Flavia's natal day, a day he was wont to observe, remarkable to him as commemorating his greatest misfortune and intensest happiness, and then and there the highwaymen vowed to win that pure bud of innocent freshness and rare fragrance, or perish in the attempt. Mr. Richard Mowbray: unscrupulous De Montmorency, I will relate how you kept your vow.

He haunted Aveling Grange till the chaste young heart, the old father's beloved darling, surrendered itself into the highwayman's keeping. Perhaps Mr. Hardcourt was not altogether best pleased at his dear Flavia's choice, but she was his life, his hope, and he trusted, even when he gave her to a husband, that her love and doting would still be his own. Besides, Mowbray was well connected, boasted of his wealth, whereas a moderate portion of it would be hers. He was received into moderate circles, in which the good magistrate never pretended to participate, and what with higher bearing, his handsome person and insinuating tongue, Mr. Hardcourt had irrevocably promised to bestow his treasure into the keeping of the profligate, who numbered himself near enough to have been the father of the girl, whom he testified the utmost impatience to call his wife.

It was during the time that Mr. Mowbray was paying his court to Aveling that the neighborhood began to be alarmed by a series of highway robberies, which men said could not have been perpetrated but by that celebrated knight of the road, Captain de Montmorency. No one could stir after nightfall without an attack, which numbers certainly were not wanting.

"Cudgel me, but we'll have him yet," said old Mr. Hardcourt, "I should glory myself, in going to Tyburn to see the fellow turned. Ah, and I should take my little Flavia to see him go by in a cart with a parson and a nosegay—eh, my little girl?"

"Oh, no, father," said Flavia, "I could not abide; though he is such a daring, wicked man, whose very name makes me actually shrink with fear whenever I hear it—I could never bear to see such a dreadful sight—it would haunt me till the day of my death."

Does the gift of prophecy, involuntary though it may be, lurk within us yet? Sweet Flavia! unsuspecting innocent girl! your lips then pronounced your own doom as irrevocably as though you had been some stern sibyl delivering inscrutable, unquestioned oracles, not a fair child in a girlish frock and sash, your brown hair curling softly over your shoulders, and your soft eyes shining through your blushes.

The betrothed pair were together to visit London.

"But I shall not dare," said the girl as walking together in the fashionable Dutch garden she leaned her head upon her guilty lover's breast—I shall not dare to take such a journey, for fear of the highwayman, De Montmorency."

"Fear not, my sweet Flavia; this breast shall be pierced through ere Montmorency shall cause one fear of thine."

"Richard, sweetest, why do you leave us so early every day? At sunset, I have remarked. These are not London habits. Ah, does any other than poor Flavia attract you? Oh, I must die if it be so. I could not live dear Rich, and know you were false."

"Sweetest and best! my purest love, could any win me from you? Were it a queen, think not I—I—the truth is, Flavia, I have a poor sick friend not far from here. He is poor, ill and I—I—"

"Say no more, dearest. Oh, how much more do I love you every day. How good, how noble thus to sacrifice?" and the blushing girl threw herself into her lover's arms.

And how differently beat those two human hearts—one pregnant with love, goodness, charity and sympathy; and the other rank hypocrisy, dark with unbelief.

They came to town unmolested, may be sure; and strange, because a few days previously a terrible affair had occurred. Old Lord St. Hillary, the relic of the beau garcons of former days, had been robbed and maltreated. Above all, family jewels of immense value had been taken from his person, and on recovering from his wounds and fright, he swore vengeance. He took active measures to fulfill his vow.

The wedding was to take place at an old relation's, Mrs. Dechesne's, and on lagging wings that day at length arrived. The marriage was celebrated, and the happy pair were in the act of being toasted by the father of the bride, when a strange voice was heard below; rude words were upraised, oaths muttered and a rush followed toward the festive saloon. The company rose.

"What is it?" said Mr. Hardcourt.

The door was broken open for an answer. The officers of justice filled the room. Two advanced.

"Come, Captain," said the foremost, "the game is out at last. It's an awkward thing to arrest a gentleman on his wedding, but duty, my noble Captain, duty must be done."

Entranced, frozen beyond resistance or appeal the bridegroom was fettered, and the bride stood with eyes dilating till they seemed about to spring from her head.

"My Richard, what is this?"

"Scoundrels," said Mr. Hardcourt, "release my son."

The men laughed. One of them was examining the neck of Flavia. It contained a diamond in the center worth a ransom. "Where did you get this, miss?" he asked.

Her friends answered, for the stricken girl was inarticulate. "Mr. Mowbray's wedding gift."

"Oh! ho! This is the diamond Lord St. Hillary was so mad about. By your leave," and the gem was removed from the neck it encircled.

She comprehended something terrible. She found her speech—"Whom do you take Mr. Mowbray for?" said she.

"Whom? Why the renowned Captain De Montmorency."

A shriek, so fierce in its agony as to cause the criminal to rebound, burst upon the ears of all present. Insensibility followed; Flavia was removed. So was the bridegroom—to Newgate.

The trial was concluded, justice was appeased, and the robber was doomed. And his innocent and unpolluted victim—

For days her life hung on a thread. But youth and health, in time, closed the gates of death. She recovered. Reviving as if from a dream, she could scarcely believe in the terrible event which, tornado-like, had swept over her. She desired her father to repeat its circumstances.

Weeping, and with his venerable gray hairs whiter with sorrow, Mr. Hardcourt complied. She heard the recital in silence. Presently, clasping her father's hand, "Dear parent—she could utter no more, nor was it necessary. He comprehended her meaning but too well.

"The day after to-morrow," he replied.

"Father, I must be there!"

"Flavia, my dearest daughter!"

"Father, I must be there. Do you remember your jest? Ah, it has come to pass in bitter earnest. I must be there."

Nor would she be pacified; she persisted, and the physician at length urged them to give her her way. It would, he said, be less dangerous than denial.

Near Tyburn seats were erected. Windows and balconies were let out to hire. One of these, the most private, was secured, and on the fatal morning Flavia was taken hither in a close carriage, accompanied by her father and an aged cousin. She shed no tears—heaved not a single sigh, but suffered herself to be led to a window with a strange, immovable quietness.

Some shouts and the swelling murmur of a dense mob reached her ear. The procession was arriving. The gallows were not in sight, but the fatal cart would pass. It came on nearer—more like a triumph than a dismal sight, than a human being hastening on to eternity.

She clenched her hands, and rose up straining her fair white throat to catch a glimpse of the criminal. Yes, there he was, dressed gaily, and the nosegay flaunting on his breast; the dull despair in this heart expressed by his face. As the train passed Flavia's window, by chance he raised his hot blearing eyes; they rested upon his bride, his pure virgin wife. The wretched man uttered a yell of agony, and cast himself down in the bottom of the vehicle. She continued gazing, the smile frozen on her face, her eyes glassy and motionless, fixed.

They never recovered their natural intelligence. Fixed and stony they bore her from the dismal scene. Her old father watched for days by her side, eagerly watching for a ray of light, a token of sense or returning reason. None came. She had been stricken with catalepsy; and it was a blessing when the enchained spirit was released from its frail habitation, when the pure spirit was permitted to take its flight to happier regions. Mr. Hardcourt sank into a state of imbecilty, and soon father and child slept in one grave.

Heirs to $5,000,000.

A letter from from Delhi, N. Y., says:

In 1767 an English family named Howard came to this country and settled in what is now Delaware county, N. Y. They were very genteel, and never lost an opportunity to impress upon the natives that they were descendants of an immensely wealthy family. They had one child, a son named James. The old people died when James had arrived at man's estate. He married here, and became the father of two daughters. He died at a good old age. His daughters married brothers—one Daniel and the other Isaac Williams. One of these daughters had two sons, Joshua and Thomas. Joshua a few years ago went to Warren, Pa., to live.

A few days since these descendants of James Howard were notified officially from England that they had fallen heir to an estate valued at $5,000,000. They are requested to furnish proof of their descent from James Howard, who would be the direct heir if living. The Williamses are actively engaged in getting the necessary depositions and gathering evidence of their identity; and when the chain is complete the oldest brother will sail for England to look after the inheritance. The matter has thrown Delaware county into a fever of excitement.

Biography of the Late Judge Chase.

Salmon Portland Chase was born in Cornish, N. H., January 13, 1808. At the age of 12 his father died, and the boy was sent to Ohio, where his education was for a time superintended by his uncle, Bishop Philander Chase. He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1826. For two or three years he taught a classical school in Washington, studying law meanwhile under William Wirt, and in 1829 was admitted to the bar of the District. The following year he removed to Cincinnati, and ever since then has made that city his home. There he soon acquired a lucrative law practice, and was for some time retained as solicitor for the Cincinnati branch of Nick Biddle's bank. His first public connection with the slavery question was in 1837, when he ably defended a fugitive from the patriarchal institution. In 1846 he was associated with Mr. Seward in the Van Zandt case, in the Supreme Court of the United States, holding then, as before, that there was no power in Congress to legislate for the reclamation of fugitives, and that, in fact, no fugitive could be reclaimed at all unless proved to have escaped from one of the original States. In 1840 Mr. Chase supported Harrison for the Presidency, and in 1843 was one of the leading members of the Liberty party convention held at Buffalo. Four years later he presided in the second national convention of the party, and participated in the nomination of Martin Van Buren as the Free Soil candidate.

In the Ohio Legislature, in the winter of 1848–'9, three or four Free-Soilers held the balance of power, and, uniting for that purpose with the Democratic members, they secured the election of Mr. Chase to the United States Senate. In that body he earnestly opposed the Clay compromise measures of 1850; and in 1854 was foremost in arousing the storm of popular indignation against the Kansas-Nebraska bill and the repeal of the Missouri compromise. Nominated for Governor of Ohio, upon the issues then presented, he was elected in 1855, and was prominently named for the Presidential nomination in the first national convention of the Republican party in 1856. He was re-elected Governor in 1857. In the Chicago convention of 1860 he received 49 votes for the Presidency on the first ballot. Mr. Lincoln called him to the head of the Treasury Department in March of the following year, and he continued in charge of the financial affairs of the Government up to the 30th of June, 1864, conducting the operations of the department with matchless skill throughout that most trying period. In October of the same year he was appointed by President Lincoln to the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, then just made vacant by the death of Roger B. Taney. One of the most notable incidents of his judicial career was the organization of the Senate as an impeachment court (in which he presided) for the trial of President Johnson. In 1868 he narrowly escaped a nomination for the Presidency from the New York Democratic Convention, his sympathies having been quite strongly with that party for some time. Two or three years ago he suffered severely from paralysis, and his life was at one time despaired of. He never fully regained his health, and for a long time took no part in the business of the court. Latterly he had recovered sufficiently to resume the discharge of his official duties, and was supposed to be gradually gaining strength. His death at this time, therefore, was as unexpected as sudden, and will excite a feeling of profound regret throughout the land.

Dipping the Hand Into Molten Iron.

The thing has been done over and over again, observed Dr. Carpenter in a recent lecture—that a man has gone and held his naked hand in such a stream of molten iron, and has done it without the least injury; all that is required being to have his hand moist, and if his hand is dry, he has merely to dip it in water, and he may hold his hand for a certain time in that stream of molten iron without receiving any injury whatever. This was exhibited publicly at a meeting of the British Association at Ipswich, many years ago. It is one of the miracles of science, so to speak; they are perfectly credible to scientific men, because they know the principle upon which it happens, and that principle is familiar to you all, that if you throw a drop of water upon hot iron, the water retains its spherical form, and does not spread upon it and wet it. Vapor is brought to that condition by intense heat, that it forms a sort of film, or atmosphere, between the hand and the hot iron, and for a time that atmosphere is not too hot to be perfectly bearable. There are a number of these miracles of science, which we believe, however incredible at first sight they may appear, because they can be brought to the test of experience and can be at any time reproduced under the necessary conditions. Houdin, the conjurer, in his very interesting autobiography—a little book I would really recommend to any of you who are interested in the study of the workings of the mind. Houdin tells you that he himself tried this experiment, after a good deal of persuasion; and he says that the sensation of immersing his hand in this molten metal was like handling liquid velvet.

The Goslin.

The goslin iz the old goose's yung child. They are yeller all over, and az soft az a bail ov worsted. Their foot iz wove whole, and they kan swim az eazy az a drop ov kastor oil on the water.

They are born annually about the 15th ov May, and never waz known tew die natrally.

If a man should tell me he had saw a goose die a natral and square deth, I wouldn't believe him under oath after that, not even if he swore he had lied about seeing a goose die.

The goose are different in one respekt from the human family, who are sed tew grow weaker, but wizer; whereaz a goslin alwus grows tuffer and more phoolish.

I hav seen a goose that they sed waz 73 years old last June, and he didn't look an hour older than one that waz 17.

The goslin waddles when he walks, and paddles when he swims, but never dives, like a duk, out ov sight in the water, but only changes ends.

The food ov the goslin iz rye, corn, oats, and barley, sweet apples, hasty pudding, and biled cabbage, cooked potatoze, raw meat, and turnips, stale bred, kold hash, and the buckwheat kakes that are left over.

They ain't so partiklar az sum pholks what they eat, and won't git mad and quit if they kan't hav wet toast and lam chops every morning for breakfast.

If i waz a going tew keep boarders, i wouldn't want enny better feeders than an old she goose and 12 goslins. If i kouldn't suit them i should konklude i had mistaken mi kalling.

Roast goslin iz good nourishment, if you kan git enuff ov it, but there aint much waste meat on a goslin, after yu have got rid ov their feathers, and dug them out inside.

I have alwus notissed, when you pass yure plate up for sum more baked goslin, at a hotel, the colored brother cums bak empty with plate, and tells you, "Mister, the roast goslin iz no more."—Josh Billings.

Starch.

The use of starch was first discovered by the Dutch. Previous to and in the early part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, kerchiefs, ruffs and cuffs were worn, made of fine linen brought from Holland which required but little stiffening. With the introduction of cambrics and fabrics containing less body, the necessity for some substance which would give firmness and keep the plaits of the ruff in place led to the use of starch. British gum, or dextrine, which is largely used for stiffening cotton goods, is starch brought to a high degree of heat. The discovery that dextrine could be produced was made by accident. A starch factory was burned down. A workman observed this new substance among the ruins, and being impressed with the idea that it was valuable and would supply a large want, tried it. It proved the new agent he hoped it would be. He communicated his discovery to a friend, and the two proceeded to manufacture the gum. They were successful, and had many applications from manufacturers for the secret, but refused to tell They, however, fell upon evil times. They had no capital, and either guarded their secret ill, or were forced to sell it for an insignificant sum. As in most instances of great discoveries, they reaped but little benefit from it, while others made fortunes.

Novel Horse Protector.

It is a common thing in our cities to protect the heads of draft horses with a bonnet or cushion to keep off the blaze of the sun. But a Dublin projector proposes to extend a similar protection over the entire animal. He makes a frame of wood, whalebone, iron rods, or other flexible, but strong material, and this he places over the horse, a few inches above him, the frame being supported either by attachment to the harness or to the thrills of the vehicle. Upon this frame he stretches a sheet of canvas, oiled cloth, or sheet rubber, which forms a complete pent-house, to keep off either rain or sun. The space between the animal and the covering permits a free passage of air, which aids transpiration and helps to keep the animal cool. The principle, as far as this is concerned, is similar to that of the odd oval-shaped hats worn by men in the East Indies from time immemorial. These comprise a light frame of bamboo slips encircling the forehead and sustaining a covering lined with cork an inch above, and out of contact with the head. The slight rustling of the breeze through one's hair is said to be very refreshing, and quite possibly a horse furnished with one of the new "protectors" may coincide with this experience during hot summer days.

GUILD'S SIGNAL.

[Mr. Bret Harte, in the New York Tribune, celebrates William Guild, the engineer of the train which, on the 19th of April, plunged into Meadow Brook, on the line of the Stonington and Providence railway. It was his custom, as often as he passed his home, to whistle an "all's well" to his wife. He was found, after the disaster, dead, with his hand on the throttle-valve of his engine.]

The low whistles, quaint and clear,
That was the signal the engineer—
That was the signal that Guild, 'tis said—
Gave to his wife at Providence,
As through the sleeping town, and thence,
Out in the night,
On to the light,
Down past the farms, lying white, he sped.

As a husband's greeting, scant no doubt,
Yet to the woman looking out,
Watching and waiting, no serenade,
Love song or midnight roundelay,
Said what that whistle seemed to say:
"To my trust true,
So love to you!
Working or waiting, Good night!" it said.

Brisk young bagmen, tourists fine,
Old commuters along the line,
Brakemen and porters glanced ahead,
Smiled as the signal, sharp, intense,
Pierced through the shadows of Providence—
"Nothing amiss—
Nothing! it is
Only Guild calling his wife," they said.

Summer and winter, the old refrain
Rang o'er the billows of ripening grain,
Pierced through the budding boughs o'erhead,
Flew down the track when the red leaves burned
Like living coals from the engine spurned;
Sang as it flew;
"To our trust true,
First of all I say—good night," it said.

And then, one night, it was heard no more,
From Stonington over Rhode Island shore,
And the folk in Providence smiled and said,
As they turned in their beds, "The engineer
Has once forgotten his midnight cheer."
One only knew,
To his trust true,
Guild lay under his engine dead,

"Why are we led to infer that David and Joshua were intemperate men? Because David, when he went out to meet Goliah on the field of honor, "took a sling," and Joshua, previous to his attack on the walls of Jericho, "took a horn," and gave a regular blow.

This is the way that a delighted Michigan "local" puts it: "Brighter days are coming; just think of it. Blue birds, dandelions, caravans, scissors-grinders, artichokes, violets and hand-organs will soon sing, shine, show, sharpen, scent and shriek that spring has come."

A German physiologist has discovered that tobacco smoking by boys "interferes with the molecular changes coincident with development of tissues, and makes the blood corpuscles oval and irregular on the edge. Any parent can thus ascertain if a boy smokes by merely taking out a handful of his blood corpuscles and observing their edges.—Danbury News.

A hop in your walk is a halt, but a dance upon nothing is a halter. A deal of gold may be a plum, but a dealer of lead is a plumber. You may sometimes put sauce into a cup, but you should always put a cup into a saucer. You're a fool if you're a walker in a pond; you're a philosopher if you ponder in your walk. A cough makes you wheezy in the chest, but of the chest you can easily make a coffer. A steel is what makes a blade sharp, but a blade that makes a sharper is a stealer.

THE NOSE.

'Tis very odd that poets should suppose
There is no poetry about a nose,
When plain as is the nose upon your face,
A noseless face would lack poetic grace.
Noses have sympathy; a lover knows
Noses are always touched when lips are kissing,
And who would care to kiss where nose was missing?
Why, what would be the fragrance of a rose,
And where would be our mortal means of telling
Whether a vile or wholesome odor flows
Around us, if we owned no sense of smelling?
I know a nose, a nose no other knows,
'Neath starry eyes, o'er ruby lips it grows;
Beauty is in its form, and music in its blows.

The Domestic Realm.

Home is the bright realm of which a wife is the sovereign, and her sovereignty will bring honor and love according as her rule over the matters committed to her trust is wisely and beneficently ordered. The realm, limited as it is, demands for its government a much greater and more unintermitting effort of thought than is always given to it; for when a wife, intent upon making the home of her family all that is possible to make it, studies daily how best, by skillful management, she can gratify preferences, please tastes, anticipate wishes, keep out of sight little worries, twine privations with decoration of love, and lift off for awhile burdens of care, all of which appeal to her for thoughtful and graceful intervention, she seldom fails of securing the reward which she most dearly prizes.

William Schwartz, of Hillsboro, O., has just drawn $298 from the Government for his share of the $100,000 reward offered for the capture of Jeff. Davis.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Oiling Harness.

Harness should never be used over six months without oiling. Pure neatsfoot oil is the best; goose oil is good; liver or tanner's oil is useful to soften, while [illegible] and keep out water. The addition of beeswax to tallow would have a tendency to harden the leather and keep out water, and a further addition of a little lampblack would improve its appearance. Neatsfoot oil, as sold, is usually adulterated. A better article can be made by chopping up the feet of cattle and boiling them freely; cover all with water, and when cold skim off the oil and cleanse it. A pint to a set of feet is costly, but it is valuable. Take the harness apart, or unbuckle it as much as convenient, and put it into the soapsuds of the last washing, giving it a good soaking, then take it out upon a bench of the proper height for convenience, and remove all the dirt and gummy substance with the assistance of a stiff brush and the soap-suds. By this time the water has dried from the surface, and then apply the oil and a little lampblack mixed, with a common paint brush, and dry in the shade; if frozen all the better. When dry wipe off with a cloth and put together. A harness treated in this manner will last twice as long as it will without proper oiling and care. The more leather is neglected the darker it will become, inwardly, and the darker the less life remains, and the less good will oil do when applied to recuperate it.

Raising Potatoes.

The Germantown Telegraph says: We believe that as a rule there is no better way to grow a potato than to take piece of worn-out sod land, and after putting a good dressing half-rotten stable manure, plow it down over the potato sets about three or four inches deep—the sets being about eighteen or twenty inches apart, and the rows about thirty inches. As for the size of the sets we hardly think this of so much consequence as the condition of the soil. It is the fitness in this respect which does the business, for after the plant has once left the parent root it depends wholly on the soil for its food. Perhaps one large piece is better than a small whole potato, as there will be a less number of sprouts; but even this is in a measure theoretical, as many persons protest they have had just as good crops from small potatoes as cut pieces of larger ones, in spite of the supposed objection to the sprout.

Oats as Manure.

A Kentucky farmer writes: I have seen frequent inquiries how to reclaim old and worn lands. A quick and cheap plan is to sow the land in oats as early as you can in the spring, as soon as ripe plow under, keep off all stock and you will have a tremendous fall growth of oats; plow them under in October, or, if South, the first of November, then sow rye, graze in the spring and feed down; when ripe, plow under, and you will see one of the finest rye fields you ever saw; or, if you wish, sow clover on the rye the first spring; it is very effectual and cheap. I saw the above tried in Tennessee when I was a boy; the land was so worn that the oats did not exceed knee-high; they were plowed under when ripe and again in November. The land was planted in corn the next year and made a large yield; it was before the days of clover. I have tried it repeatedly since with good success.

Hog Cholera.

So many cures for hog cholera have been published, and still the fatal disease continues to devastate whole neighborhoods, that we are backward in offering anything new. The Rural World, published in a region where the disease is prevalent, says one of the largest hog raisers in Missouri has never lost any, when his neighbors have lost all. He gives them salt just as he does other stock. In cooking food for hogs—which he does in a large wooden boiler holding thirty or forty bushels—he has all the coals and ashes thrown in the boiler and boiled with the food. He sometimes puts in salt and sulphur. He likewise burns charcoal for them, and they eat it as freely as they do corn. He also has movable sheds for his hogs and keeps them sheltered from the cold and storms.

Spurious Butter.

There are persons traveling through the country selling receipts for making one pound of butter out of one pint of milk. The following is said to be about the receipt they give: "4 ounces pulverized alum, ½ ounce pulverized gum-arabic, 50 grains pepsin; mix well and preserve in a bottle. One pint of good milk requires only one-third of a teaspoonful of this powder. This is put in with the yolk of one fresh egg for every pint of milk, and then it is churned." With this people are humbugged. The alum will turn the milk to curd, which, with the gum-arabic and the egg, will form a mass of something which they call butter. Blessed, sweet butter, what foul concoctions are palmed off in thy name!—Des Moines Register.

To Break Hens from Setting.

Mr. H. C. P., in the Country Gentleman, recommends tying a string around the hen's neck, not tight enough to choke her, but so it will not slip over the head. The string should be about four feet long. Tie the other end to a stake, and then let the hen flop around. He says that one day will cure them, and that in a few days they will go to laying again.

To Prevent Silver from Tarnishing.

Warm the articles and paint them over with a solution of colodion in alcohol, using a wide, soft brush for the purpose. A silversmith in Munich says that goods protected in this way have been exposed in his window more than a year, and are as bright as ever, while others, unprotected, become perfectly black in a few months.

Codfish.

To cook confish so as to make it really delicate and agreeable, break it into small pieces, soak it three or four hours in cold water, and then drain is off. Then put it on the fire, with the addition of milk, butter, pepper, and a chopped boiled egg. As soon as it scalds it is ready for the table.

TO WIN a wager of one thousand guineas, an English manufacturer lately accomplished the following remarkable feat in textile manufacture: Two sheep were brought to the factory at five o'clock in the morning; here they were shorn, the wool scoured, spun and woven, and the cloth scoured, dyed, pressed and finished, at four o'clock p. m. The cloth was then handed to tailors, and at twenty minutes before nine o'clock p. m. a coat was made, as the wager required.

SIR BARTLE FRERE, who was sent to Zanzibar by the British Government on the strength of Dr. Livingstone's representations concerning the slave-trade, has reported matters quite as bad as was expected, but has utterly failed in his attempt to effect treaty stipulations with the Sultan. It is reported that negotiations proceeded smoothly until a new French consul, presumably with fresh instructions from Versailles, came upon the scene. All the great powers, save France, have agreed that the African slave-trade shall be regarded as piracy, and have conceded to one another a conditional right of search. France holds back as yet from such an agreement, and her flag at present covers a large share of the trade.

STATE purchase of railways was reported against by an English Royal Commission in 1867, when railway property had gone down very low. Eminent English authorities are now reported as advising that it is too late to think of purchasing on good terms. The system of 15,000 miles has cost $2,750,000,000. It is estimated that the present rates of profit, with a fair allowance of prospective rise in value, would fix the cost of State purchase of the railways of England, Scotland and Ireland, at $3,200,000,000. The annual net receipts now reach about $130,000,000. It is calculated that the Government could meet the interest on the purchase, borrowing at 3½ and 4, with $122,000,000, and thus have a small surplus. But political and social perplexities are feared if once the State undertakes to be responsible for the fair running of all lines.

The Sandwich Islands.

In 1832 the full-blooded natives of the Sandwich Islands numbered about 130,000. In 1872, forty years later, their number was only 49,044. The decline is still going on, but the percentrge of decrease has not been quite as large during the last few years as a few decades ago. During the six years preceding 1872 the total native population fell from 56,897 to 51,131. The decrease was mainly among the full-bloods, the number of half-castes being lessened only 847. During the same period the foreign population increased from 4,194 to 5,360. It is pessible that the next decade may show a further check to the fearful malady which is decimating the islanders, for their morals have greatly improved of late years, but it is hardly probable, and, at a day which some of our readers may live to see, the Kanakas, if not extinct, will be reduced to a mere handful.—Cincinnati Gazette.

OHIO RAILROAD LAW.—A new railroad law recently passed by the Ohio Legislature prohibits absolutely the lease of one competing road with another; provides that the assent of two-thirds of the stockholders shall be required to make a valid lease of the connecting road which does not compete; that the rental shall not be less than the net earnings of the road for the preceding fiscal year; that any stockholder objecting to a lease shall have the right within sixty days to demand pay for his stock at a price not below the average for the previous six months, and that the lessee of a road shall give undoubted security for the performance of the terms of the lease. This law protects the rights of the minority of the stockholders in any railroad corporation and at the same time guards against the creation of monopolies.

THE Northern Pacific railroad surveying expedition for 1873 is organizing for work, and will leave St. Paul early in June. The surveyors will be accompanied by an escort of over 3,000 Government troops, cavalry, infantry and artillery, to protect them from the Indians. Manifest Absurdities.

Is there any good reason why the dictates of common sense should be disregarded in medical practice? Surely not. Yet how literally they are sometimes set at naught in the treatment of dyspepsia, liver complaint, constipation, nervous prostration and general debility. How often are powerful purgatives, emetics and salivants given in cases of indigestion, bilious colic and costiveness, when the disease has already robbed the patient of strength he needs to combat with the attack. The absurdity of giving debilitating medicines to sick people who are too weak already, is so manifest, that it is astonishing how any sane man can believe in such practice. The rational course under such circumstances is to administer a tonic and regulating medicine, and the experience of a quarter of a century has proved that Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the most wholesome and efficient preparation of this class to be found in the medical repository. It is, however, something more than an invigorant and a regulator. Its properties as an aperient and anti-bilious agent; its vitalizing and purifying effect upon the blood; its utility when given as an anodyne, instead of laudanum, or chloral, or digitalis, or some other stupefying narcotic; its tranquilizing tendency in spasmodic affections, and its palatibility, as contrasted with the sickening pills and potions of the pharmacopœia, certainly entitle Hostetter's Bitters to be called the most comprehensive remedy in existence.

Dr. Cox's Hive (Croup) Syrup has been known and used by the medical profession over 100 years, and as a remedy for Colds and Coughs has an older and better reputation than any other Cough medicine ever offered to the public. It is known as the Compound Syrup of Squills, and a formula may be found in every medical dispensatory.
Dr. Ransom's Hive Syrup and Tolu, in addition to the ingredients for Cox's Hive Syrup, contains Balsam of Tolu, decoction of Skunk Cabbage Root and Lobelia, a combination that must commend it to every one as a superior remedy for Croup, Whooping Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs and Colds, indeed for all affections of the Throat and Lungs where a Cough Medicine is necessary.
This Syrup is Carefully Prepared under the personal direction of a regular Physician of over twenty years' practice, whose signature is attached to the directions on the bottle.
Its taste is very pleasant and children like it.
Every family should keep it as a ready remedy for Croup, Colds, etc., among the children.
D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Propr's, Buffalo, N. Y.

DR. J. R. MILLER'S UNIVERSAL
MAGNETIC BALM.
It cures as if by MAGNETIC INFLUENCE, Neuralgia and all pain, and is therefore very properly termed "Magnetic Balm." It is purely a vegetable preparation. It has no equal as a remedy for Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic and all Bowel Complaints.
Its timely use will cure Colds, Croup, Diphtheria, Quinsy, and all Throat affections.
When properly used, Fever and Ague, and other complaints incident to our western and southern climates, are easily broken up.
Nervous Pain, Sick-Headache, and Rheumatism are cured by this medicine when all others have failed. Toothache, Earache, Burns, Chilblains and Bruises are relieved at once by its use.
The genuine has D. Ransom & Co.'s private Revenue Stamp on the outside, and Dr. J. R. Miller's Magnetic Balm blown in the bottle.
Examine closely, and buy none but the genuine.
Sold by all Druggists. Price 25 cents per bottle.
D. RANSOM, SON & CO., Propr's, Buffalo, N. Y.

P. P. P. P.
Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Sugar-Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—the "Little Giant" Cathartic, or multum in parvo Physic, scarcely larger than mustard seed, yet representing as much cathartic power as large repulsive pills, being most searching and thorough, yet gently and kindly operating.
Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using them. For Jaundice, Headache, Impure Blood, Constipation, Pain in Shoulders, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations, Bad taste in Mouth, Billious attacks, Internal Fever, Rush of Blood to Head, Bloated Stomach, High Colored Urine, Gloomy Forebodings, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets.
One or two, taken daily for a time, will cure Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, Boils, Scrofulous Sores and Virulent Affections of Skin, Throat and Bones. No cheap wood or paste board boxes, but kept fresh and reliable in vials. 25 cents, by druggists, or $2 a dozen. Manufactured at the World's Dispensary, Nos. 80, 82, 84 and 86 West Seneca St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS.
These Pills are composed exclusively of vegetable ingredients, and although they entirely supersede the use of mercury, do not leave any of its injurious effects. They act directly upon the liver, and are a valuable remedy in all cases of derangement resulting from a disordered state of that organ. Liver Complaint, Bilious Disorders, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Typhoid and other Fevers, &c., &c., all succumb to the free use of SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS. For sale by Druggists and Dealers.

ROSADALIS
THE GREAT ALTERATIVE AND BLOOD PURIFIER.
It is not a quack nostrum. The ingredients are published on each bottle of medicine. It is used and recommended by Physicians wherever it has been introduced. It will positively cure SCROFULA in its various stages, RHEUMATISM, WHITE SWELLING, GOUT, GOITRE, BRONCHITIS, NERVOUS DEBILITY, INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION, and all diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood. C. N. U. No. 20

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, May 22d, 1873.

Chicago gives a musical festival the first week in June. Gilmore, of the Boston Jubilee [illegible] the machine.

New York is going into the postal card business with zest. Millions of the pastaboards have been bought by merchants, and yesterday they went into circulation, chiefly bearing advertisements. Others were used to convey jocular messages and sells, for which purpose they will prove eminently a success.

News from the gas explosion in the colliery in Picton county, Nova Scotia, make the details still more appalling than indicated by the first dispatch. More than forty men are known to have perished in the pit, and the total number it is thought will reach seventy-five. One of the explosions was so terrific that the shock was felt a distance of four miles.

Time's whirligig is generally counted as bringing revenges, but the announced candidature of Henry A. Wise. John Brown's executioner, for Grant Governor of Virginia, savors little of revenge. The contest in Virginia has absolutely taken this complexion, and Wise the open candidate of the Grant Republicans. Parties are divided into factions, and Wise hopes to run in between the Liberals and divided Democrats

The Ohio constitutionl convention stands, politically, as fellows:

Sraight Republicans	48
Straight Democrats	45
Liberal Republicans	7
Independent Republicans	4
Working-men's Delegate	1

The convention it to be an unusually able one.

If the President will do what a Washington special says he intends to do, "appoint a man for Chief Justice independent of political cosiderations and one whom the lawyers of the country would indorse," why not take either Judge Black, of Pennsylvania, or Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts? They stand in the very front ranks of the profession. They are men of brains and they have immese legal experience Then there is Wm. M. Evarts, of New York, and Wm. S. Groesbeck, of Ohio. Either of those gentlemen would make able and dignified Chief Justices and the country would be satisfied with them.

There is a marked difference in the manner of honoring the memory of the dead soldiery in Chicago and that proposed at the meeting of Indianapolis citizens last evening. In the former city the work of preparation began six weeks ago, and is now about completed. It is proposed to observe Decoration Day in a style characteristic of the whole-souled, patriotic inhabitants of Chicago, and to this end there will be processions formed of military and civil organizations and citizens at large addresses, music and poems at each of four semetries, viz: Rose Hill, Calvary, Graceland and Oakwoods; special trains have been chartered for the occasion. the schools of the city are to be dismissed, and, in short, everything done which can be to cause the day to be remembered. It is acknowledged that Chicago never does things by halves, a custom Indianapolis might adopt with profit in the subject under consideration.—Ind. Sentinel.

We are in receipt of the resurrected weekly of Woodhull and Claflin. Miss Tennie C. has withdrawn, on account of health, but the admirable society sheet will be continued in name. The Beecher-Tilton scandal seems to engross the entire paper. This is what is claimed by the gentle Woodhull:

"The Beecher-Tilton Scandal Case" it this: Mrs. Woodhull declares there has been a long-continued [illegible]son between Mr. Beecher and [illegible] Tilton; that it first came to Mr. T[illegible]nowledge through the revelati[illegible] of some of his children; that he accused Mrs. Tilton of it, and recieved her acknowledgement of guilt; that he was driven nearly to insanity at the mome[illegible] sh[illegible] treated Mrs. Tilton so severely that she miscarried a child, which considered the offspring of Mr. Beecher Mr. Tilton kept his grief secret however, as Mrs. Woodhull asserts, until Mr. Beecher went to his house, during his absence and excorted a letter from Mrs. Tilton to the effect that he had never been guilty of the wrong she had acknowledged to her husband. Then Mr. Tilton doubly outraged, confided his grief to a besom friend, Mr. Frank Moulton, who went to Beecher's house and forced him at the mouth of a pistol, to give up the letter.

The three men who carried the civil war through in the Cabinet of President Lincoln were Wm. H. Seward, Secretary of the State; Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of Treasury, and Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War Mr. Seward's administration steered clear of foreign complications. Mr. Chase devised the financial system that paid the armies, sustained the business of country and preserved the public credit. Upon the Atlas shoulders of of Stanton rested the responsibility of all military operation. They all are dead, although they were men possessing and powerful constitutions. The strain of overwork killed them. They were not the men after the war they were before.

The New York Tribune, with its usual thoroughness has taken pains to examine the increase of salaries and offices made by the late infamous Congress, and has made a compilation which presents food for reflection as well as just reason for alarm. "Aside from certain contingent and indefinite increased that were authorized and cannot be estimated," says the Tribune 'the total increase figures up the enormous sum of $1,252,557 in annual expenses of the Government. To properly understand this advance, it must be remembered that this addition all expense is not for the time being, nor for one year, but that it is for all time,—the universal tendency being to enlarge rather than to diminish the compensation official service services. By authorizing this increase of $1,252 557 in annual salaries, Congress has done the same in effect as if it had added $25,000,000 of perpetual interests bearing bonds to the public debt. Had such a proceeding occurred, the public outcry would have been loud and dangerous; yet Congress does the very same thing an accumulation of items, and the party in power before the country with the claim of retrenchment." The Tribune likens this kind of retrenchment to Civil Service Reform with Caseys, Newman's Holden's and Sharpe's; to humanitarianism with a Modoc war; to honest Administration with blackmailing of the kind levied upon Phelps, Dodge & Co.; to a dignified foreign policy with Vienna episodes; to reconstruction with the Louisiana usurpation; to devotion to public trusts which scatter President and Cabinet on pleasure tours; and to the other manifold abuses which pass for reforms.

What can be more beautifully conceived, or thrillingly eloquent than the following extract from a speech of Hon. Richard O'Gorman, on St. Patricks' day:

Is not that little shamrock a fitting emblem of the story of our race? There are flowers in the garden fairer to the eye; but the hot sun of summer withers them; and the cold blast of Winter will freeze them to death; but that hardy little plant survives the heat of of Summer and the cold of Winter. The sun may scorch it, the storm may beat upon it, Winter may bury it under its snows; but when the snow melts, and the first breath of spring kisses the longing earth, it awakes—it arises, spreads its mystic leaves in the sunlight and gems the sward again with emerald beauty, unhurt, undestroyed, and indestructible. This is why from every part of the earth, wherever this language that we speak is spoken—afloat or ashore— in the crowded city or on the lonely prairie; in the rich man's mansion or in the poor man's hut; wherever in true men's hearts rolls the strong current of Irish blood, men are keeping high the proud festival to-night; and as they hail their mother and hail their Saint, Erin sits enthroned like a Queen, and there come thronging to the feet, as courtiers to the throne, fond memories of the faithful allegiance of millions and millions of true hearts, that shall cease to beat ere they cease to love their dear island.

It a suggestive fact that General G. M. Dodge, whom no power could discover when he was wanted to testify concerning the Credit Mobelier jobberry, turned up here on Thursday with perfect serenity as a contractor to furnish beef to the Indians.—N. Y. Sun.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Cir. Court, in a cause wherein James D. Kelly is plaintiff and Lucy A. Rench, Conrad Rench, Norman Ingraham, Margaret Ingraham, Joseph Kirkpatrick and Elizabeth Kirkpatrick are defendants requiring me to make the sum of Six hundred and thirty one dollars and eight cents, with interest on said decree and costs I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

Saturday, June 14th, A. D. 1873.

The west half of the north east quarter of section eighteen, 18, township thirty four, 34, north of range twelve, 12 east, in DeKalb County, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said Decree, interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at public sale, the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief from valuation and appraisement laws.

To the Delinquent Tax-payers

—OF—

DeKalb County, Ind

Be it known that the delinquent list from the Tax Duplicate of 1872 is now in my hands for collection, and will pass into the hands of my Deputies on Monday the 22d day of June, 1873. Until then, taxes may be settled at the Treasurer's Office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added.

Afterwards there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the collector in person, or at the Treasurer's Office. There will be further charges in case of collection by sale of goods and chattles and the legal fees for posting notices, together with a commission of five per cent and upward, owing to the amount of tax in question.

Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the Deputies hands and no Treasurer or Deputy dares accept the fees without the tax.

In compliance with the recent enactments of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, the Deputy collectors will be positively compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists.

The new law further provides that Deputies, as well as the Treasurer, has the power of all times to levy upon personal property of delinquents, wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattle tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale.

Deputies will be held responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collectable by law.

The new law compels Treasurers to collect the tax of delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax, if he fails to make such tax, when it can be done in this manner, he will have to pay the whole amount of such tax himself, at his settlement with the Auditor of this County, and also certifiy to the same under oath to be administered by the Auditor.

Now, let me kindly urge each delinquent taxpayer, to avail himself of this timely notice, and call and settle his tax account before the 22nd day of June, 1873, as the Treasurers are bound, under the new law, to show no favors to any one.

Very Respectfully Your Obedient Servant,

NICHOLAS ENSLEY,
Treasurer, DeKalb County, Ind.

The Press states that the enumeration of school children given by the COURIER, was grossly inaccurate. There were two figures incorrect. In Butler township, it should have been 401 instead of 301, and in Auburn 334 instead of 234. That last got the Press and hence the gross inaccuracy.

An exchange has this conundrum :—Why is it that a young fellow and his girl can set in the parlor until after midnight without making noise enough for the old folks to hear them through the partition, but can't sit in a public place five minutes without annoying the whole house with their giggling and talk?'

Our friend Charley McGinnis, with his colored squad is making the dirt fly on the east end of the Sheets farm. Charlie acts as the pioneer, and has a tough job cleaning out the roots and stumps for the scrapers. We are in receipt of Scribuer's monthlo for June running over with fresh interesting reading matter. It is a real pleasure to get hold of this delightful publication, because you can always find a rich feast for the mind from some of the many able contributors to its pages. Get a number and read it.

Still they come! The latest addition to the advertising vocabulary hails from Philadelphia, wherein we are informed that a certain actor will "tragediate." If this is the manner in which Philadelphia is preparing for the Centennial, we might as well burn our dictionaries at once, and await philological chaos with the apathy of despair.

Everybody coming to Fort Wayne to buy clothing is invited to stop at the Red Front Clothing Hall before purchasing, as we carry the finest goods in the State.—We buy 10 per cents cheaper than any house within 100 miles and pleasant words to all. We congratulate our friend T. B. Dickinson, Esq., of Waterloo, on his re-assumption of married duties. The bride is Mrs. Wilson, a charming widow of Ft. Wayne, and T. B. is now happy. Thusly may it ever be.

There has been a Modoc on the love path in a certain locality in this county, to be definite. Lavina is the name of one John Thomas the other. Cupid's dart not only pierced through, but clinched on the other side. Capt. John wanted his Lavn's bed—in other words wanted to marry, but old Tomahawks could not see it. The neighborhood is excited and we await the result with a noble solemnity.

Some fellow, a little inclined to horse flesh, has been prowling around and admiring the firey untamed seeds domiciled at the colored folks' barracks, on the B. & O. Railroad. A dappled grey seemed to suit his fancy and when everything was still, he proceeded to appropriate the animal, but several shots from a revolver satisfied the visitor that it was'nt a go, so he climbed for more congenial climes. Tally one for the colored troops.

A little incident occurred at the Gibson House, Cincinnati, last week, which only corroborates the utter depravity of the human heart. A prominent citizen of Fort Wayne, with a friend, takes a seat at the dining table, when a gentleman from the Y. M. C. A., a stranger locates just opposite, and exhibits his tracts. Our Fort Wayner says he has always read them and found them interesting. "Did you ever find Jesus," was the next poser. J C. you mean, oh, yes, but he's gone back on me. Conversation entirely closed.

While the farmers of this part of the State have been prevented from getting in their crops from the exceedingly wet weather, it is gratifying to know that this is not the case everywhere. In a brief visit to Cincinnati last week, we passed through Southern Ohio and Indiana and found the oats fields quite green and corn planted as a general thing. Vegetation and foliage is some two weeks in advance of us, and every thing looks quite promising. But business everywhere is dul and there is a general complaint even in the great business ofmarts Cincinnati.

The Club will hold a meeting, at the Hall, on next Tuesday evening, for the purpose of deciding whether the dances shall continue during the summer or not. Every member is requested to be present as considerable interest will be taken on both sides. The majority is in favor of keeping them a going, while several others are, seemingly, determined to have them stop until next Fall. Come prepared to discuss the matter thoroughly and you can tip the fantastic toe to its music all summer.

It is astonishing, yet nevertheless true, that some of our ministers go from five to ten miles sometimes to marry a couple and never get a cent. It must be gratifying to a young lady that she can stand up with a young man, who has the unbounded pleasure of not paying a cent to make them one. It is hardly supposable that he regards it as a poor investment at that time whatever conclusion he may come to afterwards. We suggest that the marriage be postponed one day longer that the groom may have a chance to earn enough money to pay the preacher.

Hang this in the library, parlor, office, shop, or some other place where it will be seen: "What does it matter if we lose a few minutes in a whole day?" "Answer—Time table: (Days in a year, 313, working hours in a day, 8.

30 minutes lost each day is, in a year	19	4	30
60 minutes lost each day is, in a year	39	2	20

We trust that the above will touch the hearts of those who called in to see you "just a minute."

New York and Chicago Air Line.

We are informed that the engineer of the New York and Chicago Air Line Rail Road are in this county, nearly on the same line run by them a year ago, which passed Albion half a mile north of the Court House. By this time it is generally know that this line is incomparable the best and most direct from Northwestern Pennsylvania to Chicago. It is hardly possible that any through line of railway from the east to Chicago will ever hereafter be built far north of Albion. It will not be surprising to see the New York and Chicago Air Rine located through here.—New Era.

Our enterprising friend Dr. Seymour, of Leesburg, this State, gave us a call last week to learn something of the above line He informed us that the engineers had been at work west of this, and expected to find them here. The citizens of the above place are taken measures together with several other points to secure this road and expect a hearty support from Auburn. Our citizens should rouse up a little and try their hand, and who knows but what success may crown their efforts as in the case of the B. & O. With a line like this direct to New York, we could challenge the best town in the west for railroad facilities.

We have received from J. Fischer & Bro music publishers, Dayton, Ohio, a copy of the following three favorite trios for male or female voices, with piano accompaniments: Sweet Spring has come,' F. C. Mayer; The Alpine Shepherd, Fr. Ab: and The Happy Wanderer, Fr. Abt. Price complete, 30 cents. Those of our musical readers, who are in search of really good songs will not be disappointed in these. Send 30cts. to J. Fischer & Bro., Dayton Ohio, for a specimen copy.

At a regular meeting of Butler Lodge, No. 282, I. O. O. F., held May 14th, 1873, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Almighty God in his alwise providence to remove from our midst our worthy Sister, Nancy Ocher who departed this life April 29th, 1873.

Therefore, Be it resolved that while we bow in humble submission to the fiat of Him who doeth all things well, we will ever cherish her memory in our hearts believing that our loss is her gain.

Resolved, That the Lodge tenders to the much afflicted husband and family their affectionate sympathy in this their most severe affliction and bereavment, hoping that they may find consolation in believing and trusting in that God who is able to comfort and sustain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family and also to the editor of the COURIER for publication.

Resolved, That the Lodge be draped in mourning according to the usual custom of the order.

Col Zollinger, the present Mayor of Fort Wayne delivered an inaugural address on assuming the duties of that office a few days ago, the first that was ever made in the city. This augars something in favor of the new administration. We know Mr. Zollinger to be possessed of the requisite abilities to make a good officer, the assertion of the Gazette to the contrary, notwithstanding, and being a prompt and reliable gentleman we opine that the city will prosper and improve, under his care. The fact that a man of such promince and influence should become disgusted with the rottenness of the Radical party, chagrins its party leaders, and we notise squibs in Radical exchanges about the Colonel receiving his reward. That's right, when a man does a good act he should have his reward, and we are glad to know that Fort Wayne had the good sense to bestow it.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway was helh at Cleveland last week. All the old officers were re-elected From the report we glean that the capital stock of the company is $50,000,000.—They have 1,300 miles of track. The equipment of the road at the end of the year consisted of 418 engines, 243 passenger cars of all grades, and 9,025 freight cars. The net earnings for the year were $5,752,103, and $1,504,217 were expended for improvements. The increase in gross earnings over the previous year was $2,793,664.39 and this, too, it is claimed with lower rates of toll.

Fort Wayne, the largest Railroad City in Indiana, is still increasing. More railroads are being built this summer, but Rothchild & Bro's., proprietors of the Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block are not back of their business.—Their trade is increasing, as they carry the heavest stock in Indiana. Good goods are the only kind allowed in our store, and sell goods alike to every person, and so we go on. (May 1, 2m.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

NEW YORK city is placed in a sad predicament in regard to her financial affairs by a recent decision of the Court of Appeals, declaring unconstitutional the law of 1872, levying a tax of 3½ mills on the taxable property of the State to supply the deficiency in the city treasury. The treasury is thus deprived of about $7,000,000 of revenue, and there is no constitutional means of meeting the current demands....Judge Chase left about $200,000. ....Taunton, Mass., has had a $100,000 fire. ....Oakes Ames died at North Easton, Mass., on the evening of the 8th inst., of apoplexy, with which he was attacked two days before. He was 69 years old....The New York police are making vigorous war on the gamblers.... Robert P. Bleakley has been sentenced, at New York, to a life term of imprisonment for the murder of his niece, Maud Merrill....Since Jan. 1, 30,000 German emigrants have arrived at New York.

THE National Temperance Society, in session last week in New York, elected William E. Dodge President. The society ask the General Government to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the United States.

THE Brooklyn gas men have been on a strike, and a considerable portion of the city was without gas in consequence, many houses being dependent on candles and kerosene.... Marrin, the New York lawyer who slapped Jay Gould's face, was fined $2 and costs....In the Superior Court of Boston, Senator Charles Sumner has been granted a divorce from his wife, Alice M. Sumner, on the ground of five years' desertion.

WILLIAM M. TWEED is the most extensively prosecuted man in America. Fifteen fresh indictments have recently been found against him by the New York Grand Jury....A guest at a Rochester, N. Y., hotel was the other day relieved of his satchel, containing $15,000 worth of diamonds....B. F. Camp has sued the New York Tribune for libel, claiming $50,000 damages.

A VEIN of silver one to eight feet thick has been discovered in Pike county, W. Va....The steamer Remand struck a rock in the Lachine rapids, St. Lawrence river, a few days ago, and went to pieces. The passengers all escaped. ....A convention of Jews, at which delegates were present from leading cities of the United States, was held in New York last week, and it was resolved to encourage the emigration of Roumanian Jews, who, it is alleged, are at present subjected to bitter persecution.

TWEED'S Broadway (New York) property, consisting of five lots, has been sold under foreclosure for $483,000. Tweed paid $625,000 for it....The New York Legislature has refused to repeal the usury laws....A citizen of New York gave the United States in his will half a million dollars toward the payment of the national debt, but the courts of that State have declared the bequest invalid...Stokes' case has been taken to the Court of Appeals on a writ of error from the decision of the Supreme Court refusing him a new trial....A prominent member of the Boston Board of Brokers, a young man 36 years old, who has hitherto borne an unsullied name, has been arrested for forgery. His method was to alter the figures of stock-certificates, raising certificates for one, two, and three shares, to one hundred, two hundred, and three hundred, respectively. By these operations he has swindled various parties out of $200,000....The 375,000 penny postal-cards sent to the New York Postoffice were sold in two days, and another batch of 1,000,000 has been called for by the Postmaster. Most of those which have appeared in the mails bear advertisements.

The West.

A SNOW-STORM in Wyoming Territory on the 8th of May....The remains of Bishop McIlvaine, of the Episcopal Church, having been brought from Florence, Italy, where he died, were interred at Cincinnati, last week, with mournful and impressive ceremonies....The American Medical Association has been holding an interesting session at St. Louis, a large number of delegates being present from every section of the country. A resolution was introduced by Dr. Horner, of the navy, declaring that alcohol should be classed with other powerful drugs, and that when it is prescribed medicinally it should be done with conscientious caution and a sense of great responsibility. The resolution further declares that alcoholic liquors, as a beverage, are productive of a large amount of physical and mental disease, that it is the cause of a large percentage of the crime and pauperism of our cities and and country. The resolution was referred to a committee, who will report at the next meeting of the Association.... The Modocs made a sortie from the lava beds on the 7th inst., attacked a Government supply train, and captured eleven mules and three horses, and burned three wagons. Three soldiers were wounded in the fight, the Indians escaping without a scratch. A reconnoissance of the lava beds on the 8th by a party of Warm Spring Indians revealed the fact that the Modocs have abandoned their late position, but whither they went or when they departed is a profound mystery. The party found the bodies of Lieut. Cranston and three of our soldiers, and also two dead Modocs, during their explorations. A San Francisco dispatch of the 9th says William Fenning met Bogus Charley and his squaw on the road, thirty miles north of Yreka, the day before. Fenning advised him to give up his gun. Charley refused, and did not say where he was going, but said he was tired of fighting. Other persons report having seen this warrior....A terrific tornado passed over Belle Center, Ohio, on Saturday, blowing down eight dwellings, five stores and one church. Strange to say, no loss of life is reported....Richard Wallingford and his wife, living in Van Buren county, Iowa, deliberately committed suicide a few nights ago, by taking poison....They have been having exciting times in Labette county, Kansas. Ten graves in all have been found on the Bender farm, and it is thought more will yet be discovered. It is supposed the murdering has been going on for years, and the utmost horror has been produced by the awful revelations of crime. A man named Brockman was hung by an excited mob, to make him confess the knowledge it is believed he possessed regarding the whereabouts of Bender and family, and was released, being at last dead....Sixteen Indians, in charge of E. E. Barnum, agent for P. T. Barnum, passed through Kansas City recently. They are bound for Vienna, and represent the Kaws, Comanches and Cheyennes. Others will follow from other tribes.

IN Winona county, Minnesota, John Hefferman, aged 65, attacked his son with an ax. The latter, in self-defense, smote his aged parent with a billet of wood, from the effects of which he died....The little town of Wetmore, Kansas, on the Central Branch Pacific railroad, was recently the scene of a horrible and revolting tragedy. A man named Errickson went to the house of a neighbor named Marquette, whom he shot dead in his own door. The wretch then entered the house, and, after outraging the wife of the murdered man, killed her by shooting her seven times with a revolver. He then wound up by shooting himself twice, once in the abdomen and once through the head. When found he was lying across the dead body of Mrs. Marquette, who was in a state of nudity, with a pistol still in his hand....It turns out that Capt. Jack's Modocs have not abandoned the lava beds, as reported, but have taken up a position four miles south of the old stronghold, near the foot of Snow mountain, where they are strongly intrenched....It is denied that the Chicago and Northwestern and Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads have entered into an arrangement to pool their earnings.

A SAN FRANCISCO dispatch announces another skirmish with the Modocs on the 11th inst., in which the Indians were repulsed. It is said that if the troops meet with another reverse an attempt will be made to secure the services of Indian scouts and warriors, and thus pit Indian against Indian. It is alleged that two or three hundred Indians, at $1,000 apiece, could be employed to exterminate the Modocs, and it is thought that, in the end, it would prove the cheapest way of getting rid of them. The expedition sent out to recover the bodies of Lieut. Cranston and the eight men who fell with him found them in such an advanced state of decomposition that it was impossible to remove them to camp. The troops, however, buried their remains on the field where they fell, and placed headboards to mark the graves. The Indians had piled sage-brush over the bodies and burnt them almost beyond recognition.... The woman movement has received an impetus in Kankakee county, Illinois, a lady having been appointed county school superintendent....A dispatch from Parsons, Kansas, dated May 12, says: "Col. Boudinot, who has just returned from the scene of the Bender murder, reports three more graves discovered on yesterday. Over 3,000 people were on the ground, and a special train had just arrived with seven cars filled with people. There was intense excitement all over the country, and a firm determination to ferret out the parties engaged in the murder. Nearly all the bodies of the dead were indecently mutilated. It is considered certain that the little girl was thrown alive into the grave with her father, as no marks of violence were found on her body."

THERE were in Chicago elevators, on the 14th inst., 8,764,196 bushels of grain, embracing 1,218,260 bushels of wheat, 5,499,802 bushels of corn, 1,635,747 bushels of oats, 290,947 bushels of rye and 119,437 bushels of barley. ....The St. Louis Congressional Convention, called to devise means for improving water communications between St. Louis and the East and South, began its session on the 13th inst....Five Indians recently attacked the house of James Harrison, near Walla Walla, Oregon. Harrison defended himself and his daughter, and with a hatchet knocked two down and struggled with a third, when the daughter came to his rescue and knocked the Indian down with an ax. The neighbors heard the outcries and came to the relief. Three of the Indians were arrested, two escaping.

ADVICES from the lava beds state that the Modocs have secured another rocky fortress, about twenty miles south of their last stronghold. Bogus Charley was recently seen on the Upper Klamath, being still at large. He said he knew nothing about the contemplated massacre of the commissioners; that there were 30 Modocs left, who would fight till the last man was killed....Eight persons have been arrested at Parsons, Kansas, for complicity in the Bender murders....The experiment of moving logs in rafts from the lumber region of Michigan across the lake to Chicago is about to be tried on a large scale by a number of prominent capitalists in the latter city, who are confident that the thing can be done successfully, thus greatly reducing the price of lumber.

The South.

THE troubles at St. Martinsville, La., at one time so threatening, have happily terminated without serious results. The appearance of 200 United States troops at the scene of the disturbances had a magical effect in quieting the rebellious spirit of the McEnery partisans. The soldiers took quiet possession of the town, and the Delblanc party promptly disbanded and surrendered themselves to the United States authorities. They are to undergo trial before a Commissioner. In Grant parish, the Grand Jury of the United States District Court have presented a large number of indictments, against parties engaged in the Colfax massacre, and they will be brought to trial. The political troubles have given a severe shock to business operations in New Orleans, and honest men of all shades of political opinion are praying earnestly for a restoration of order throughout the State....At Richmond, the other day, two young Virginians settled a rivalry in a love affair by a resort to pistols. Distance, ten paces. Both were seriously, and, it is feared, fatally wounded.

WHILE playing Mazeppa, in St. Louis, last week, Miss Leo Hudson's horse stumbled and fell from the stage, receiving injuries from which the animal died. Miss Hudson narrowly escaped death, being badly bruised.

Washington.

THERE is much speculation in Washington regarding the succession to the Chief Justiceship, and any number of names are mentioned by rumor in connection with the position. A correspondent states that the President, when he was in Chicago, admitted in a conversation that it was the most difficult and important appointment he had yet to deal with, and that he thought he would take several months to deliberate and consult about the matter. He said that this appointment should not be a political one if he could help it, and that it would not probably be made until just before Congress assembled....A rumor prevails at the capital that Capt. Hall's Arctic exploring steamer Polaris has been lost....By a comparative statement prepared at the Revenue Bureau it is shown that during the first six months of the current fiscal year the receipts from cigars alone, in thirty-one of the collection districts of the country, amounted to nearly $530,000 more than during the corresponding period in the preceding fiscal year.

THE President, it is stated, was deeply affected by the news of the disastrous termination of Capt. Hall's Arctic expedition, as he hoped the enterprise of the Government in this direction would redound to the national honor.

THE President has appointed Judge Edwards Pierrepont, of New York, Minister to Russia. ....The remains of Chief Justice Chase were buried on the 12th inst. A distinguished company of public men were in attendance at the funeral ceremonies, which were very impressive....The Postmaster-General has at last commenced issuing the long-promised postal cards....It is said ex-Senator Cole, of California, will be sent on the mission to Japan.

THE first Cabinet meeting for several weeks was held on the 13th inst. The President announced that he would make no nomination for Chief Justice until December. The Cabinet considered the charges made against Gen. Van Buren, the General Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition on behalf of the United States, and decided that the testimony warranted his removal. Jackson S. Schultz, ex-President of the New York Board of Health, was thereupon appointed in his place. No action was taken in the cases of the two other Commissioners.

JUDGE PIERREPONT has accepted the Russian mission.

Foreign.

THE cable announces the death of John Stuart Mill, the famous English economist and philosopher, in the 70th year of his age. ....A Madrid dispatch says that in the recent battle with Barregary, near Estella, Navarre, the Government troops were totally rounted. They lost 200 killed, many prisoners, small arms, and one cannon. Col. Nouvarra, the commander, is among the prisoners....A Spanish steamer lately arrived at Havana with 400 prisoners to reinforce the Spanish army in the field....Bidwell, the Bank of England forger, has left Havana for London, in charge of the English detectives. It is said he has agreed to turn State's evidence....A wild panic was created on the Vienna Bourse, the other day, by the failure of a leading firm, which threw a large amount of stock on the market. So great was the excitement that business became impossible, and speculators petitioned the Government to order a suspension of transactions for several days, and adopt measures of relief....The number of visitors to the Vienna Exposition average about 15,000 a day.

THE Carlists in Spain under Don Alfonso have met a severe defeat at the hands of the Government troops. Other Carlist disasters are reported....The late elections in Spain resulted in favor of the Federal Republicans.... A cable telegram announces that the Emperor William of Germany was fired upon while reviewing the troops at St. Petersburg. The shot passed through his helmet, and wounded an adjutant.

THE Samana Bay Company have formally taken possession of their property, and organized their governmental machinery....The reported attempt on the life of the German Emperor in St. Petersburg turns out to have been a hoax....A Bonapartist has been elected to the French Assembly from Rochelle, and M. Rane, an ex-member of the Commune, has been returned from Lyons....Oscar II. and Sophie Wilhelmine have been crowned King and Queen of Sweden....All the European money markets have been disturbed by the financial cataclysm in Vienna. It is stated that the shrinkage in American securities in Germany alone will reach $10,000,000....Free Republic has been declared for by a Republican conference at Birmingham, England.

THE Pope is again pronounced to be in a critical condition....Pere Hyacinthe is a happy father....Another detachment of 1,000 Carlist prisoners has reached Havana, to reinforce the Spanish army in Cuba.

GEN. AGRAMONTE, one of the ablest and most successful of the Cuban insurgent leaders, was killed in a recent battle, which resulted in his death and the defeat of his force, with a loss of 80....The Constituent Cortes, just elected in Spain, has an overwhelming majority of Federal Republicans, of whom there are 310. The Radicals, Internationalists, Independent Republicans, and Monarchists number in all only 78.

THE NORTH POLE.

Death of Capt. Hall, and Failure of his Arctic Expedition.

The steamer Tigress arrived in Roberts' Bay, eighteen miles from St. Johns, on the 10th of May, having on board nineteen of Capt. Hall's Arctic exploring expedition, including Capt. Tyson, assistant navigator.

This party, which had been landed from the ship Polaris, were driven from her by a gale, which burst her moorings on the 15th of October, 1872, in latitude 72 degrees 35 minutes. When they last saw the Polaris she was under steam and canvas, making for a harbor on the east side of Northumberland island. Two were lost in the northern expedition; two were landed on the ice with Capt. Tyson's party; one was burnt as firewood to make water for the crew, and the other is on board of the Tigress.

The Polaris was in command of Capt. Buddington, who had thirteen of the crew along with him, and a plentiful stock of provisions. Her bow was somewhat damaged, and it is the opinion of the survivors that they will be unable to get clear until July, and even then, if the ship is unseaworthy, they would have to make new boats to effect an escape.

On the 8th of November, 1871, in latitude 81 degrees 38 minutes, longitude 71 degrees 44 minutes, Capt. Hall died of apoplexy, and was buried on shore, where they erected a wooden cross to mark his grave. He had recently returned from a northern sledge expedition, in which he had attained an altitude of 82 degrees and 16 minutes. He seemed in his usual health, and had called his crew into the cabin to encourage them with hopes of future rewards and to stimulate them to renewed exertion, when he was suddenly struck down and expired, to the great grief of those around, to whom he had endeared himself by his kindness and devotion.

In September, 1871, the Polaris entered winter quarters, and left them on August 12, 1872. The ice was very heavy, and set in a southern direction. She was forced south, and so continued drifting till Captain Tyson and his party were driven from her.

A sledge party crossed Kane's Polar sea, which they pronounced to be a strait about fifteen miles wide. There was an appearance of open water to the north.

The rescued party suffered very much during their dreary drift from hunger and cold. They lived on a few ounces daily, and latterly on raw seals, eating skins, entrails and all, for the two last months, and are all in fairly good health. Capt. Tyson does not expect the Polaris will get clear before July, if in condition to come home. There were 14 left on board with plenty of provisions. If the vessel be not fit to come home, they can easily construct boats for their safety.

Capt. Isaac J. Hayes, the well-known Arctic explorer, in an interview the other day with a New York reporter, gives it as his opinion that Capt. Hall was murdered by mutinous men. He stated that Capt. Hall had reached a higher latitude than any previous expedition, having penetrated to within 480 miles of the North Pole.

THE MODOCS.

Capt. Jack and his Red Devils Again Surprise Our Troops.

Another detachment of our troops in the lava bed region has been surprised by the Modocs, under command of Capt. Hasbrouck, and five soldiers killed and six wounded. The following is a condensed account of the affair, as telegraphed from San Francisco:

The command of Capt. Hasbrouck was scouting all day, and returned to Sorass lake for water, and were making efforts to secure some by digging. None could be found, and McKay was sent back to Lieut. Boyle's camp. The distance being seventeen miles, it occupied all night. At the dawn of day Capt. Jack and his band rode within one hundred yards of the camp, where all were dismounted, and charged on the camp, firing into the herd and the guard, at the first volley stampeding the herd. They left for the camp, and while the men were getting under arms the Modocs gave them volley after volley, killing four soldiers and one Warm Spring Indian. A rally was made and a charge sounded.

By this time McKay and some of his men had united and drove the Modocs into the timber, capturing 21 ponies, 3 pack mules, 1 Modoc (left on the field), and 19 mules, packed, with 6 bodies. Before they retreated their trail was covered. The Indians beat a hasty retreat toward the McLode range of mountains. Capt. Hasbrouck handled his men dexterously. He is now furnished with five days' supplies, but water being very scarce deters a long stay in the field. Gen. Davis has determined to keep them moving until the last Modoc is killed. He thinks that the soldiers gain greater courage when they have them on open ground.

Capt. Jack has but seven animals. He had on the attire of Gen. Canby, and took his position as lordly as if he was a Brigadier General.

There were 33 Modocs engaged. No squaws were seen during the fight, or by scouts on the following night.

It was a grand mistake of the Modocs, who undoubtedly thought they could stampede this force as they had stampeded the others, but they met the Warm Springs. The warriors started at the first fire as fast as they could get their guns, trotting in on the flank of the Modocs, which surprised them. The cry "Warm Springs" went through the Modoc ranks, and they were stampeded instead of the soldiers.

The latest accounts represent that the Modocs are heading toward Van Bremer's Mountain, closely pursued by the troops. It is believed that they are nearly starved out, and are entirely out of provisions.

ANOTHER HORROR.

Terrible Calamity in a Nova Scotia Coal Mine—Fifty to One Hundred Miners Killed by an Explosion of Fire Damp.

A telegram from Halifax, N. S., dated May 13, says: This community was startled tonight with intelligence that a terrible explosion had occurred in the Drummond colliery, Picton county, at 1 o'clock. Manager Dunn, Assistant Manager Richardson, and 40 of the workmen were in the pit when the explosion took place. The greatest excitement prevailed after the fearful occurrence, and crowds of people for miles around came rushing to the scene of the disaster, and saw one of those heartrending scenes which is described by an eye-witness as something harrowing beyond all conception, the recollection of which will never fade from memory. Mothers, wives, sisters, children, and friends crowded around the burning pit, mourning pitifully the terrible fate of those below, their heartrending cries being heard for a long distance. Every effort has been and is being made to rescue the men, but so far without success, and it is feared they have all perished.

A dispatch to the New York Herald locates the mine disaster at the village of Westville, county of Picton, 103 miles from Halifax, where there are three large collieries in full operation, exporting large quantities of coal. Navigation having recently opened, the workmen demanded increased wages, and several strikes occurred. One of the largest mines has been closed several days, and the men had just returned to work. At half-past 11 a shot in the coal set fire to the slope, and half an hour afterward a fearful explosion took place, caused by the accumulation of gas during the time the mine was closed. About 2 o'clock a second explosion occurred, coming up the slope air shaft on the old trial shaft with terrible force, and, it is believed, killing every one in the mine, variously estimated at from 40 to 100, including men and boys. Soon after the first explosion cries were heard at the foot of the air shaft. Men were immediately lowered with ropes, and four of those below brought up. Two men were going down the air shaft to render assistance, when the second explosion occurred, and were blown to pieces. There was such a small supply of water that little could be done to quench the flames.

Additional Particulars of the Awful Calamity—Total Number of Killed, About Seventy-five.

A telegram from Westville, N. S., dated May 14 gives the following additional details of the disaster:

From 10 o'clock last night until daylight this morning, the fire at the Drummond colliery raged with intense fury, gathering volume and violence each moment. The sky in the vicinity of the calamity was illuminated with flames issuing from the air shaft, to the height of nearly 100 feet. All through the night there were explosions at intervals. They were preceded by a rumbling noise, resembling thunder. The weary watchers who remained around the pit's mouth and the air shaft, and labored to subdue the flames, were obliged to seek shelter in the adjoining wood, as stones, debris, etc., thrown from the pit's mouth at each explosion were being scattered around in all directions, and threatened instant destruction or injury to every one within reach.

About 2 o'clock this afternoon these explosions were followed by one which for terrific violence and destructive force dwarfed all the rest. All the wooden works in and about the main slope were instantly destroyed; stones, wood and burning embers were driven high into the air; the smoke, flame and horrible noises accompanying the explosion giving the beholder vivid idea of a volcanic eruption. The earth for miles around was shaken with the violence of the explosion.

The scenes in and around the villages are saddening. Westville and the village at the Drummond colliery are in mourning; the shops are closed, and men and women wander about in groups, their saddened countenances betokening the great grief that has befallen them. No pen can correctly picture the harrowing scenes when the terrible truth was conveyed to the mourning wives, sisters, and friends of those who were so suddenly hurried into eternity.

The utmost excitement prevailed, and for hours it was impossible to ascertain who were and who were not in the mine. Women, many of whom had husbands, brothers, and sons working in the colliery, made the air dismal with their crying.

One of the rescuing party killed by the explosion on yesterday was driven into the air a distance of 100 feet, and fell into the woods near by, where his dead body was picked up.

The list of killed, as far as known, comprises 26 men leaving a wife and family, and 22 single men. The total number killed will probably reach 75. The wounded number six, of whom two are fatally injured. The men who have escaped with great difficulty from the slope report that on their way up they passed the bodies of their comrades, who had probably become stupified by the smoke since the explosion.

CURIOUS AND COSTLY FUEL.—A Philadelphia dispatch of the 9th says: The steamship Cassina, running between here and Liverpool, while coming here, ran out of coal during very heavy weather. As it was necessary to reach this port, not being near any point where coal could be obtained, part of the cargo was used to keep the fires up. A large portion of the cargo consisted of Peruvian bark and other valuable drugs, consigned to Powers & Weightman, manufacturing chemists of this city, and the bark was used in place of coal. The loss is between $30,000 and $40,000, and the steamship company wishes to put it upon general average, but Powers & Weightman claim damages to the full amount of their loss, and have entered a suit to recover. The other losers will also put claims in for the full recovery of the value of their goods. The burning of the cargo, no doubt, prevented a serious disaster to the steamship.

CRUELTY TO HORSES.—Thomas Farrell a Brooklyn street contractor, who had 16 horses in his stable in Brooklyn, corner Throop avenue and Van Buren street, was recently taken sick, and went to reside with a relative. Being unable to visit the stable, Farrell, it is alleged, left his horses to their fate. His father and brother, it is said, frequently implored him to let them have the use of the horses, offering him liberal remuneration for the use of them. He sternly refused their offers. On Tuesday afternoon the offal contractor removed the last carcass of the sixteen horses from the stable. The entire sixteen had perished. On examining the stable it was found that the famishing animals had eaten up their bedding and the manure. Marks of their teeth were also visible on all the woodwork, and many a pine board in the stable was partially eaten away.—Turf, Field and Farm.

MARK TWAIN, who is sometimes a sage as well as humorist, publishes a communication in the New York Tribune, in which he approves of the use of life-rafts instead of boats on ocean steamers. There is an American invention of a raft consisting of three inflated horizontal rubber tubes, with a platform lashed on top. A raft of this description once crossed the Atlantic from New York to London, carrying two men safely over. Rafts of all sizes may be constructed on this pattern, and Mark Twain's experience teaches him to believe that nine such rafts as the one which crossed the ocean, each of which would have carried 120 people, and all of which could have been adjusted to the steamer in the room required for four boats, would have saved all those on the steamer Atlantic who succeeded in getting on deck.

THE KANSAS HORROR.

The Butcheries by the Bender Family—A Tale of Horror Surpassing the Conjurings of the Most Fervid Imagination.

[From the Chicago Tribune.]

It has been left for American frontier life to develop a story of crime more horrible and more mysterious [illegible] told in the fiction of which Mr. Thackeray's "Catherine" was a paraphrase. The adventures told in the biographies of Jack Sheppard and Dick Turpin; the horrors that Sue and the elder Dumas invented to satisfy morbid appetites; the blood-curdling sketches evolved out of Poe's abnormal imagination; the staple of the "Dime Novels" and the weekly serials; the traditions of the sensational drama with the way-side inn, with its trap-doors and murders, which people have come to regard with the disgust that attends ascertained exaggeration, have all been made possible by the systematic and prolonged butchery practiced by the Bender family in Southeastern Kansas. The series of murders in the Black Forest which Charles Reade utilized in one of his stories, and the slaughter which made Troppmann's name known throughout the world, do not compare in point of pure and unadulterated horror with this case. Troppmann enticed away a single family on the pretext of discovering an inheritance, and murders all the members of it, but the Benders and their confederates lay in wait for all people who happened to come their way, and slaughtered them with the prospects of small gain. The "Chamber of Horrors" in Madame Tussaud's London collection of wax figures does not, with all its hideous caricatures, present so complete a picture of human depravity as has been traced to an isolated frontier settlement in Labette county, Kansas.

The disappearance of Dr. York, a brother of Senator York, who exposed the Pomeroy bribery, caused the first vigorous investigation into the cause of numerous similar disappearances that had occurred in a section of Kansas not far from Independence. Dr. York was missed about the middle of last March, and, a short time ago, Senator York organized a party to scour the country in search of some trace of him. Dr. York was known to have taken the route between Independence and Osage Mission, and the scouring party came across a house situated about half way between Drum Creek and Big Hill, a dismal expanse of prairie land. This house was a sort of half way stopping place, combining a grocery and eating-house, where travelers usually halted for lunch. The house was kept by a family named Bender, consisting of the old man and [illegible] son, [illegible] Both [illegible] young man offered to assist the party, and the young woman desired to make an appointment with Senator York, when, she promised, she would reveal the manner of his brother's disappearance through the aid of the spirits. Little attention was paid to these offers, and Senator York and his party went on. They were obliged to return at last without having discovered any clue to the mysterious disappearance. Senator York then employed a detective named Beers, who went to work at the case. After some days, Beers' attention was drawn to the Bender house, and, when he went there, he found that it had been deserted. The whole family, warned by Senator York's search, had fled. Their absence increased the detective's suspicion. Search was instituted at once, and traces of the missing York were soon discovered. The first convincing evidence of foul play in the house was found when Beers lifted a trap-door in the floor, and the sickening stench of decomposing remains came rushing through the opening. This satisfied Beers that Dr. York had met with a violent death on those premises, and he prosecuted his search still further. A patch of ground at the back of the house had been newly plowed over, and Beers carefully examined it in search of a disturbance or sub-soil. Having found a spot which looked as though earth had been thrown up, he took a wagon-rod, plunged it in the ground, and, at a depth of about four feet, it pierced what was subsequently found to be the remains of a human body. Men were set to work to dig, and a body was found, which was subsequently identified as that of Dr. York.

The finding of York's body induced a search for others, which resulted in the finding of nine bodies in all, several of which were identified as those of persons who had suddenly and mysteriously disappeared within a few months back. It was observed that there had been a regular system of burial. Each body had been deposited near a tree, which was then pruned in a manner to indicate that one burial had been made in that spot, so that there would be no danger of digging a grave where one body already rested. This systematic arrangement showed that the murderers seriously and deliberately counted upon filling up the patch of ground with corpses, making a church-yard without a church, a cemetery without a tomb. The bodies were all deposited after a regular system—the right arm folded across the breast and the left stretched down at the side. There was a disposition to economize ground, as if it was feared that the burial place would not accommodate all the victims; for some of the bodies were placed on the side in narrow ditches, and some doubled up in a squatting position.

The wounds on the head, which are identified in all the bodies that have been unearthed, and the arrangement of the house, have indicated the manner in which the victims met their death. They were all travelers who stopped at the house for refreshments. They were seated at a table in the back room, near which hung a curtain. One or more persons, whether male or female, were concealed behind this curtain, and struck the traveler on the back of the head with a hammer. The victim was then seized and dragged to the trap-door, his throat was cut, and then his body was dropped into the cellar below, where it was allowed to remain until night came. It was then taken out and buried without attracting attention. All the bodies were marked in the same manner, except that of a little girl who had accompanied her father, and who is supposed to have been thrown into the grave alive, as her body shows no marks of violence. The spoils of the Bender family, engaged in this traffic in human lives, must have been [illegible] none of the murdered travelers are known to have had any considerable money with them. It is supposed, howeevr, that the Benders had confederates posted along the road to inform them of favorable opportunities, and many arrests have already been made. The Bender family, the two women and two men, escaped, and have not yet been apprehended. The detective, Beers, had tracked them to St. Louis at last accounts, and it is not probable that they will be harbored in any quarter of the globe.

[From the Kansas City Journal of Commerce, May 8.]

Dr. William York, brother of Senator York, of Kansas, disappeared on the 8th of last March, and there has been a continued anxious search for him since that time. A few days since, as the public had been advised by telegraphic dispatches, his body was found buried on a farm about six miles north of Cherry Vale, by York, a brother of the deceased. The remains of the murdered man, for it is evident that he had been murdered, were thrown into a hole a foot deep and a foot and a half wide, face downward. The grave was in a plowed field, adjoining the house formerly occupied by Bender. The particulars of the discovery are described as follows in a correspondence of the Lawrence Evening Standard: "The farm on which the body was found is about six miles northeast of Cherry Vale. It is a railway claim settled on about two years ago by a family by the name of Bender, consisting of an old man named Bender, his son, wife and daughter. Both are understood to have children from a former marriage. Upon examination the head was found to be badly broken, with an indenture on the back part of the skull, and both temples smashed. One eye had been bursted out by the force of the blow, and the face had been cut. A shoe-hammer had been found in the house which fitted the indenture on the back of the head. It is supposed that he was stricken from behind, and then the temples broken by the hammer. The grave was about 200 yards from the house, and the main plowed furrow ran crosswise from it. The sides and middle had settled somewhat, and an iron rod taken from the end board of a wagon was run down the sides of the grave before digging into it. The house is to be moved off its foundation to-day, and it is supposed, from the affluvia arising from underneath it, that another body or bodies are buried. The clothing had been stripped from the body, excepting a woolen undershirt. It had not become so badly decomposed but that it was easy to identify it. The hair, face, and whiskers were in a fair state of preservation, and the remains were easily identified by Ed York. A coffin was brought from Independence, the body placed in the same, and the remains taken to Independence, passing through here about 3 o'clock this morning."

Besides the discovery of the body of York, there have already been discovered and exhumed six others from beneath the house, one of them being a child. In addition to these new evidences of damnable murder and wholesale crime, three more graves were found, and at the writing of our correspondent were to be speedily opened and examined. All the bodies exhumed gave evidence of having been killed in the same manner, they having been struck by some heavy instrument—a hammer or hatchet—on the back and lower part of the skull. Some of the bodies were stripped entirely of the clothing. The Bender family, to whom the crime is attributed, were Spiritualists, and occupied the premises, but fled before the discovery. It was found, upon seeking their whereabouts, that they had secured tickets and gone to Humboldt, which is the last trace of them. It transpires that, during the search for the missing persons, one of the Bender family, a young woman named Kate, who represented herself as a Spiritualist and a medium, was appealed to for information, when the victims were traced to Bender's premises, and she replied that she would consult the spirits if time would be given her to do so, and would, through their agency, be able to disclose the whereabouts of the missing persons. The time was granted, and, in the meantime, the family took opportunity to decamp, since which time nothing has been learned of them, other than their buying the tickets for Humboldt. The family kept an eating-saloon at this place, and, although there seems to be no apparent motive for the horrible murder, it is more than likely it was perpetrated for the gain plundered from travelers along the main road leading from Oswego to Independence, Kan. Altogether, the murders are without parallel.

THE DEFEAT OF SEWARD IN 1860.—Charles Francis Adams curiously missed saying just what caused the defeat of Seward at Chicago, in 1860, and eventually the nomination of Lincoln. Horace Greeley did that. Mr. Adams might have added that the management of the friends of Lincoln in the convention was not as effective for him as that of Seward's friends. The Seward crowd from New York somehow made a very bad impression upon Western Republicans, and helped Lincoln through. The fact is, Republicans out West were troubled along about those times with a great deal of conscience, and they did not like the appearnce of Tom Hyer at the head of a company of roughs; and the freedom with which money and whisky and champagne were used at the Seward headquarters was disgusting to moral people.—Cincinnati Commercial.

AUBURN COURIER

T. C. HAYS, Publisher.

His Excellency.

A certain class of the American people are rapidly developing a taste for official forms, ceremonies and titles, strangely at variance with that simplicity which was intended by its founders to be characteristic of our Government.

Mr. Jefferson rode on horseback and unattended to the foot of Capitol Hill, and walked up to be inaugurated. There was no one to hold his stirrup while he dismounted, or to greet him as His Excellency. The main feature of that inauguration was the oath to support the Constitution and enforce the laws, taken by a man who understood whereof he spoke. But how is it now? At the last inauguration President Grant was paraded from the White House to the Capitol behind four prancing steeds, while the sidewalks and windows and house-tops, and all other available points, were crowded with Government employes of all grades and descriptions, with their families, from the sucking babe to the tottering old man; with thousands of others who hoped to be officeholders; and with a curious multitude gathered from every part of the country, all straining for glimpse of a very ordinary looking man preceded by music and guards, and followed by a gay procession largely made up of military. A cordon of police encircled the Capitol, and only the favored were admitted within the building, or to a place near the east front, where they could hear a stolid individual swear to support a constitution which it is doubtful if he ever carefully read.

Is it any wonder that, after witnessing such a pageant, followed by balls, festivities and grand pyrotechnic displays, simple people from the remoter parts of our country should disperse to their homes and talk to their neighbors of the magnificence of His Excellency the President of the United States?

But this adulatory form of address is not confined to the unpretending or the unlearned. It has grown into such common usage that even a gentleman of the perfect cultivation of Mr. George William Curtis falls into the error of addressing the President as His Excellency in an official communication, such as his recent letter tendering his resignation as a member of the Advisory Board of the Civil Service.

The Constitution makes of the simple words, the President, the only title of our chief magistrate; and the first Congress, composed in large part of those who framed the Constitution, rejected all other titles as superfluous, and in conflict with the spirit of Republican institutions.

In the Federal Convention which framed the Constitution, it was proposed that the style of the chief executive should be the President, and his title His Excellency. Hence it appears that the title was rejected after fullconsideration.

In a debate which afterward occurred when the first Congress was preparing an address to be presented to President Washington, it was proposed to address him as His Highness or His Mightiness, and the Senate favored the adoption of some title; but the House refused to concur. A committee was appointed to consider the subject of annexing titles to the offices of President and Vice-President, which reported "that it is not proper to annex any style or title to the respective styles or titles of office expressed in the Constitution." This report was agreed to by the House, but rejected by the Senate. It was then moved in the Senate to address the President as His Excellency, and the motion was voted down. A committee of conference was then appointed, which reported that it would be proper to address the President as "His Highness, the President of the United States of America, and Protector of their Liberties." No action was taken on this report by the House, but the Senate postponed its consideration, adopting a declaration that in accordance with the custom of civilized nations the Senate had favored the annexation of a title to the office of President; but that, in order to preserve harmony with the House, it was resolved "that the present address be to The President of the United States, without addition of title."

Of course President Grant accepts the title bestowed by Mr. Curtis, as he undoubtedly would that of His Mightiness or His Majesty, provided he thought it was not used satirically; but how can President Grant or the great loyal masses be expected to know any better when a gentleman of intelligence and experience makes such a mistake.—New York Sun.

The Democratic Party.

We have preferred to stand aloof as silent spectators of the controversy which has been going on for the last two or three weeks, in several prominent journals in various parts of the country, respecting the probable future of the Democratic party. We feel no special call to come into the arena now, at least not as combatants. The little we have to say shall be without heat, in the cool temper of critics.

Our first observation is, that this discussion is confined, for the most part, to the Republican press, including in that designation as well the Republican journals that supported as those that opposed Mr. Greeley, in the last Presidential canvass. The only Democratic journal of any distinction that has entered the lists is one that acted outside of all party lines in the political contest of last year. The most active spirits in this controversy consist of those who assume that the Democratic party is bankrupt, and wish to be appointed administrators of its assets. What they advocate is an abandonment of the Democratic name, a dissolution of the organization, and the construction of a new party on some fresh basis, broad and liberal enough to include all the dissatisfied Republicans. This proposal is put forward by journals that either never acknowledged, or last year abjured, allegiance to the Democratic party, and it has elicited little comment out of their circle except by the regular Republican journals. In other words, the Democratic organization is to be dissolved and its name abandoned by the men who do not compose it! This is very much as if the Puseyites should amuse themselves by inventing and discussing a project for disbanding the Catholic Church and admitting its members into some new but as yet undiscovered communion.

Another obvious remark is, that even if the Democratic party itself contemplated such a movement, no period could be more unreasonable than the present for beginning it. No new elections important enough to awaken general interest are coming in a long time yet; no new issues are emerging on which party lines can be drawn; and consequently a new party, formed now, would consist only of leaders without rank and file. That is, it would not be a party, but an uneasy, fussy junta.

Another remark, to which we perhaps attach more importance than may be conceded to it by others, is, that it is desirable, after every great political contest, that the reins of party discipline be held with a loose hand until the near approach of a new struggle with the adversary. The Democracy is a party of progress; and there is no more healthy principle of growth in the ideas of a political party than the utmost latitude and freedom of discussion in the intervals between elections. All attempts to bind three or four millions of freemen to a tame uniformity of belief, are a trespass on the rights of the human mind. When elections approach, and we are under the necessity of acting together to accomplish public objects, we meet in friendly council, compare views, and adopt a platform which is a rough approximation to the average sentiments of the party as enlightened by the untrammeled discussions of the intermediate period. The advocates of a new party prate a great deal about "Progress;" but they show how little they understand the conditions of progress, by their proposal to forge a new cast-iron creed to bind by their crude, half-formed ideas of to-day party action in 1876. The Democratic party, spurning these would-be leaders and can't be statesmen, puts forth as its motto: the freest thought and discussion up to the moment when it is necessary to act? It would be absurd to act in 1876 on the imperfect knowledge of 1873. A genuine spirit of progress is in no haste to put fetters on the freedom of individual judgment. The only rational bond of union for a new party is a new party creed; but public thought is not sufficiently developed and matured for that, even if it were desirable.

These outsiders who rant for a dissolution of the Democratic organization would soon learn, if they could get access to a Democratic audience, that the party was never less inclined to adopt or tolerate their notions. There is a general conviction that last year's campaign was an egregious blunder. Instead of being prepared to go further in the same direction, the party recoils from every experiment of a similar kind. That ill-starred experiment never had anything to recommend it but an impatient hope of success. The party will not again foolishly burn its fingers by putting them into the same fire. He must be a verdant politician indeed who thinks this a promising time to convince the Democracy that they have anything to gain by ploughing with a strange heifer. If they had failed last year in spite of good management and strict party fidelity, this kind of appeal would seem more specious. We say to the quacks: we have taken your medicine once, and do not doubt at all that the larger dose you now propose would render further medicine unnecessary—by ending both disease and patient.—New York World.

An Original Abolitionist on the South.

The following is from the pen of William Cullen Bryant, whose trustworthiness as a witness, and whose honesty of expression, cannot well be doubted:

"In all my intercourse with the people of the South, although it has not been very extensive, nor of very long continuance, I have heard only the expression of a desire to be on friendly terms with us of the Northern States. Especially has this been the case in Charleston, where I saw more than elsewhere of the people of the place. I have never, since I crossed Mason and Dixon's line, heard a single expression of bitterness or malignity toward those who live north of it. It was but the other day that the people of Charleston sent a formal invitation to the President of the United States to visit South Carolina. He declined the civility, and, at the same time, removed the Postmaster of Charleston, Mr. Trott, who was highly esteemed, and for whose continuance in office the citizens, without distinction of party, had earnestly petitioned. In his place he appointed a colored man, who, whether justly or not, lies under the odium of being connected with the corrupt fellows who have for several years been pillaging the State. This was like answering an invitation to dinner with a slap in the face, and was a gross blunder, to say the least."

In saying this, Mr. Bryant testifies to two important circumstances: 1. That the Southern people have abandoned the rebellious spirit which once moved them in all their relations with the North, and that they earnestly desire to be restored to a condition of actual as well as nominal peace. 2. That the policy of the Administration is to refuse to recognize the spirit of the Southern people as it actually is, and to continue to harass them with the evils that were so generally inaugurated during the earlier process of reconstruction. This much has been said often before, but it is of particular import coming in so succinct a shape from a man whose ability to judge and whose honesty are unimpeachable, and after a personal examination of the field of which he writes.—Chicago Tribune.

A PATHETIC incident occurred during the floods at Binghamton, N. Y. Mrs. Fox, residing near the cemetery gate, heard, in the morning, a peculiar moaning in the direction of the cemetery. Going there she found a little child waist-deep in water and weeping near a head-stone, which marked a lonely grave. Upon being questioned she said that she lived a long way off. She had heard that the graves were covered by water, and she feared that her mother's would be washed away. So she went to keep her poor watch and ward beside it. She was kindly cared for, and returned to her motherless home.

ARCTIC PERILS.

Disastrous Termination of Capt. Hall's Exploring Expedition—A Voyage of Seven Months on the Constantly Melting Ice—The Story of the Perilous Voyage as Told by Capt. Tyson.

The reader has already been informed of the unfortunate termination of Capt. Charles F. Hall's Arctic expedition, in the steamer Polaris, which was fitted out by our Government, and which sailed from New York in June, 1871. Capt. Hall was stricken with apoplexy, and died in November, 1871. A year later the main portion of the exploring party became separated from the Polaris, and, after great deprivations, sufferings and narrow escapes on the ice of the Arctic sea, were finally, after months of peril, rescued by a whaler, and carried into St. Johns, N. B. Capt. Tyson, assistant navigator of the expedition, furnishes the following thrilling narrative of their sufferings and privations:

On the 24th of August, 1871, we left Tessinask and went through Smith's sound. We succeeded in getting as far north as latitude 82 degrees 16 minutes, when we returned and wintered at Polaris bay, latitude 81 degrees 38 minutes, longitude 61 degrees 44 minutes. We were frozen up until the 5th of September.

On the 10th of October Capt. Hall started on a sledge journey north, and returned on the 24th, when he was taken sick and died on the 8th of November. He was buried on the 11th. The attack that carried him off was said to be apoplexy.

We passed the winter at Polaris bay.

On the 8th of June, 1872, we attempted to go north with two boats. We hauled our other boat on shore and returned overland on the 8th of July. We started for home on the 12th of August, and on the 15th were beset with ice in latitude 80 degrees 2 minutes. We drifted from there down to latitude 77 degrees 35 minutes, when we encountered a heavy southwest gale, the ship being under heavy pressure. On the night of the 15th we commenced landing provisions, etc., on the ice, the vessel being reported as leaking very badly at times. We continued landing provisions for two or three hours, when the pressure ceased, and shortly after the ice began to crack, and a few minutes afterward broke in many pieces. The vessel broke from her fastenings, and was soon lost to sight in the darkness and storm.

On the broken ice were most of our provisions to sustain the party through the winter, and, seeing nothing of the vessel, we attempted to reach the shore in hopes of finding natives to assist us in living through the winter. Getting about half way to shore with our heavily-laden boats our progress became hard by the drifting ice, and I was compelled to haul on the ice again. At this time I succeeded in saving fourteen cans of pemmican, eleven and a half bags of bread, ten dozen one and two pound cans of meat and soup, fourteen hams, one small bag of chocolate weighing twenty pounds, some musk-ox skins, a few blankets, a number of rifles and abundant ammunition.

On its clearing up, I found myself within about eight miles of what I supposed to be the east coast, and about thirty or forty miles below the ship. The ice being weak I could not transport the boat and provisions to land until it grew stronger. While here, I discovered my other boat, etc., and saved all. The ice grew firm, and I made another attempt to reach the shore, carrying everything in boats, and dragging them on their keels. The ice being exceedingly rough, we stove both boats. We succeeded on the first of November in getting half way to the shore. Night came on us and very stormy weather. In the morning the ice was broken, and we were drifting southward very fast. We saw no more land for many days, the bad weather continuing all through the month of November. We built a snow house and made ourselves as comfortable as we could. We were ten white men, two Esquimaux, two women and five children in all.

We succeeded in killing a few seals, which furnished us with light and fuel with which to warm our scanty allowance of food through the darkness of the Arctic winter.

In the latter part of February we lived principally upon birds, and in March commenced to catch seals. Through that month we supported ourselves on bears' and seals' flesh, wasting neither skin nor entrails. We collected enough of food in this way to last until the middle of May, had we not been driven to sea by a strong westerly gale in the latter part of March, our floe-piece being then reduced from five miles in circumference to about twenty yards in diameter.

We left the place on the first of April, and abandoned nearly all our meat, a large amount of ammunition, clothing, skins and other articles, taking a portion of meat in a boat, which we were obliged to throw overboard on account of the boat being so deeply laden. I regained the outer edge of the pack of ice on the 3d of April, and succeeded in getting a little further in on the pack. On the fourth a heavy northeast gale set in, a heavy sea running under the ice, which broke it in small pieces, so that we had to live on a small scale, as we could not put our boat out; neither could we find seals for food, and we were reduced almost to starvation.

On the 21st of April we sighted a polar bear. Every person was ordered to lie down and imitate the seal, while two Esquimaux secreted themselves behind a piece of ice, enticing the bear near enough to us to kill him.

A few days after this we got our boat in the water and worked our way west and southwest, and continued to work every opportunity to the westward, in the hope of reaching the Labrador coast and getting temporary relief.

We were picked up by the steamship Tigress, Capt. Bartlett, on the 30th of April, in latitude 53 degrees 35 minutes north, longitude 55 degrees west, or near Wolf Island, and about forty miles from land.

The Polaris is now without boats, having lost two in trying to get north in the spring of 1872.

The Tigress fell in with the party in a dense fog, and providentially struck the very floe on which they were; otherwise they must have perished.

They all seemed tolerably well. Capt. Tyson complained of swelled legs and feet, but nothing serious is the matter with him. When they left the Polaris all on board were in good health.

In reference to the way in which the Polaris got away from the party which was rescued from off the ice, Capt. Tyson states that he felt little anxiety at first, thinking she would soon come to their relief.

"I set my colors," he said, "as she steamed down along the shore, but the vessel was soon lost to sight in a bend of the land, and behind what I took to be Northumberland Island. The piece of ice I was on commenced drifting southward. As the wind hauled to the north-east, opening a little bay to the north-east of Northumberland Island, I saw a vessel in the harbor there. Her sails were furled. No smoke was issuing from her smoke-stack, that I could see. I then attempted to bring my boats across the floe in an easterly direction, hoping to find water and reach the shore. I succeeded in dragging one boat across, and took to the water and attempted to reach the shore some distance below the vessel. We were then drifting very fast, and the gale was blowing fresh, with great violence, from the north-east, and snowing very fast and drifting. I was driven back in the ice again and compelled to haul my boat out. Night closed on me, and carried us to the southwest. In the morning we were about thirty miles southwest of where the ship went into harbor. A heavy sea was running, which broke up my floe-piece, separating us from six bags of bread and one boat. I saw a vessel under steam and canvas, rounding the point to the northwest. Thinking she would come to our relief, I gave myself no extra anxiety, but soon we were doomed to disappointment, and from that time until the Tigress rescued us we never got a glimpse of the Polaris."

Dr. Hayes Interviewed—He Thinks Capt. Hall was Murdered by Mutinous Men.

Dr. I. I. Hayes, the Arctic explorer, in an interview with a New York correspondent relative to the failure of the Hall expedition, expressed the opinion that the Polaris was unfit for the service, and that the injury to the vessel was caused by defects in her build. Capt. Hall, said the Doctor, was 464 miles from the North Pole; he (Hall) has proven what I have predicted long ago, that Smith's sound was navigable, and was the true passage into the open polar sea, which he seems to have reached. Why he was driven back I cannot tell; probably by drifting ice-fields or gales of wind, but I have no doubt that he had reached the polar sea. There is one remarkable fact about his explorations: He had constant sunshine all the time, and the survivors, who were drifting down the south waters, were all the time without a ray of sunshine. I can't understand why the ship, when it was so near the Northumberland island, would draw up before the ice and discharge its cargo on it. I think there was dissension on board, and it looks to me as though this party had been determined to leave the ship. There is a mystery about this part of the report that I cannot fathom. I think Capt. Hall has done a glorious thing. He has gone further north with his ship than any human being ever did before him, although others have gone as far in sledges. Capt. Hall seems to have broken the icebergs of Smith's sound, which baffled both previous expeditions.

He succeeded in reaching the point where both Kane and I claimed to have seen the open Polar sea, in latitude 82:16, the most northerly latitude ever reached by any ship. His ship was 219 miles further north than Kane's ship. I can't understand how the survivors were left to the mercies of the floe, unless there was a difficulty on board the ship. At the outset, at Drisco, there was some difficulty between Hall and Buddington. This was settled by the captain of the Congress.

There was something very mysterious in Capt. Hall's death. I wouldn't like to say that he was killed by one of the men in a mutiny, but it would almost look so. I have never known of any one dying in that region of apoplexy, and Capt. Hall certainly did not look like an apoplectic man. I think there is strong probability that the people on board the Polaris are safe, and that the vessel will be back here by September. The men who deserted the ship probably did so because of Hall's death. He was a brave and resolute man, and stout with a determination to reach the North Pole if it would take him five years to do it. He was one of the pluckiest men I ever saw, and would certainly have stayed two years more to accomplish his purpose, if death had spared him. Death or murder, I don't know which.

Prof. Baird, of the Smithsonian Institute, thinks the Hall expedition far from a failure, and has no doubt it realized many of the objects in view in sending it out.

Gladstone and Disraeli.

A London correspondent says: Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, unlike in so many things, are particularly unlike in their manner of entering the House. Mr. Gladstone usually slips in with a rapid step from behind the Speaker's chair. Looking suddenly at the front bench you see him there. Mr. Disraeli takes the opposite course. He enters at the door which is farthest from his seat. On a field night he ordinarily stays away until the chamber is full and curious. Shortly before 5 o'clock he saunters in, his coat unbuttoned and thrown back, one hand holding out his hat a little way, his step slow, his features wearing a stolid or indifferent expression. Strangers whisper, "There's Dizzy!" "Where?" "Why, just going up the floor to his seat." "Oh, I see him; dear me, so it is."

WHEN you wish to clean a lamp chimney, hold a linen cloth against one end of the chimney and place the other end in your mouth; breathe in it until it is covered inside with moisture, push the cloth into the chimney with a smooth, slender stick, and rub it around until the moisture is absorbed; repeat the process and breathe on the outer surface also; rub this with a cloth until dry, and you have a clean, bright chimney. Soft newspaper will take the place of a linen cloth. Do not use cotton cloth on glassware.

DES MOINES has sent sixteen people to loaf around Europe and spend their money with a foreign air this summer.

England's New Naval Monster.

The trial trip of the Devastation, the latest achievement in British naval architecture, is looked forward to with no little interest, for upon its results may possibly depend the entire reconstruction of the English navy. As the theorists have expressed the most divergent opinions on the merits of the new maritime monster, it will remain for practical experience—i. e., the storm and the waves—to determine whether this ponderous machine is only adapted for coast defense, or whether it can be employed in the open sea against an enemy. The Devastation is an ugly, savage-looking craft, very different from the gracefully-modeled, trim line of battle ships and frigates of former days, and its looks fully correspond with its name. The larger portion of its thickly-plated hulk is taken up by gigantic steam engines, while its armament consists of only two guns, but these are of the heaviest caliber ever yet put on shipboard. It is not arranged for sails, though the main mast weighs sixty tons. The Devastation belongs neither to the order of turret ships hitherto constructed, nor to the class of the so-called monitors, but combines what is believed to be the best features of both species. Whether this is actually the case the trial trip is expected to demonstrate. Old sailors doubtfully shake their heads, and predict that the "blasted tub" is sure to go to the bottom in the first gale. It is evidently with a view to such a contingency as that prophesied by the old salts that the Admiralty has adopted the most extensive precautions to save the crew and officers. Whatever the final result may be, the Devastation is a costly and risky experiment in naval architecture, and the issue will be watched by all maritime powers with no less interest than in England itself.

The Peerless Rose.

That loveliest specimen of woman, Aspasia, who lived in the days, and was the associate of Socrates, Pericles, and Alcibiades, in Athens, from a certain circumstance, worshiped the rose. Lovely in form and features, beyond the common lot of her sex, yet she had a hideous wart on her face, which marred all her enjoyment, and rendered her young life miserable. It defied all the arts of the doctors, nurses and caustics. One night the beautiful Aspasia, weary of life with that terrible wart on her face, cried herself to sleep. In her dreams a dove was sent to her by the Goddess Venus, and informed her if she would take some rose leaves and lay them on her cheek the wart would disappear. She did so, and she became as perfect in beauty as she was in intellect. That great orator, Pericles, divorced his wife to marry Aspasia. She was afterwards the cause of two wars—one between the Athenians and Lacedemonians, and the other the Athenians against Samians.

If we could induce some of the young ladies of the present day to divide part of the devotion paid to music with the cultivation of the peerless rose and other flowers, it would bring beauty to their cheeks, and more life and vivacity to their music.

The history of the past is full of adoration of the rose. Heliogabulus bathed in rose wine, and Nero had a fountain throwing up rose water, to supply which whole shiploads of roses were brought from Greece, the ancient home of the rose. There is no better index of refinement, as we pass the streets or public highways in the country, than to see this beautiful flower having a prominent place in the sitting-room, garden or lawn.

The Mountains of Colorado.

The mountain ranges of Colorado cover an area of 60,000 to 70,000 square miles. This excludes bodily the entire territory east of this point. All Switzerland covers but 16,000 quare miles, or, to be accurate, 15,990. The fact is, Switzerland, compared to Colorado, is one of the little toy cows to a living buffalo. You can take up the whole little State and set it down in either the North, Middle or South Park without touching the rim of the mountains which wall in these singular inclosures. These parks are each of them from 24,000 to 28,000 square miles in extent, and the San Luis is nearly as large as all three.

So far as to magnitude, which is certainly an element of mountain scenery—as to pure scenic beauty—of course the evidence cannot be reduced to figures, but it is reasonable to suppose that this vast expanse of gigantic ranges, endless canons, bottomless gulches, with its lake swung 12,000 feet in the air, and its cascades and icy waterfalls still higher—with its eternal snows and pre-Adamite stone forests of tropical efflorescence—offers all of picturesque and wild effect that any other land or region can claim. Call Switzerland the "Miniature Colorado of Europe" if you please, but let us have done forever with the other phrase, which has little or no meaning in itself when the above facts are considered.—Phrenological Jonrnal.

A Warning to Chewers and Smokers.

The terrible results of tobacco and whisky in shortening human life, and in impairing the mental faculties at an early age, have been exemplified in the case of William Cappago, of St. Joseph, Mo. The Herald of that city states that he was 121 years of age at the time of his death. He professed to have taken part in the whole of the American Revolution, and to have been at Yorktown when Cornwallis surrendered to Washington. He came through Kentucky when Daniel Boone was the only white settler in the territory, and spent some time with him in his cabin. For the past 105 years he has been a slave to the use of tobacco. This filthy habit led him to the use of intoxicating liquors. He erected one of the first distilleries in Missouri, and as the water in that section of the country was bad, and as there was a poor market for whisky, the became his best customer. Although he was acting Justice of the Peace during the later years of his life, it was noticed that his faculties were less acute than before he became addicted to the use of whisky and tobacco. It is to be hoped that all the youth who read an account of his early death will take warning, for few of them have constitutions that will bear up against abuses as long as this man's did.

AN exchange says: "We arise in the morning and with the brush of nature paint with roseate hues the path that lies before us." That is what he says. What he really does, after being kicked out of bed, is to get his pants on wrong, seize a brush of bristles, and paint with raven hues a cook stove as large as a livery stable. Poetry is one of those things it doesn't do to look into.

THE all consumming desire of the American people to make money is fruitful of many evils. One of the saddest illustrations of this is the case of young Ezra Short, who having engaged in the vending of oranges, and succeeding in disposing of a basket of them, was tempted to add a box of sardines and two dozen shoe strings to the stock, and is now going through bankruptcy. The more haste the less speed is an axiom that keeps well.

CONSIDERING the fact that scores of lives are lost every year by the pointing of guns at people "in sport," the New York Legislature has done well to pass a law making it a misdemeanor for a person to point a gun, even if it be unloaded, at another.—Exchange.

Even if it be unloaded! Why, bless you, those unloaded guns are just the ones that do all the damage. You never hear of a man pointing a loaded gun at another in sport. It is an empty gun that is pointed—a gun that was fired off and had its charge drawn, and was laid away by the defendant's father some thirteen years ago, and while there is no processes known to science by which that gun could be induced to go off if pointed at a bear, yet if pointed at a harmless individual who has come over to spend the afternoon and take tea, it would discharge in a flash and take off the top of his head, or tear out his insides, or otherwise disarrange him for business.

How to Begin an Article for Publication.

A great many people are apt to hit upon happy ideas in society, and when they go home they write them out for publication, and most of these good folks know how hard it is to begin an article satisfactorily. A word to them: Commence with your very finest writing and most beautifully rounded sentences. Introduce your subject in your most elaborate style, be poetical, rhetorical, didactic, as your mood may be, and when you think fit, gradually drop into the discussion of the subject-matter. When the article is finished, begin at the opening sentence, and read it until you find you have commenced to say something to the point. Stop at this place; strike out everything before it, and let your article begin just there. You will then probably find that it opens well, and that by collecting all your labored composition in one place where it can be readily stricken out, you will have saved yourself all the trouble that would have been necessary had it been scattered through the article.

Education of Women.

The New York Independent, remarking the fact that not one woman was saved on the fated Atlantic, although many had the same chance of life as the men, observes:

The strength of women at the crisis of their life depends on their physical culture while children. Let parents be no more ashamed of their girls' brown faces and fists than of their boys'. Let them train and clothe them so that they can run and climb and care for and protect themselves. Let them take them with their brothers into the harvest field. A boy is not ashamed of work; no more should be a girl. The refinement that shuts a girl out of God's sunshine, and allows her no rougher work in-doors than to embroider worsteds, or tap ivory keys, or dust a marble mantel, is refining her off of the face of the earth to give place to the daughters of the servants of the kitchen.

Snow a Warm Covering.

Last fall Mr. Spencer, who has a farm near Elk Rapids, filled a pit in his field with potatoes, covering them with boards and potato tops. During the night the snow fell, and he was unable to cover them with earth, and they remained in this condition until last week, when the covering of snow, potato tops and boards was removed, and the potatoes were found to be entirely untouched by the frost. Perhaps the most remarkable fact connected with this is that a coffee-pot half full of water was found to be as free from ice as when placed there last fall. This fact that snow effectually prevents the ground from freezing is one of the principal reasons why the soil is so soon ready for planting after the snow is gone, and also accounts for its sudden disappearance when it begins to go.—Grand Traverse Herald.

THE BATTLE OF THE BIRDS.—A couple of male robins, attended by what appear to be their female companions, have made the lawn of a suburban residence a place of daily resort for a week past, where the male birds have a regular daily battle. They fight as fiercely as game-cocks, drooping their wings and coming together on the grass with a fury that tears out quantities of feathers. Meeting in the shock, they rise together four or five feet from the ground, the town feathers flying briskly. This battle, daily renewed, has been going on for a week, and is still undecided. Whether it arises from jealousy or rival claims to the earth-worms in that particular lawn, cannot be ascertained. The females look on demurely, and wite as much seeming indifference as the old woman who watched the fight between her husband and the bear.—Hartford Times.

J. M. Metheany, the new Superintendent of the Southern Division of the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad, from Grand Rapids to Richmond 240 miles, is only 22 years old. Mr. Metheany became connected with the P. Ft W. & C. R. R., about eight years ago, as telegraph operator, and has been rapidly promoted to train dispatcher master of transportation and Superintendent. The President of the road has already complimented him for the efficiency with which he manages his road.

Gen. Garfield, Ohio, like Ben Butler, has resorted to writing letters to his constituents, to explain his lamb-like innocence in regard to the salary grab. He's not so bold and dashing as Ben Butler, but is willing enough to deal out soothing syrup to his indignant supporters. He says. 'If the delegates believe that the retroactive clause is so infamous that I ought to resign for voting for the appropriation bill to which it was attached, will follow out their logic and insist that the President ought to resign for signing it? My vote did not make it a law; his signature did.'

The following dun, printed and sent to his delidquent debtors, by a doctor of Edinburg, is the roughest specimen of literature we have ever seen in print The M. Pasutring on Clover.

T. L. Shepard, Lowell, Ohio says: As I have been puzzled by conflicting testimony in regard to turning cattle into clover, part of which I thought good, and part decidedly bad, I determined to give some rules so plain that the wayfaring man need not err therein, and here they are:

1. Never put anything into fresh clover pasture on an empty stomach
2. Never When the grass is wet?
3. Never put them in when the weather is changing from warm to cold.
4. Do not give any salt for at least twenty-four hours before putting in the first time, nor until the evening of the second day.
5. Do not let them remain in more

A methodist minister near "Little Haven" was invited to take tea by a member of that church. The food consisted of cake made of Indian meal. When the elder opened his slice he noticed some feathers in it. "It seems to mi sister," said he, "that your johnny-cake is feathering out. "There," the hostess replied, "I told my husband day that he must either get a cover for the meal barrel or remove the hen-roost!"

Independence is a good thing in the proper place; but it won't always win in politics. A man, if he desires preferment, had better keep inside the organization and promote harmony instead of discord.

There is a painful suspense in the public mind in relation to those Congressmen who made a great showing of virtue in resisting the salary grab, but who have, up to date, neglected to refuse to take the additional $5,000 voted them by their fellow-members. Did their virtue give out after the bill passed?

Newspapers, by enhancing the value o property in their neighborhoods and giving the localites in which they are published a reputation abroad, benefit all such, particularly if they are merchants or real estate owners, thrice the amount yearly of the meagre sum which they pay for their support. Besides every public spirited citizen has a laudable pride in having a paper which he is not ashamed of, even though he should pick it up in New York or Washington. A good looking, thriving sheet helps to give character to the locality; and in all respects is a desirable public convenience. If, from any cause, the matter in the local or editorial column should not be quite up to the standard, do not cast it aside and pronounce it of no account, until you are satisfied that there has not been any more labor bestowed upon it than is paid for. If you want a good, readable sheet, it must be supported.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The Springfield Republican thinks the deaths of Oakes Ames and James Brooks were hastened, though perhaps not occasioned, by their sense of public disgrace, and says:

"It is well to point this moral now: That the holding of high office in this country, however successfully it may be sought, or however lightly esteemed as a trust by its holder, does bring with it a certain responsibility, and does open some very serious possibilities, which no Congressman with a moral sense can afford to disregard. There is something terrible in public censure, when visited with slow and reluctant accumulation upon public servants who have misconceived or misapplied the opportunities which their position gave them."

A very Daniel of a judge dwells in Memphis. He came to judgment the other day in a case about a goose. This graceful fowl fell into the river, and it was rescued by a man and brother, who claimed salvage from its owner, an Italian. The latter wouldn't pay it, and produced a persuasive pistol, whereupon the colored person marched off with the goose, and got a warrant for assault. Then did the goose's owner swear out an answering warrant for the goose. The judge, perplexed, fined both of them and kept the goose himself. The sad Italian grumbled, whereat this wise young judge observed that he needn't ask any more questions, for he would get no answer.

The war between the thirty-seven States of the American Union, headed by General Grant, and the thirty-seven Modoc Indians under Captain Jack, is still in active operation, with the advantages apparently, thus far, on the side of the latter, although every Indian has an entire State opposed to him. We suggest that the Government advertise for proposals, and let this war be conducted on our part by contract. There are many private parties, especially on the frontiers, who have had much experience with the Indians, who would give bonds to the United States that they would catch and exterminate every Modoc in far less time and at one-quarter less expense than will be the case if the Government manages it. This letting wars out by contract has been talked about for a long time as practicable and expedient, and we could not have a nicer opportunity to test it than in this affair with Captain Jack.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Sins of a Great City.

We not long ago published an account of the enticement of three young misses into a Longworth street assignation house, and of the subsequent finding of one of the more wanton of them in a West End bagnio. The girl was returned to her mother, who keeps a boarding housh on Fourth street, not far from Central avenue, and remained there in apparent contentment until Wednesday night, when she disappeared. The friends of one of her companions in the former escapade was missed from home at the same time, and the worst was of course surmised. Officers were procured, and a fruitless search through the most likely places in the city was instituted. From clues obtained it was then deemed probable that the child—for she is scarcely more—had been taken by her paramour to Dayton, Ohio, and Mr. C. B., a young lawyer boarding in the mother's house, was commissioned to pursue. He left the city in chase, but has not yet reported results. There are those who believe that the girls are yet in the city.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

More Railroad Troubles.

Isaac R. Jones, a merchant of New York, bought a ticket at Dayton yesterday morning to ride on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton railroad to this city. When near Hamilton he came to the conclusion to stop over one train and see one of his customers. He told the conductor, (J. M. Short), that he would like to have a stop-over check, and was told the check he had given him would answer. Mr. Jones stopped at Hamilton, and took the next train to the city. The conductor refused to recognize Mr. Short's check, and demanded pay, which was refused by Mr. Jones. At Jones' Station the conductor and brakemen seized upon Mr. Jones, who is a tall, muscular man, and attempted to eject him from the cars. There was much excitement and indignation among the passengers; seats were torn up, glass broken, and Mr. Jones had his clothes badly torn, and, although he was severely bruised, they did not put him off the train. On his arrival here he employed Gen. Tom Powell as his counsel, who commenced suit against the Company, laying the damages at $5,000.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

We have taught England a great deal in the matter of locomotion, and it is simply an act of justice that she should teach us something. To judge by recent advices, we can now learn something from her, and that, too, on the vexatious subject of rapid intramural transit. A car that has recently been put upon the tramways, as they are called there, of London, is moved by steam, the boiler and engine occupying the centre of the car. It fills a space of only three feet, and does not at all interfere with the passage way from one end of the car to the other. What is more singular, the heat is imperceptible, and the noise scarcely audible, so the objection to ordinary dummy engines, that they frighten horses, is entirely removed.

The Art of Scalping.

The troops in the Modoc region are adopting the savage mode of warfare to some extent. They even scalp their victims on the field, as the accounts of the late fighting inform us. Since scalps are to be among the trophies of modern warfare, it is well to know how they are taken, cured and preserved. Gen. Custer, in an article in the May Galaxy, introduces the subject. He says:

"These scalps, according to the barbarous custom, were not composed of the entire covering of the head, but of a small surface surrounding the crown, and usually from three to four inches in diameter, constituting what is termed the scalp-lock. To preserve the scalp from decay, a small hoop of about double the diameter of the scalp is prepared from a small willie, which grows on the banks of some of the streams of the West. The scalp is placed inside the hoop, and properly stretched by a net hoop. After being properly cured, the dried fleshy portion of the scalp is ornamented in bright colors, according to the taste of the captor, sometimes the addition of beads of bright and varied colors being made to heighten the effect. In other instances the hair is dyed, either to a beautiful yellow or golden, or to crimson."

This is the Indian fashion, and we doubt whether it can be greatly improved upon by civilized warriors.

A Young Lady Hangs Herself in a Fit of mental Derangement—A man Blows His Head Off With a Shot Gun.

One of the saddest cases of suicide in the city for many months occurred yesterday at 643 West Washington street, near Robey. The cause was undoubtly mental derangement, the result being the taking of her own life by a very beautiful and accomplished young lady. For some time past, the suicide, Miss Nellie A. Crawford, has resided with her brother at the residence named She has been suffering from a painful affection of the spine, so severe at times that occasionally her mind has been affected. Nothing however, of a nature which could lead her brother or his wife, with whom she was living, to suppose she contemplated self-destruction. As usual, the family all went to church yesterday afternoon leaving Miss Crawford at home alone. When they returned, a few minutes past 12 o'clock, they found her hanging with a rope around her neck and life entirely extinct. The deed could not have peen committed a great while, as the body was still warm and the muscles were not rigidly set. The sad suicide has thrown an almost shroud-like gloom over the family and friends of the deceased. Miss Crawford was only 24 or 25 years of age, and a very bright and accomplished lady. The Coroner will hold an inquest on the remains to-day.

Yesterday afternoon about five o'clock an Irishman named John Coffee committed suicide by shooting himself. The deceased resided at the corner of Clinton and Maxwell streets and at the time indicated took a shot gun, tied a string to the trigger and put the muzzle of thegun to his mouth. Then placing his toe on the string he discharged the gun. The head of the wretched man was almost blown off. The deceased was 50 years of age, and a widower. His remains was conveyed to the residence of his daughter, Mrs. O'connell, No. 540 South Halstead stree, where the coroner will holdan inquest to-day.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Quaker's hat blew off and went rolling through the mud. He chased it, and finally pinned it to the earth with his staff. He then beckoned to him a neighboring small boy, of vagrant and illicit aspect, and inquired: "Is thee a profane lad?"

The lad intimated that he sometimes did business in that way.

"Then," said the Quaker, laying a coin in his hand, "be good enough to damn that hat fifty cents worth."

A wandering showman in Indiana found the ugliest and most misshapen man he ever saw, and engaged him for a gorilla in his show, said gorilla to look as much uglier than nature made him as possible, and keep his mouth shut, and receive his board and $25 a week into his paw paid. He agreed to become a dumb beast for these tempting considerations, and made a great success in playing gorilla in looks and manners and gorilla repulsiveness generally. The showman eventually made a pilgrimage to Chicago with his fat woman and emaciated man, and an educated pig and a snake or two. The Chicagoians believed in the gorilla, and wanted him to settle among them. He might have made a big speculation if he had only known it. Chicago would have come down handsomely for such a citizen, if he had only consented to be civilized. But the poor gorilla went to the Mayor, the other day, and told him all about it, and complained that he was nearly starved, and that the showman had never paid him a cent of his wages for making a beast of himself. Like some other monkeys, he could not keep his mouth shut, and if he don't get out of Chicago pretty soon, he will have to go to work again with a hoe, or some other industrial implement.

A Touching Romance.

Into the arid atmosphere of politics and bread and butter sometimes comes a bit of romance of melting sweetness. Of such is is the story of two lovers and a remorseless father, as it has just been told by a Bostonian, must of course be true Ten years ago a beautiful young Boston girl was sent to the Vermont hills to arrest, if possible the indications of approaching consumption. She recovered her health, and meantime inflicted a cureless wound upon the heart of an intelligent and well-educated young farmer's son.

Unlike Lady Vere de Vere, she did not scarn his timid affection, but returned it heartily, referring him to her father. That traditional unromantic personage wouldn't hear of it. "Never-r shall a base born mechanic wed me child!" The young man retired, went West and made a large fortune, and the young woman married the man prescribed by her father. She went to live in France; her husband died in two years, and her parents also dying, she remained abroad. The memory of first romance faded with her as with its object, who, though unmarried, was too busy in making money for tender thoughts.

Last year his business took him to Europe, and one night found him on a little steamer plying between Marseilles and Leghorn. A storm came up, and a lady who had risen from her seat on deck to go below, was thrown overboard by a sudden lurch of the vessel. The "base mechanic" jumped after, and though in the dark the steamer drifted away from them, they clutched a providential plank and floated until morning, when they were picked up by another vessel. During that night in the cold and darkness, they discovered in each other the loved and lost of earlier years. The old feeling came back in that fearful hour, and on their arrival at Malta they were married. End of poetry. The rest is prose.

Blaine, of Maine, again. This time on a new track. Showing a new spot to catch a coming political mackeral. If elected Speaker of the next Congress he gives out he will reappoint all the chairmen of committees, to rid legislation of the last traces of the Credit Mobilier! Syndicates of a journalistic sort are now forming in Washington to strengthen the pretenses of the aspiring candidates for the Speakership—Blaine and Maynard. Both of these gentlemen are said to be distributing appealing letters where they will do the most good, defining their positions on pending measures, and illustrating their matchless fitness for the place. Mr. Bline claims all the virtue of clean hands in the Credit Mobilier business, while those who know the facts assert that it was merely accident or sharp practice that kept Blaine's name from the list of delinquents. As it was he figured in the Sioux City railroad affair, and acknowledged growing enormously rich out of three or four terms of Congress. Maynard, of Tennessee, is the protection candidate for the Speakership, and has only the claim of true blue loyalty to the party to back him, and that don't amount to so much as it used to. It is significantly hinted, however, that a new candidate is preparing in Washington, which shall take this apple of discord into entirely new hands.—Ind. Sentinel.

There is but one coal shaft now lying idle in the vicinity of Knightsville.

LEFT ALONE AT EIGHTY.

BY ALICE ROBBINS.

What did you say, dear—breakfast?
 Somehow I've slept too late;
You are very kind, dear Effie;
 Go tell them not to wait.
I'll dress as quick as ever I can,
 My old hands tremble sore,
And Polly, who used to help, dear heart,
 Lies t'other side of the door.

Put up the old pipe, deary,
 I couldn't smoke to-day;
I'm sort o' dazed and frightened,
 And don't know what to say.
It's lonesome in the house here,
 And lonesome out o' door—
I never knew what lonesome meant
 In all my life before.

The bees go humming the whole day long,
 And the first June rose has blown;
And I am eighty, dear Lord, to-day,
 Too old to be left alone!
O, heart of love! so still and cold,
 O precious lips so white—
For the first sad hours in sixty years
 You were out of my reach last night.

You 've cut the flower. You're very kind;
 She rooted it last May.
It was only a slip; I pulled the rose,
 And threw the stem away.
But she, sweet, thrifty soul, bent down,
 And planted it where she stood;
"Dear, maybe the flowers are living," she said,
 "Asleep in this bit of wood."

I can't rest, dear—I cannot rest;
 Let the old man have his will,
And wander from porch to garden-post—
 The house is so deathly still;
Wander, and long for a sight of the gate
 She has left ajar for me—
We had got so used to each other, dear,
 So used to each other, you see.

Sixty years, and so wise and good,
 She made me a better man;
From the moment I kissed her fair, young face,
 Our lover's life began.
And seven fine boys she has given me,
 And out of the seven not one
But the noblest father in all the land
 Would be proud to call his son.

O, well, dear Lord, I'll be patient,
 But I feel sore broken up;
At eighty years it's an awesome thing
 To drain such a bitter cup.
I know there's Joseph, and John and Hal,
 And four good men beside;
But a hundred sons couldn't be to me
 Like the woman I made my bride.

My little Polly—so bright and fair!
 So winsome and good and sweet!
She had roses twined in her sunny hair,
 White shoes on her dainty feet;
And I held her hand—was it yesterday
 That we stood up to be wed?
And—no, I remember, I'm eighty to-day,
 And my dear wife Polly is dead.

COMPARATIVE VELOCITIES.

Velocity means rate of motion. But what is motion? Could there be found, anywhere through space, a point of absolute rest, from which to date as a starting-point, we might quickly give the old-time answer that motion is change of place. And were there any degree of speed, however great or however small, measured from any such point, which might be used as a unit of velocity, we could as easily define what we mean by rate of motion. But, when we come to realize that no such fixed point has been found, and no unit of velocity agreed upon, that every known particle of matter is in absolute motion, and that their motions are in every conceivable direction, and, with every conceivable degree of velocity, the case is materially altered.

This is an unenviable predicament for one who would write intelligently, if he could, on a subject that certainly possesses some interesting points. Our fathers had a much easier time. With them there were many fixed points—broad earth, with its firm rocks and immovable hills—from which they could measure motion at will. But that time was long since—before those arch "heretics," Copernicus and Galileo, played such wild work with the foundations of physical faith, proving, to the satisfaction of everybody, except the Pope and a few other conservators of the old regimes, that "the earth does move," thus striking away the only fixed points from which to measure absolute motion. This was not all the mischief done—it was only the entering wedge. For a time, after the earth had been abandoned to the resistless whirl upon its own axis, and the stupendous orbit round the sun assigned to it by Copernicus, the minds of a few rallied around the sun itself as a fixed center; and others looked, as a last resort, to those twinklers on high, which to this day are called "fixed stars." Alas! they are fixed only in fancy. Science has demonstrated that the sun is no better behaved than the earth, but is whizzing through space, like a great red-hot cannon-ball, shot in the direction of the constellation Hercules, and that the starry hosts are all engaged in a brilliant dance, more grand and nimble-footed than imagination can conceive, in some order, and probably around some center, as yet beyond the reach of science.

This upturning of all the old settled notions about rest and motion would seem to have been pretty thorough, but it was scarcely the half. When any one, wearied with the ceaseless motions of sun, moon and stars, sought relief by looking to the earth in hopes to find something here that was at least relatively at rest, they shared the fate of the dove sent out from Noah's ark. True, there were many things relatively at rest as to their external forms, but, when their interiors came to be critically examined, it was discovered that, not only is every living creature, whether animal or vegetable, a laboratory, with various departments, forever alive with pumping, pushing, heating, cooling, depositing, rejecting, but that even the atoms of hardened steel and other adamantine things, instead of being at perfect rest among themselves, locked each to each, as our fathers thought, appear to be in a state of endless activity, how great in proportion to their several magnitudes we know not, but perhaps even to the extent of rotation upon their several axes, and even of revolution round each other, like stars in the unwearied sky. So says theory; and if it prove to be true, then is there no rest this side of heaven.

In this state of affairs, what are we to do for a zero and a unit? We must appoint them for ourselves, of course, and the simplest plan will be to adopt the principle involved in that queer German philosophy which distributes the whole universe into two grand divisions, "The Me" on one side, and "The Not Me" on the other, and suppose each man to make his person the zero, and his rate of locomotion the unit of measure. Now, it is true that this plan involves an almost absurdity; for, if each man makes his person a zero, he is in fancy—his own fancy, by-the-by, the center of the universe—the fixed point from which, and to which, and tangentially related to which, all motion proceeds. But, if he is a fixed point, he cannot move; so that, as he strolls upon the surface of the earth, it is not he that [illegible] and thereafter over it, but the earth that moves hither and thither under him; or, as he walks leisurely away from the foot of a mountain, it is not that the flexors and extensors of his legs, acting upon their appropriate bones, shove him away from the mountain, but shove the mountain away from him. Ridiculous, however, as this may seem, let every intelligent man, and especially every astronomer, think before he laughs; for it is identically the principle which is adopted in the gravest and sublimest of sciences, when it describes the zenith, the highest point of the visible universe, as culminating directly above the observer's head, and the nadir as the point directly beneath his feet, and the horizon, the apparent boundary between earth and sky, as a circle of which his eye is the center.

Having thus secured our starting-point and our unit of measure, we give our attention first to the lesser velocities. A man's rate of locomotion, as deduced from the march of an army, is fairly stated at twenty miles a day, two miles per hour, and three feet per second. The slow pace of the ox, and the still slower of the tortoise and the snail, whatsoever lessons they may teach of the wonders to be accomplished by perseverance, have little the aspect of romance. We let them pass.

The slowest motion in nature, of which the naked eye can take cognizance, is that of a star, as it passes over a small moveless twig, while the watcher rests his head against a support. The star, we mean a fixed star, can never be magnified by the most powerful telescope to be more than a point of light, and we might reasonably expect that in passing the twig it would be suddenly and wholly quenched on one side, and as suddenly appear in full glory on the other. But this is not so; its fading occupies a number of seconds, probably because the pupil of the watcher's eye is broad enough to graduate its light into a kind of penumbra.

But there are motions in Nature too slow to be perceived except after a lapse of time, though we are certain of them as we are of the march of an army—the growth of a plant, for instance; that is, the increase of distance between its root and the terminal bud. True, farmers tell us that they can sometimes hear their corn grow; for that, in a rich bottom, after a shower, in growing weather, the shuck will crack audibly of a still night, as its overlapping parts give way to the increasing ear. But who yet, unless it be whilom Jack, of moon-climbing memory, ever professed to see the growth of anything, even of the most rampageous vines?

Slow as these motions are, however, they are rapid in comparison with others, which are familiar enough to us all, though few persons may have ever had the curiosity to calculate their rate. We find it to be three feet in diameter, and one hundred and fifty feet in length, from the earth to its topmost twig. On counting its concentric rings, each one of which required a year for its deposition, we learn that it is three hundred and sixty years old. These figures enable us to determine that the growth of the tree upward has been at the average rate of five inches a year—a low rate of velocity, truly! But what shall we say of that other velocity, represented by the increase of size from the center of the trunk outward? Eighteen inches in the three hundred and sixty years is at the rate of one-twentieth of an inch in one year, or 1-7300 of an inch a day, or 1-175300 of an inch an hour.

Slow as these rates of motion are, they are as truly velocities—however they may seem rather to be tardities—as the flight of arrows, or as the flashing of sunbeams, for all velocities are comparative.

Let us now exchange the microscope for the telescope; in other words, turn from the lower to the higher velocities.

The ordinary rate of human travel on foot is estimated at twenty miles a day. But men have not been content with this snail's pace. They first increased their speed by the use of horse-power, which gave them an average rate of thirty or forty miles a day. Then they devised steam-power, the average locomotive rate of which no one as yet is able to specify. Already the newspapers have announced, in large capitals, the astounding fact—a feat which, only a few years since, required tenfold the time. Enormous, however, as this rate of travel seems to be, when compared in the aggregate with former rates, it will be shorn of much of its apparent glory when small portions of the average are compared with other well-known rates; for twenty-five thousand miles divided into seventy-four parts gives the average of not quite three hundred and forty miles a day, or fourteen miles per hour. This rate was not only attained, but even exceeded, by many a juvenile savage of the Pacific islands, who would learn to balance himself on the forward declivity of an ocean-billow, and ride his wild horse shoreward until lodged upon the sands. What is the speed of these billows has probably never been estimated, but those in mid-ocean have been known to outrun the storms that raised them, and to have attained a velocity of forty or more miles the hour. The average rate of travel, indicated by the average of "Round the world in seventy-four days," is far from being the highest attained in traveling. Forty miles per hour, equivalent to about one thousand miles a day, is not uncommon, although, if any one will look out of the car-window at the rugged sides of a railroad-cut, while traveling past them at this rate, he will be apt to feel his blood curdle at the thought of a possible crash. Yet even forty miles an hour is by no means the maximum. Twenty years ago, express trains on some of the best constructed English railways were run at the fearful speed of a mile a minute, and, on a special occasion, when a sudden emergency demanded it, a locomotive and its tender were reported to have been forced up to nearly one hundred miles an hour.

We turn from this fierce rate, so painfully suggestive of accident, to another which is far greater, yet gentle and pleasant. Any one who will watch the play of a woodman's ax, at the distince of a quarter of a mile, will be amused, no matter how often it has been witnessed, to note the difference in time between the fall of the ax and the sound of the blow reported to the ear. At that distance the stroke is heard while the ax is lifted in the air, ready for the succeeding blow. A careful measurement of the velocity of sound shows that, although it varies much with varying circumstances, it travels usually at the rate of about five miles a minute. This speed is oftentimes made visible in the flight of a cannon-ball; for, although the initial velocity of the ball is so much greater than of sound that persons killed within the range of a mile are usually struck before the report could be heard, yet so greatly is its flight retarded by atmospheric resistance that it soon slackens to less than the velocity of sound. The two rates are therefore so nearly alike that either may be taken as a pretty fair representative of the other.

Should the time ever arrive—and there is no telling what may or may not be expected—when railway speed shall equal that of sound, then several rather queer-looking phenomena will be within the bounds of possibility; e. g., were signal cannon to be planted at each mile-post along the road, and fired at the instant of the cars passing at this rate, no report would be heard by any of the passengers aboard, until the train had slackened speed at the next station, five, ten, or twenty miles ahead, at which time all the reports would come thundering together! Again, were a cannon-ball fired after the train, from a point directly in the rear, at the distance of a quarter of a mile, it is doubtful whether it would overtake the train at all, unless swifter than some cannon-balls of our day; or, if it should succeed in entering the open back door, it would move with such seeming laziness that a passenger might easily capture it in his hat!

This brings us to consider two highly-interesting velocities in which all dwellers upon earth are vitally concerned, yet to which few people have deigned more than a passing thought. The description just now given of the maximum rate of travel attained, and possibly attainable, on railways, was penned by the writer with bated breath, for he had a vivid recollection of the thunder and rush of forty miles the hour over a railroad not so smooth and safe as it is now. More than one reader, probably, will sympathize in the feeling. Now, were the highest rate already attained, of sixty, eighty, or a hundred miles the hour, increased tenfold, who would willingly trust himself aboard any train of cars, on any railroad built by human hands? Or who, being aboard, would think of lying down to sleep, except under the full meaning of his childhood's prayer. "If I should die before I wake?" Yet there is not a mother's son or daughter of us who has not been riding at this tenfold rate all our lives, and been going to sleep, too, every night of our journey, as quietly and trustfully as little children do within reach of a parent's arm. It is true, our road is very smooth and very safe, never having experienced, during the last six thousand years, the first jolt or jar, much less the first "run-off" or collision. But the fact that our so-called car is the earth, and its great superintendent the Almighty Creator, does not in the least diminish the velocity with which we travel; nor need it diminish our wonder, though we must admit that it adds vastly to our sense of security.

The motion of the earth has been spoken of as if it were one only; but, of course, no one can forget that it is twofold. In its daily whirl upon its axis, all who live at the equators are swept at the rate of twenty-five thousand miles in twenty-four hours, or upward of one thousand miles an hour. Those who live in latitude 60 degrees, move at exactly half the speed. The average rate at different points of the United States may therefore be set down at about seven hundred miles the hour—more than double the velocity of sound or of a cannon ball!

And now what language shall we use in speaking of that other motion of the earth in which we all participate! We make a yearly circuit round the sun of about five hundred and fifty million miles. To do this requires a velocity of one million five hundred thousand miles a day, or sixty-two thousand miles an hour, which is upward of one thousand miles every minute! This is a speed which is actually inconceivable. Yet at this rate, as was just now said, we travel without jolt, without collision, and even without fear of evil. We sit comfortably in our easy-going car, look complacently at the stars, past which we so madly rush, then go to bed and sleep and dream, and awake in the morning, and seldom think of the grand equipage in which we are traveling at the rate of sixteen miles a second.

At this point of our survey it might seem the dictate of reason to stop, since we are already beyond the boundary of the conceivable. But, although past that boundary, we are far from having reached the limits of the calculable. The electric fluid, shot along our telegraph-wires, so far outstrips the daily motion of the sun that a cable dispatch dated London, five o'clock p. m., of any day, is delivered in Washington City about twelve o'clock m. of the same day. The rapidity of its transmission, though seemingly indefinite, or, as we ordinarily say, instantaneous, is not actually so. There is an appreciable portion of time in its transit, and that time has been measured. The distance by wire between Cambridge, Massachusetts, and San Francisco, California, is about thirty-six hundred miles. In an experiment undertaken for the purpose of testing its practical velocity, the electric spark was sent and returned over this distance in three-fourths of a second; a rate sufficient to carry it round the earth in two seconds and a half, or to complete the circuit of the earth's orbit in two hours and forty minutes, instead of three hundred and sixty-five days.

We have but one more velocity to notice. It is that of light. Until the year 1675, the passage of light was supposed to be instantaneous, and the discovery of the truth was the result almost of accident. The celebrated Romer had calculated with great precision the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites when that planet and the earth were on the same side of the sun. To his surprise and perplexity, however, the eclipses took place sixteen minutes too late, when Jupiter was on the side of the sun opposite to the earth. Every obscuration and reappearance of these satellites took place exactly in the order predicted, and at nearly the calculated intervals, but they were regularly sixteen minutes behind time. The only solution of the phenomenon was to be had in supposing that light requires sixteen minutes to pass through the diameter of the earth's orbit, i. e., one hundred and eighty-four million miles. This astounding fact was soon corroborated by other testimony, until now there is scarcely any fact in physical science more firmly established than that light travels with the enormous velocity of one hundred and ninety-two thousand miles a second.

To form a conception, as near as possible, of this degree of speed, let us put two things together. Were the earth girdled with a speaking-tube capable of conveying sound all its length, or at the rate of five miles a minute, a message around would occupy five thousand minutes, or eighty-three and two-third hours, or nearly three and a half days for its passage; whereas light, if it could be sent around on the same track, would encircle the earth eight times between each beat of a second-measuring clock!

Here, now, we are compelled to stop. There is no greater velocity in nature known to man. The transmission of gravitative force is known to be greater, but it is given up that that must be instantaneous; for, if not absolutely so, it must be (so Laplace calculated from reliable data) at least fifty million times greater than that of light.—Appletons' Journal.

Demoralizing Effects of the War.

The effects of war appear to be pretty much the same everywhere. Of the state of affairs in Paris, after the close of the Franco-Prussian troubles, we have heard a good deal, but the vail disclosing the condition in Berlin has just been raised. A pamphlet recently published in Germany, entitled "Berlin's Moral and Social Condition," tells the story:

"Out of a population of eight hundred and thirty-two thousand, one hundred and twenty-five thousand are receiving public charity. In 1867, nine per cent. of the population lived in cellars, and twenty per cent. in crowded apartments. Since then, two hundred thousand souls have been added to the population, and rents have increased greatly, so that the poor are compelled to pay nearly half their earnings for decent shelter, and numbers have been forced to sleep out of doors. It is said to be dangerous to go through the streets unarmed, because of the increase of the rowdy element, and petty riots and conflicts with the police are frequent. More than half the population are working people, and the city has become the center of the socialistic movement. Many of the workmen also openly favor community of wives. Divorces have increased to ten per cent. of the number of marriages solemnized. The attendance at the churches has decreased to one per cent. of the adult population, and, of twenty-three thousand funerals in 1870, nearly twenty thousand were performed without any religious ceremonies whatever. Women flock by the thousands to Berlin to obtain employment, and, failing, large numbers fall into shame."

Co-operation.

The desire to profit by co-operation is showing itself among other classes than farmers. In a town in New England they have a co-operative stable, in which horses are fed and cared for at cost. Many people there cannot keep a horse and carriage, because to do so requires a stable, and a boy or man to take care of the horse. But one large stable will accommodate a hundred horses, and the labor required to take care of them is greatly reduced; so, too, the hay and grain the horses eat can be bought much cheaper if purchased by the quantity. In New York city an association of clerks purpose to build a large, plain hotel, and to run it on the co-operative plan. The stockholders are to have their board at cost; while an advance will be charged other regular boaders and transient company. In this way clerks hope to have a home of their own, and to very greatly reduce their present board bills. Long ago, in London, the Government clerks established a co-operative store when unadulterated groceries were sold to stockholders at cost. Shopkeepers complained that men who were receiving money from them by way of taxes were injuring their trade, but the officers of the department replied that the clerks had a perfect right to keep up the store, and that it was an encouraging sign to see them doing their best to live on their salaries, and to save something from them, if they could.

Bad News for Bald-Headed Men.

Dr. J. M. Toner, of Washington, a physician of large experience and a close observer of facts, says that according to his observations nearly all persons of both sexes who lived to the age of 80 years and over retained a considerable if not a complete suit of hair at the time of their deaths. He concedes that there are exceptions to this rule, but insists that a large majority of persons living at the age of 80 or upward retain a comparatively good suit of hair, or are not bald. His hypothesis is that a person who retains his hair past the age of 65 has a good prospect of living to be over 80. The rule may be tested by any one calling to mind the ages and condition of the hair of persons of his acquaintance of the ages indicated, the condition of whose hair is known to him. The vast majority of persons who become bald, or lose their hair, do so between 35 and 45, and these rarely live to be over 65 to 70 years of age.

The Blujay.

The blujay iz the dandy amung birds, a feathered fop, a jackanapes by natur, and ov no use only tew steal korn and eat it on a rail.

They are a misterious bird, for I hav seen them solitary and alone in the wooded wilderness, one hundred miles from enny sighns ov civilizashun.

Az a means ov diet, they are just about az luxurious az a biled indigo bag would be, such az the washwimmin use tew blue their clothes with.

The blujay haz no song—they kant sing even "From Greenland's Icy Mountins;" but i must say that a flok ov them, flying amung the evergreens on a kold winter's morning, are hi colored and eazy tew look at.

It iz hard work for me to say a harsh word aginst the birds, but when i write their history it iz a duty i owe tew posterity not to lie. JOSH BILLINGS.

The Trent Difficulty.

Another story of the solution of the Trent difficulty is told by a Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press: There is better authority than either Mr. Adams or Mr. Welles for saying that neither the Secretary of the Navy, nor of State, was the author of that diplomacy. The news of the capture of Mason and Slidell was so sudden and so unexpected that for a time the entire Administration was at a loss to know what to do. Mr. Lincoln, of course, consulted with his Cabinet Ministers, especially with his Secretary of State. With all his ignorance of foreign affairs, of which Mr. Adams accuses him, he saw that so grave an event would, in the state of feeling then existing in Great Britain, probably involve us in trouble. But the great question was how to dispose of it. In this, as in many an other emergency, Mr. Lincoln sought the advice of Senator Sumner. That statesman outlined a plan to Mr. Lincoln which he thought would at once protect the dignity of the Government and satisfy the somewhat imperious demand of Great Britain. The President was so impressed with it, that, in an impassioned manner, he said to Mr. Sumner, "Now, please, Mr. Senator, go straight to Seward and tell him what you have told me." Mr. Sumner did so. The idea that Sumner suggested was subsequently embodied in the famous dispatch which was addressed to the British Cabinet, though the language was Mr. Seward's. By invitation of Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Sumner was present at the Cabinet meeting where this dispatch was finally considered, and his opinion was sought as eagerly as that of any other gentleman present. These facts destroy a little of that romance of Mr. Adams which represents Mr. Seward as coming to the Cabinet with his dispatch already prepared without having consulted any person, and with its having been accepted, without discussion, as the views of the Government. It is not my intention to detract from the just renown of Mr. Seward, but something is due, also, to those who upheld his hands and strengthened his heart in the great conflict to sustain the Union.

How's Tricks!

There is a doctor in this city who has a speaking tube leading from the main entrance of the building to his office, which is up just a few flights. For several days past, a smart young wag named Swartz has amused himself by calling for the doctor through the pipe and then profanely ordering him to set out on an excursion to Tartarus. For some time this fun was taken in good part, until the fine humor of the joke no longer became apparent. Accordingly, one afternoon, the disciple of Esculapius provided himself with a teakettle of water, heated to about two hundred and ten degress Fahrenheit, and waited alongside the pipe. Pretty soon the old familiar sound came up through the pipe:

"Say, Doc., how's tricks?"

"Tricks is better now—I guess he'll get well," responded the Doctor, reaching out after the kettle.

"What's been the matter with him?"

"He's got burnt."

"How?"

"Oh, you to h——!"

The doctor had finished his last sentence and then let a quart of scalding water down the pipe. Swartz had his mouth over it, and when the water struck it he was somewhat surprised. Water was apt to surprise him, but hot water was an unexpected novelty.

The man above poured in the water for about a minute and then looked out of the window. The smart young man was getting along the sidewalk at a pretty lively gait, having evidently just got up from a sitting posture. He was trying to yell "police," but couldn't articulate with much success. About half an hour afterward he found himself able to speak, and inquired:

"Did that boiler explosion hurt anybody?"—San Francisco Chronicle.

How Goodyear's Secret Was Stolen.

In a late number of Hearth and Home, Mr. N. S. Dodge tells how the secret of vulcanizing rubber was stolen from Goodyear. After this great inventor had perfected his process and applied for a patent in this country, he took some samples of his prepared rubber and exhibited them to Charles Hancock, of the great rubber firm of Charles Mackintosh & Co., of London. Leaving the samples with him, to test their excellence, and offering to sell them the secret of their preparation for the sum of £10,000, Mr. Goodyear paid a visit to Paris. The temptation now came to Hancock to try and find out how the American had prepared his rubber. Persuaded by his partners, he employed the best analytical chemists in London, who worked night and day till they found out that the rubber contained sulphur. Having made this discovery, it was easy to see that these substances could only be combined by means of heat. As the proportions could be accurately determined by analysis, it was easy to combine them at different temperatures and to note the results. Soon specimens were prepared in all respects equal to Goodyear's. The day before his return the firm of Charles Mackintosh & Co. had applied for a patent on vulcanized India rubber. Mr. Goodyear called at the office to hear their decision about purchasing his secret, but learned that they did not want to buy.

THE CUBAN WAR.—The last authentic news received from the seat of war in Cuba is of a decidedly favorable character. The patriots are not only steadily holding their ground in the Eastern Department of the island, but gain slowly outside of it. They have now a sufficiency of arms, though their quality might be better, and have lately received a large supply of ammunition. The officers are drilling the blacks with great assiduity, and the men show by their tact and devotion that they are both earnest and sanguine of ultimate success. The ranks of the patriots are reported to have latterly received considerable accessions from slaves, who seize every opportunity to leave their Spanish masters.

IT is said that "necessity is the mother of invention," but go to the Patent Office, in Washington, and they will tell you that invention is the mother of necessity. Nine inventors out of ten die poor; the other tenth die mad.

THE WOODMAN.

BY [illegible] WRIGHT.

All day long the stalwart woodman
Swings his glittering ax amain,
And the stricken mountain monarch
Moans with heart-consuming pain.

Each incessive stroke is followed
By a clean-shouldered-cut chip—
Tough enough to pin together,
Some Alaskan ice-struck ship.

Round about his feet collecting,
Reaching even to the knee—
Two white heaps hewn from the bosom
Of that stout and stately tree.

And at length a timid tremor
Steals upon each limb and leaf;
And a groan so very human,
Now a wail akin to grief.

Hark! a sound as if of thunder
Shakes the hill and shakes the sky,
And the echoes catch each other
As among the rocks they fly.

Now the woodman stands a moment
To regain his failing breath,
And with open, careless collar
Breathes in rosy, hill-born health.

Then he mounts the fallen monarch,
As a king might mount his throne,
And he triumphs in the conquest,
Which his arm hath won alone.

Log on log of lengthy sedgment
Down the hillside soon it rolled—
Where the plow ere long will struggle
To explore the virgin mould.

Now the heaps are nightly kindled,
And the fires light up the sky,
And a more than boreal brightness
Beams about the hill-tops high.

Now he builds his cribbed cabin,
Fences 'round about a field,
Which no foeman e'er can conquer,
Which no freeman e'er will yield.

Sprinkled be our land with cabins;
Grandeur but provoked a groan—
And liberty is ever cradled,
In the cots that poor men own.

A LA MODE OCTOSYLLABIC.

"Since the Modocs, concealed in their lava, defy
 Our troops' metallurgic conchology,
Let Science," said Jones, with a wink in his eye,
 "Extract them by Modocimology."

"This is clever," said Brown; "and I would not be thought

"WHAT's that picture on?" said a countryman in our hearing the other day in a print store, to the proprietor, who was turning over some engravings. "That, sir," said the dealer, "is Joshua commanding the sun to stand still." "Du tell! Well, which is Josh and which is his son?"

MAKERS of fishing tackle, whose season is now at hand, complain of the scarcity of features for the manufacture of artificial flies. One of them says that all the feathers have flown to the heads of women, who are little better than artificial flies themselves with the hooks very well concealed.

A GALLOWSTOWN lady recently requested her husband to go to the dressmaker and tell her that she (his wife) had changed her mind and would have the watered silk made up instead of the poplin, and that, "if she thinks it would look better with bias flounces without puffing, and box-pleaded below the equator, which should be gathered in hemstitched gudgeons up and down the seams, with a gusset stitch between, she can make it up in that way, instead of fluting the bobinet insertion and piecing out with point appliqué, as I suggested yesterday. The man is now a raving maniac.

Noted Old Men of Europe.

President Thiers, the vigorous ruler of France, was seventy-six years old on the sixteenth day of April last. He comes of a long-live race, and promises to hold out for several years yet. The Emperor William, of Germany, is twenty-five days older than President Thiers, and is full of life and energy. These illustrious personages may be classed among the noted old men of Europe; but when we come to the old man, the Count De Waldeck, we have one who is old enough to be the father of them both. This remarkable man is alleged to have been born on the 16th of March, 1766, over three years before Napoleon was born, and is therefore now in his 108th year. He is actively engaged in Paris, in various enterprises, and is reported to have laid his plans for several years ahead, with as much assurance of living to complete them as though he were only in middle age. It may be that one so old gets into the habit of feeling that he is immortal.

THE PROFITS ON BEER.—Beer is the poor man's wine. Why should he pay two prices for it? Beer is sold to the saloons at $2 a keg. We have been informed that the average number of glasses drawn per keg is over one hundred. An expert tells us that when he was in the business a keg was good for 105 glasses. At five cents per glass this would give $5.25 per keg to the retailer, yielding him a profit of $3.25. This is an indecent extortion. If the retailer pays $2 per keg and gets $3.15 for it over his counter, that is ample compensation for handling. But, we are told, the small concerns could not live without more than fifty per cent. profit. Let them die, then.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The Earth's Future.

Dr. Winchell, President of Syracuse University, has recently published an essay on the "Geology of the Stars" which will be of interest to all who are troubled as to the future of the earth. He gives a summary of the present condition of scientific knowledge with regard to the history of matter, from its nebulous to its stellar, and, finally, its planetary condition. On the probable future of the earth, the first two phases throw no light, but the last does. There is no moon, as every one knows, no present evidence of the existence of atmosphere or of water; but "their former existence is a fair and direct deduction from the doctrine of the common origin of the earth and moon." But if they once existed, how shall we explain their disappearance? They have been absorbed by the rocks. In an age long gone by, the moon was in the same physical condition as the earth. The water on its surface, or that which descended in periodic streams, as it percolated the porous rocks and thin crust of the moon, soon reached a temperature which dissipated it in vapor, and returned it to the surface to be recondensed. But the moon having only one-forty-ninth the bulk of the earth, cooled forty-nine times as rapidly as the earth, and at length a temperature was reached and the rocks on the surface took it in faster than it could be evaporated again. "The moon is a fossil world, an ancient cinder suspended in the heavens, once the seat of all the varied and intense activities which now characterize the surface of our earth, but in the present period a realm of silence and stagnation." Such will be the fate of the earth. Already our planet has passed through the "ring condition" now presented by Saturn, and the stage now seen in Jupiter, in which "a water mist begins to condense in the peripheral regions," and gathers with a vaporous envelope; this precipitates an aqueous rain, which ultimately finds a resting-place upon the incrusted nucleus. Later, life makes its appearance. Then comes the terrestrial stage, in which we now are, and in which the "organic phase culminates." Then comes the phase in which Mars now seems to be be, with diminished vapors and infrequent rains, encroaching cold, and "decline of the organic phase." Last of all will be the stage in which the moon now is, beginning with the disappearance of aqueous vapors, ending with the total absorption of ocean and air, the extinction of organization and refrigeration. "The progressive cooling of the earth will allow the water to circulate deeper and deeper. When the thickness of the terrestrial shell, which must be saturated with water, has doubled, the increased demand must lower the waters of the ocean, and long before refrigeration has reached the center, the thirsty rocks will have swallowed the sea and all our surface waters. The drained, and shrunken zone lying nearer the surface will suck in the atmosphere, and this will disappear in the pores and caverns of the earth.

Spurgeon on American Lecturing.

The other day Mr. Spurgeon gave an account of the invitations he had received to go America. "I will tell you," he said, "one little thing that happened to me this afternoon. I had a letter from a gentleman well known in America, giving me this offer, $25,000 for twenty-five lectures—that is £200 for each lecture. On these terms the twenty-five lectures would give me £5,000, and that in a hundred nights I should have $20,000. Besides this I should be allowed to lecture for as many more nights as I chose, so that I might, in the course of a year be worth £40,000, and no doubt the persons who undertake this would earn ten times the amount.

"I have nothing to do but to leave you for a year, and come home with twenty or forty thousand pounds, while if I stay here I shall have nothing like that. What do you suppose was my answer to this offer? I wrote: "If you were to multiply that offer by one hundred times, and again by one hundred times, I should feel it just as easy to decline as I do now, when I say I cannot cross the ocean to lecture upon any subject whatever. I am a minister of the Gospel, and never lectured for money, and don't intend to do so now; and if my people do not support me, it is a pity.' Some people would say, why not go over to America and get the money to build the college. I shall not do so, because I shall not do one thing to disgrace myself nor degrade you. I shall not make any appeal to another country to do what you can and ought to do. There are two brothers here to-night who have received offers from America. Each man can lecture as well as preach, and there is no harm in their having 500 pounds and a holiday. If I were in their position I should do the same thing; but I cannot leave the college, nor the orphanage, not if my house were filled with silver and gold from top to bottom. I should feel if I went to America that I should not go to preach the gospel, but to lecture; and I cannot do this, no, not for the national debt."

A painter once wanted a picture of innocence, and drew the likeness of a child at prayer. The little supplicant was kneeling beside his mother; the palms of his uplifted hands were reverently pressed together; his rosy cheek spoke of health, and his milk blue eye was upturned with the expression of devotion and peace. The portrait of young Rupert was much prized by the painter, who hung it up on the study wall and called it "Innocence." Years passed away, and the artist became an old man. Still the picture hung there. He had often thought of painting a counterpart—the picture of "Guilt"—but had not found the opportunity. At last he effected his purpose by paying a visit to a neighboring jail. On the damp floor of his cell lay a wretched culprit named Randall, heavily ironed. Wasted was his body and hollow his eye; vice was visible in his face. The painter succeeded admirably, and the portrait of young Rupert and Randall were hung side by side, for "Innocence" and "Guilt." But who was young Rupert and who was Randall? Alas! the two were one. Old Randall was young Rupert led astray by bad companions, and ending his life in the damp and shameful dungeon.

Omitting the Prayer.

On last Friday West Tate, colored, was hung in Elleston for the murder of another negro. When the Sheriff, at 34 minutes past 12, adjusted the rope around his neck and fastened the cap over his face, he began to show signs of feeling. The Sheriff descended the steps, and as he did so he could see the waiting criminal tremble and his knees knock together, betraying considerable agitation. A minister was summoned to pray, when, just as he was about to commence his petition to Almighty God in behalf of the victim, the doomed man, with the words, "I s'pose I might as well get off myself," slipped from the scaffold and thus attempted to hasten his fate. The Sheriff mounted the scaffold hurriedly, and, with assistance, raised the now apparently senseless and lifeless body, whose limbs had no power (nor did he utter a single sound), to the platform, on which he laid it, and carefully adjusted the rope about his neck. Descending, he consulted the minister, and it was thought best, under the circumstances, to dispense with the prayer. He then lengthened the rope to suit the position of the body—which, though it had not hung by the rope one minute, still betrayed no signs of life—and sprung the trap at 43 minutes to 12, and the soul of this poor, ignorant creature was launched into eternity. In five minutes after the body was swung off respiration ceased to be observable. The legs were drawn up several times, and he vainly tried to raise his hands, to relieve his neck from the strangling rope, which in the peculiar fall of the body had been displaced, the knot being just above the left jaw-bone, and the greatest strain being on the right side and back of the neck, causing the head to fall back in an unnatural position. The breathing up to the time had been very labored, accompanied by something like a suppressed snore. Though the breathing ceased at the expiration of five minutes, the pulse still continued to beat, and in thirty-five minutes he was dead.—Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.

The Alligator.

In one of her letters from Florida, Mrs. Stowe thus writes of the alligator:

"Amid this serpent-like and convoluted jungle of scaly root, how natural to find the scaly alligator looking like an animated form of the vegetable world around. Sluggish, unwieldy, he seems a half-developed animal, coming up from a plant—perhaps a link from plant to animal. In memory, perhaps, of a previous woodland life, he fills his stomach with pine knots and bits of boards, wherever he can find one to chew. It is his way of taking tobacco. I have been with a hunter who dissected one of these animals, and seen him take from his stomach a mass of bits of bricks, worn smooth, as if the digestive fluids had somewhat corroded them. The fore leg and paw of the alligator has a pitiful and rather shocking resemblance to the human hand, and the muscular power is so great, that in case of the particular alligator I speak of, even after his head was taken off, when the incision was made into the pectoral muscle for the purpose of skinning, his black hand and arm rose up and gave the operator quite a formidable push in the chest."

The West Side Briggs House, Chicago, changed hands May 1st, and is now under the management of Mr. B. H. Skinner, so favorably known in the hotel business for twenty years in Chicago. He was formerly proprietor of the Briggs and Metropolitan in ante-fire times. This house is the most centrally located of any hotel in Chicago. It is immediately accessible to the wholesale houses, railroad depots, and all parts of the city by cars and 'buses, they passing the front door of the house. Passengers arriving or departing by either the C., M. and St. P., C. and St. L., or P., Ft. W. and C. Railroads avoid omnibus transfers. The furniture is new throughout, the table is second to none, and the price only $3.00 per day. Do not fail to go to the West Side Briggs when visiting Chicago.

Success Based Upon Merit.

It is a subject of general remark, among both wholesale and retail druggists, that no medicine introduced to the American public has ever gained such a popularity and met with so large a sale in all parts of the land, in the same length of time, as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This cannot depend upon its having been more largely advertised than any other medicine, as such is not the case. The correct explanation, we think, is found in the fact that this medicine produces the most wonderful and perfect cures of very bad cases of bronchial, throat and lung diseases, is undoubtedly the most perfect and efficient remedy for all kinds of coughs that has ever been introduced to the public, and at the same time possesses the greatest of blood-purifying and strengthening properties that medical science has been able to produce, thus rendering it a sovereign remedy not only in the cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Hoarseness and Coughs, but also for all diseases of the liver and blood, as scrofulous diseases, blotches, rough skin, pimples, black specks and discolorations. It has therefore a wide range of application and usefulness, and it not only gives the most perfect satisfaction to all who use it, but far exceeds the expectations of the most sanguine, thus eliciting the loudest praise, and making permanent living advertising mediums of all who use it. For these reasons it is that there is not perhaps a druggist in all the vast domain of this Continent, who tries to please his customers and supply their wants, that does not keep and sell large quantities of this most valuable medicine.—[Com.

The Midnight Horror—Croup!—Is instantly and effectually layed by giving Dr. Ransom's Hive Syrup and Tolu or Honey Syrup. The lives of many suffering children have been saved by administering this valuable remedy in attacks of Croup. All families where there are children should keep it in the house. Price only 35 cents.—[Com.

Dr. Miller's Magnetic Balm.—Does it contain electricity? It cures as if by magnetic influence Neuralgia and all pain, and is therefore being properly called Magnetic Balm.—[Com.

Chapped Hands, face, rough skin, pimples, ringworm, salt-rheum, and other cutaneous affections cured, and the skin made soft and smooth, by using the Juniper Tar Soap, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York. Be certain to get the Juniper Tar Soap, made by us, as there are many imitations made with common tar which are worthless.—[Com.

To persons who seek insurance on their lives, we recommend the New York Life Insurance Company as the most popular institution of its class in America. On account of its large assets and popular plans, agents find it a most desirable company to represent. If one desires a pleasant and remunerative business, and does not care to risk capital, he can find it with this company. But it requires a wide-awake, active and energetic man. A good business can be done in any locality. The vacant territory is being rapidly taken up, and persons interested should apply at once to the head office, 346 and 348 Broadway, New York.

Put Yourself in His Place.

Reader, put yourself in the place of a dyspeptic and bilious patient under the old-fashioned, regular treatment. Allopathic doses of blue pill, purgatives that go through him with the impetuous rush of an avalanche, opium when he can't sleep, and a little beef tea to keep him alive under the assaults of the medicine men upon his stomach, his intestines, his liver, and his brain, all these he has to endure. Is it any wonder that he becomes dreadfully weak, emaciated and dejected? Reader, if you have any "gumption" you would, under any circumstances, and at all hazards, decline to put yourself—otherwise than suppositiously—in that man's place. Now put yourself in the place of a person with the same complaints who has had the sense to resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a remedy. He takes that agreeable and potent vegetable tonic and alterative, we will say, three times a day. As a necessary consequence his appetite returns, his digestion improves, his bodily strength increases, his bowels become free and regular, his sleep is sound and refreshing, his spirits grow buoyant, the tinge of health returns to his complexion, and in a few weeks the cure is complete. This is no fancy picture; it is a brief abstract of the experience of thousands of dyspeptic, bilious, debilitated and despairing patients. Is it necessary to ask the reader in which of the two places he would put himself, if afflicted with any disease of the stomach, the bowels, liver or the nerves?

If you have Fever and Ague, try Shallenberger's Antidote. You will then know of one remedy that never fails. The cure is immediate.

Scrofula, the dreaded, yet wide-spread Scourge of the Human Race, can be cured by Dr. Jayne's Alterative; it overcomes the disease thoroughly by driving it from the system.

HEALTH. BEAUTY.
STRONG AND PURE RICH BLOOD—INCREASE OF FLESH AND WEIGHT—CLEAR SKIN AND BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION SECURED TO ALL.

DR. RADWAY'S
SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the Sarsaparillian Resolvent excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by RADWAY'S RESOLVENT.

PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, May 29th, 1873

What a strange mix the Ohio Republican State Convention got into last week. They first endorsed the administration of Gen. Grant, and then condemned the salary grab as "unwise," after Grant signed the bill.

Secretary Richardson announces that he will put an end to the practice of nepotism in his nepartment. This may cause an invitation to be extended him to retire, unless he can convince the occupant of the White House to follow in his footsteps.

There is not to-day a country in Europe which is trodden so relentlessly under the iron heel of the military as the State of Louisiana, or where so little attention is paid to the voice of the people Poland has been cited, but the Government there is liberal compared to Kellogg's usurpation. Grant seems to be testing the endurance of our people to its fullest extent.

Senator Sherman joined hands with Senator Thurman, and vowed not to touch the back pay. They are afraid of ,reflecting,' however and made up their minds to let it go to the Treasury fund, but as that could only happen after two years, they will now draw it and deposit it with the Treasury. Meantime Treasury Spinner has not heard a word officially from Morton, Coburn and company, though those gentleman hinted that they "didn't mean to."

General Mackenzie has won a feather or two for his cap by his recent plain teaching to the Kickapoo Indiand—those chronic marauders of the Texas border. He met the enemy in the Santa Rosa Mountains, some distance north of Cohahuila, Mexico, and after a sharp engagement caused the unconditional surrender of nineteen, they all dying with great celerity. If this raid is properly handled the long desired Mexican war will be brought about.

A terrible storm visited Washington and Keokuk counties Iowa last Thursday. When cattle are carried in the air like birds to be cast down and buried in the earth and trees torn up are shot like arrows by the wind, the limit of storm power becomes an infinite quantity. As these phenomena are incidents govered by no law of time or place, precaution against them in a general way is futile. Those who escape have only to rejoice in their good luck.

True to the instincts and the base demands of his party, President Grant comes to the aid of the infamous thieves and rascals who have usurped the function of State officers in Louisiana. He has issued a proclamation warning the men who dare maintain their rights in that State to disperse and desist within twenty days or abide the wrath of the General Government. When the people of the Southern States can't be despoiled through fraud, the bayonets of the Federal Government are turned upon them. This is our Republic.

The efforts of the army of the United States to conquer thirty or forty Indians braves have been crowned with partial success. Fifty-five Indians, including fifteen warriors, have surrendered. There are perhaps twenty unvanquished warriors remainining They want some more peace talks. They would like to converse with General Davis alone. The General is not so conversationally inclined as was Gen. Canby. He is more in the shooting business. He will give the Modocs a short time, in which to come to his camp and give them selves up, after which he will shoot every one of them found with a gun. There is a prospect of a speedy termination of the Indian war which will have been more bloodless than was feared.

There has been a pretty lively excitement along the Ohio river for the past day or two about cholera. A certain boat, the John Kilgour, which arrived at New Albany from New Orleans, on Thursday, had several cases on the trip, three of them fatal. But a careful investigation shows that in every case except, perhaps, one, the parties attacked had filled themselves with vegetables, oranges, bananas and whisky, amounting to practical suicide the cause being aggravated, of course, by the sudden hot weather. Prudent and cleanly people are in no special danger. Others always are, and ought to be.

Senator Matt Carpenter has been making a speech at New Orleans. He is one of those ingenious orators who can suit almost any party or any crowd and he does not hesitate to adopt himself to the situation, regardless of his past actions or his own convictions. This seems to be the case in his New Orleans speech. His utterances were calculated to impress his hearers with the belief that he sympathized with their political persecution. He denounced Durell the United States Judge who is responsible for the Louisiana villainy, and he told the people that, while Kellogg was not really their Governor, they must abide by the law until Congress should set matters right. He forgot to say distinctly that Congress, at its last session, had a better opportunity to set matters right than it will ever have again, and that the principal reason that they were not then set right was because Senator Matt Carpenter went directly back on the constitutional argument which he had made in the Louisiana case—was whipped back under the Administration lash, and so divided the Senate that no relief was given to the situation in Louisiana.

The Convention of Western Congressmen at St. Louis and their tour of the West excite suspicion in Eastern members, and they are meditating a similar movement in the East. Fear of the growing power of the West and the determination of a people long outraged by monopolists to correct evils which have become not only burdensome to them but exceedingly dangerous, a movement is to be inaugurated to counteract the tidal wave in that direction The force of reason to urge relief from wrongs long suffered will be met with the power of money to continue corruption, and if the latter does not succeed, it will not be the fault of this Administration. For years the strife was between the North and South, now it is the East against the West—the monopolist against the producer. If the great West remains true to herself, it has nothing to fear. The danger lies in the corruption of representative men who reap their honors in the West yet under party discipline controlled by monopolies are made to serve the East.

The President of the United State is to have postage stamps, marked "Executive," manufactured for his official use, in order that his excellency's correspondence may be distinguished above the plebian missives of the common herd.—These stamps, with other separately distinctive onse for each department of the government, are to cost nearly $2,000,000 for the coming year, or, to be more exact, enough to cover the mailing of 62,196,666 half ounce packages. All of which goes to show how far our Republican (?) civilization is in advance of effete barbarism of Great Britain, where royal personages must fain content themselves licking and sticking the same vulgar pattern of postage stamp used by the meanest subject. So much for codfish.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis. over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Dav Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now complet ed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

SHERIFF'S SALE

By virtue of a certified copy of a decree to me directed by the Clerk of the DeKalb Cir Court, in a cause wherein James D. Kelly is plaintiff and Lucy A. Rench, Conrad Rench, Norman Ingraham, Margaret Ingraham, Joseph Kirkpatrick and Elizabeth Kirkpatrick are defendants requiring me to make the sum of Six hundred and thirty one dollars and eight cents, with interest on said decree and costs I will expose at public sale to the highest bidder,

Saturday, June 14th, A. D. 1873.

between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day, at the door of the Court House of DeKalb County, Indiana, the rents and profits for a term not exceeding seven years, of the following real estate, to-wit:

The west half of the northeast quarter of section eighteen, 18, township thirty four 34 north of range twelve, 12 east, in DeKalb County, Indiana.

If such rents and profits will not sell for a sufficient sum to satisfy said Decree, interest and costs, I will, at the same time and place, expose at public sale, the fee simple of said real estate, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to discharge said judgment, interest and costs. Said sale will be made without any relief from valuation and appraisement laws.

WILLIAM L. MEESE, Sheriff,
DeKalb County.

May 22, 1873.
$8.00.

To the Delinquent Tax-payers
—OF—
DeKalb County, Ind

Be it known that the delinquent list from the Tax Duplicate of 1872 is now in my hands for collection, and will pass into the hands of my Deputies on Monday the 22d day of June, 1873. Until then, taxes may be settled at the Treasurer's Office with the simple penalty of ten per centum and interest added.

Afterwards there will be other costs and charges added, whether payment be made to the collector in person, or at the Treasurer's Office. There will be further charges in case of collection by sale of goods and chattles and the legal fees for posting notices, together with a commission of five per cent and upward, owing to the amount of tax in question.

Bear in mind that no tax can be settled without the lawful fees after reaching the Deputies hands and no Treasurer or Deputy dares accept the fees without the tax.

In compliance with the recent enactments of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, the Deputy collectors will be positively compelled to enforce payment at once upon receipt of the lists.

The new law further provides that Deputies, as well as the Treasurer, has the power of all times to levy upon personal property of delinquents, wherever such may be found, to satisfy both land and chattle tax. The law provides that when property fails to sell where first offered, it may be removed to some other township, and again exposed to sale.

Deputies will be held responsible under bond and oath for the return of every dollar collectable by law.

The new law compels Treasurers to collect the tax of delinquents where there is personal property that he can levy on to make such tax, if he fails to make such tax, when it can be done in this manner, he will have to pay the whole amount of such tax himself, at his settlement with the Auditor of this County, and also certify to the same under oath to be administered by the Auditor.

Now, let me kindly urge each delinquent taxpayer, to avail himself of this timely notice, and call and settle his tax account before the 22nd day of June, 1873, as the Treasurers are bound, under the new law, to show no favors to any one.

Very Respectfully Your Obedient Servant,
NICHOLAS ENSLEY,
Treasurer, DeKalb County, Ind.

Board of Equalization.

Notice is, hereby given that the Commissioners, Auditor and Assessor of DeKalb county, Indiana, will meet at the Auditor's office, in the court house in the town of Auburn, on the 1st Monday of June 1873, for the purpose of hearing and determining greivances and to equalize assessment of real and personal property, moneys, rights, credits and efects, on palls listed, made subsequent to the first day of April 1873.

Dated at Auburn, May 12th, 1873.
WM. MCINTYRE, Auditor.

The Laporte Herald says that our stocking factory is turing out 25 pair of stockings per day. It should have been per machine, and 18 machines makes 25 prs per day.

The Wheelock—McNormand, bastardy case has been dragging its slow length along in the Circuit Court for several days past. This case will close the present session. A special session will be called in August.

Rev. A. Marine, of Fort Wayne, preached in the M. E. Church, last Tuesday evening. There is something so original and so manifestly extempore about his sermons, that very few hear them and go away unsatisfied.

We commend to our lady readers the new fashioned three-decker hats for theatre, concert, opera and church use. They are constructed with a window in front and rear, to enable persons sitting behind to see what is going on.

The Canon Bros. are building up quite a large business in the painting line.—They are first-class workmen, and deserve what they are receiving, an extended patronage. See card.

Change of Time.—A change has been made in the running time of the Eel River and Saginaw Railroads. The express north in the morning and back at night has been taken off and a train goes north now 10:53 a. m. and back at 12:45 a. m.

In a few words we would like to remark that a few of our subscribers are still owing for the Courier, and that if we could afford it, they should have it for nothing, as they have been so prompt in—holding our money, but as we can't, as prompt a settlement would be pleasant.

Of the several remedies generally prescribed for the eradication of kidney, bladder and glandular diseases, diabetes, and maladies of the urino-genital organs none come up to the standard of Smolander's Buchu, which regulates the system and leaves it in a healthy condition.

And now comes the Winamac Democrat with the insolent declaration that 'when you see a young man largely developed behind the ears, with one of Beadle's dime novels in his hands, and a cheap cigar in his mouth, take a good look at him, he is your future congressman.'

We are glad to see that the old burial ground is receiving some attention. A subscription has been made, and Mr. C. Sheets has had charge of the work. The grounds have been relieved of briars and underbrush and nicely cleaned, looking now very much as if somebody had been buried there.

Hamilton Bros. Circus is announced for this place next Monday. Their agent failed to give us a call, and as we know very little as to the reputation of the establishment, we have no advice to give in the premises. It seems that common courtesy would suggest a call of this kind, whether patronage was extended or not.

Daniel Thomas, Esq., living four and a half miles north-west of Auburn, has just completed one of the finest farm residences in the county, at a cost of nearly $3.-000. He contemplates building a large brick dwelling at this place during the summer, which will add much to our town, and give due credit to his enterprise.

The man who is too poor to take a paper will be in town next Monday. He will fill his skin full of "Rotgut" at ten cents a drink, buy a couple of dollars worth of trash to last till harvest and take his family to the show—five or six dollars. But he will be too poor to pay two dollars for a home paper when he can get one from the city for a dollar and a half.

MacDougal, of Fort Wayne, has sold out his carpet store to Ellsworth Andrew & Co., who have largely increased their stock and are offering special inducements to the trade. This is the only legitimate carpet store in the city. Another establishment well supplied with shoddy are trying to build up a trade, and we warn the public to beware of them if they don't want to be swindled.

Our friend M. Long, Jr., has been appointed agent for the Watertown Fire Insurance Company, of New York. This company insures nothing but farm buildings, and private residences, and their contents against loss by fire or lightning. When you insure this year place it a company that absolutely declines to insure business or hazardous risks.

A section of the Indiana school law reads as follows: 'At the commencement of each school term, at each school house in their respective townships, the Trustees shall cause a notice to be posted up, directing where the township library is kept, and inviting the free use of the books thereof by the persons of the Trustees of this county comply with the requirements of the law?

As there are only one or two soldiers buried in our cemetry it is thought unnecessary to make any public demonstration. We trust there are some, however, that will not overlook them on that day, but quietly spread beautiful flowers over their graves.

Cover them over with beautiful flowers,
Deck them with garlands these brothers of ours;
Lying so silent to-night and to-day,
Sleeping the years of their manhood away.

The lawyer who conducts the legal column of the Plymouth Democrat, says:

Parties who go into court do not seem to understand what is meant by 'judgment for costs.' The impression seems to be general among those who obtain judgment for costs, that they are thereby relieved from further liability. This is a mistake; the party making the cost must pay them. He can recover them from the losing party if he is worth it; if not, he is out whatever costs he made. Parties interested will do well to make a note of this, and govern themselves accordingly. If they do not, they may incur the extra expense of a fee bill.

Try This Trick.—The latest amusement, says a "phunny phellow," is termed the "Printer's Delight," and is performed in the following manner: Take a sheet of note paper, fold it carefully, and enclose a bank note sufficiently large to pay up all arrearages for subscription, advertising and job work. And what adds immensely to the feat is to send along the names of a few subscribers, "with cash to balance." Keep your eye on the printer, and if you detect a smile the trick is a success. Delinquents, try this trick, and and if it don't do your hearts good, nothing will.

One of our friends of Waterloo, calls our attention to the fact that on the day of the show at that place, when the crowd in attendance was quite small, Marshal Rosenberry appointed twelve deputies to take possession of the crowd. When the town was visited last fall by some five thousand people, in attendence at the fair, this same remarkable official had the forsight to appoint one deputy to assist him in keeping order. When we consider the importance of the several occassions, the excellent discrimination officially displayed astonishes us. As the local paper there pays no attention to such matters, our friend is compelled to seek the columns of the Courier.

Our friend John Hebel, him with the rosy cheeks and rotund form, having become superlatively disgusted with the Baxter bill, withdraws on the 10th of June from the bloated bond holder's position which he has occupied in our midst for several years past, with a dignity that would grace a king, he steps boldly out from the reeking perversity of his career and with a gracious smile exclaims, "Dot d——d Baxter bill is blay ed ou-it, und dot pissness, too, so help me gracious." We welcome John with bloody hands—not exactly—we congratulate him on his assuming a more ennobling position, in the fitful dream of life, and in years after may he never look back and pine, "Oh for some of dot beer what used to was."

We don't know it will strike the general reader, but according to our way of thinking the annexed observation of a contemporary is strictly in conformity with eternal truth: "Many men fall of success in life, simply because they mistake their calling. We have seen preachers who would have made respectable blacksmiths and have done well at the anvil, but they were miserable botchers as ambassadors of Christ. The same thing has been noticed in other professions requiring brain power. It is an honor to be a skillful mechanic, but both disgraceful and ridiculous to be an awkward, mawkish jackass of a pettifogger, or a lifeless dunce of a one horse preacher, who could not awake a sinner had he the voice of a sixteen hand-high mule.'

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The District Conference of the Fort Wayne District met in this place last Monday, W. S. Birch, Presiding Elder, in the chair, and the following members present.

A. Marine, Fort Wayne; Wm. Lash, Allen; J M Brown, Harlan; E M Baker, Waterloo; A Cone, Auburn; W H Daniel, Leo; N T Peddycord, Butler; H M Lamport, Hamilton; M H Mott, Corunna; W E McCarty, Angola; A W Lamport, Orland; J P Nash, New Haven; J E Erwin, Kendallville; O D Watkins, Coesse; Y B Meredith, Columbia City · A C Pattee, Arcola. O D Watkins was elected Secretary and A W Lamport, Assistant. The following were appointed a committee on order of exercises:

Revs. E M Baker, Y B Meredith, J E Ervin.

A committee composed of Y B Meredith, N T Peddycord and J P Nash was appointed to nominate the various committees needed for the work of conference.—S C Miller, agent for the Fort Wayne College was introduced, also Rev W B Sandoe, of the Reform church.

A motion to blend the work of the ministerial association with that of the District Conference was lost.

The Committee appointed to nominate Committees reported.

On motion Waterloo was selected as the place to hold the next session of the conference.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

A resolution to enlarge the Presiding Elder's District was introduced and carried.

A motion on the merits of the present temperance law was offered which called forth extended remarks.

At 8 o'clock conference met and Rev. A Marine being selected to address the meeting preached from 8 c. 14 v., Rom 'For as many, as are led by the spirit of God they are the sons of God." The attendance was quite large, and the utmost attention given.

The Club meeting was postponed. It will give another dance before they have a meeting.

A Kendallville correspondent to the Ligonier Banner says:

The sequel to the singing school trouble, in the east part of this township, came off not long since in a fight just over the line in DeKalb County. Three Noble county boys fought thirteen from DeKalb, and put them to flight. The fight came off according to agreement, but the victims, feeling very sore, sent warrants after the Noble county boys.—The sheriff sent the papers to Capt. John R. Smith, who, in company with the Marshal of this city, proceeded to make the arrests. They captured two of them, but the third got away. During the chase the Deputy Sheriff fired two shots at him but failed in stopping him. The other two were taken to Auburn, and tried before Judge Tousley, who was holding court there at the time. The Judge said they should all have stuck to the contract, but had to inflict a fine of $3 and costs, which some thought was rather light; but then you know the Judge is from Noble county, and evidently felt some pride in the vicinity which our boys had won.'

For the Courier.

Mr. Editor:—We have all been startled by the sudden deaths of Mr. Milton Hornberger, on Saturday; Mr. Geo Clark's child, on Sabbath fornoon; Mr. Peter Ditmar's child on Monday evening, by Cerebro Spinal Miningitis or Cerebro Spinal Fever, with two cases of it in town this (Tuesday) morning, increases anxiety for our safety. The fears are that it m become an epidemic if proper precautions are not taken at once. Let me urge upon every one to use every precaution in dieting and in medical preventives. Apply at once to your family physician for directions and prescriptions and follow his advice and prevent, if possible, the spread of this deadly disease. I am not a physician, but I am interested in your welfare, as a citizen and by the ties of common humanity. A prominent physician told me this morning that he has been expecting it and has been advising his families with reference to it. Let us all be prudent and wise.

J. Emory Fisher.

We are informed by Mr. J. A. Campbell, of Butler, that some one in close proxmity to his residence very carelessly discharged a gun, the bullet from which entered the window and passed near where he was sitting. Such an act ought to be punishable.

We heard a gentleman, the other evening, singing "Open the window for me." and he wasn't on the outside of the building either.—Col. City Post.

That inside business was what made things so joyful.

Be careful when you go to Fort Wayne and want to go to the Red Front Clothing Hall, as some other stores will use our good name because we do such a large business. Our store is situated No. 5 Keystone Block, and called Red Front Clothing Hall.

Price list free to all for clothing and gents' furnishing goods; all it is to ask for them at the Red Front Clothing Hall, No. 5 Keystone Block. May 1, 2m.

Everybody coming to Fort Wayne to buy clothing is invited to stop at the Red Front Clothing Hall before purchasing, as we carry the finest goods in the State.—We buy 10 per cents cheaper than any house within 100 miles and pleasant words to all. We defy competion in our line as we sell cheaper than the cheapest and buy for cash; at Rothchild & Bros., No. 5 Keystone Block. May 1, 2m

Fort Wayne, the largest Railroad City in Indiana, is still increasing. More railroads are being built this summer, but Rothchild & Bro's., proprietors of the Red Front Clothing House, No. 5 Keystone Block are not back of their business.—Their trade is increasing, as they carry the heavest stock in Indiana. Good goods are the only kind allowed in our store, and sell goods alike to every person, and so we go on. (May 1, 2m.

MARRIAGES.

VAN AUKEN—WILLIAMS—On Sunday, May 25th, 1873, by Rev. A. Cone, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mr. J. J. VanAuken, of Pleasant Lake, and Miss Maggie Williams, of Auburn.

Nothing could give us more pleasure than to chronicle the union of two loving hearts like the above, both estimable members of society. Many warm friends join in sincere wishes for their future happiness and prosperity. May no terrible clouds darken their sunshine or hide from them the path that leads to peace and contentment.

DEATHS.

CLARK—Youngest child of Mr. & Mrs. George Clark was born Dec. 17, 1868, and died Sabbath morning May 25th, 1873, aged 4 years, 5 months and 8 days.

Last Saturday evening she came tripping down the road to meet her parents as they returned from town. She went to bed as well as usual, in the night she was taken sick and died before 10 o'clock that morning.

"THE FLOWER FADETH."

Lillie, precious little blossom,
Blooming with thy modest pride,
Youngest bud of all the number,
Angels plucked thee—thou hast died.

Died in early, sweetest spring time.
When all nature is most gay;
When the fragrant violets blossom
Decorate the lap of May.

Lillie, sleep! we would not wake thee
From thy rest to earthly care.
Sleep, among the richest flowers,
Fairest, Lillie, of the fair.

Plucked from earth, thou art transplanted
Where the lillies never fade,
Watered by the chrystal fountain
Fostered in that living shade.

Lillie, when the vernal sunshine
Brings its beauties rich and free,
When she ope's the fragrant lillies
Loved ones, then, will think of thee.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

LOUIS LOHMANN was hung at Morristown, N. J., on the 15th inst., for the murder of his wife; and on the following day Michael Nixon suffered a like penalty in New York city for the killing of Charles Phifer....Rev. Dr. Benjamin H. Paddock has been elected Episcopal Bishop for the diocese of Massachusetts.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS, the editor of Harper's Weekly, and late member of the Civil Service Commission, is filling the pulpit of the Unitarian Church at New Brighton, Staten Island, during the absence of the regular pastor....The fifty-seventh anniversary of the American Bible Society was held in Philadelphia last week. From an address made by Rev. Dr. Fellows, of Madison, Wis., it appears that there are 2,000 auxiliary bodies in the United States; that more than 30,000,000 of Bibles have been distributed through the agency of the society, and it is now sending out daily 3,000 Bibles....In the match game of billiards at New York, between Maurice Daly and Cyrille Dion, for the championship of America, the former won by 241 points.... Liquor is sold at 8,408 places in New York city....Charles Francis Adams' ill-judged exaltation of Mr. Seward at the expense of President Lincoln, in his recent eulogy, has called forth another protest. Montgomery Blair, who was Postmaster-General under Mr. Lincoln, says that gross injustice has been done Mr. Lincoln by Mr. Adams, and that Secretary Welles shares the same opinion.

SERIOUS charges are made by New York merchants and shippers against Consul-General Archibald, and petitions have been sent to the London Board of Trade asking his recall.... A negro barber named Jackson the other day murdered his white mistress, in New York, by beating her in a shocking manner with a club. ....It is said Hon. William M. Evarts, while not seeking the Chief Justiceship, would gladly accept if it should be tendered him.... There seems to be some feeling in the Northern Presbyterian Assembly, in session at Baltimore, against the Board of Publication of the Church. No such charges of dishonesty and fraud are preferred against it as have made the Methodist Book Concern an object of attention. It is accused only of expending the church moneys and rendering no account thereof—a course which, it is urged with plausibility, no body of men, however respectable, have a right to pursue.

OAKES AMES left large bequests for educational purposes....An æronaut named Donaldson recently made an ascension from Reading, Pa., in a balloon made of brown paper, and landed safely.....Nearly eight thousand emigrants arrived at New York from Europe in one day, recently. They were nearly all bound for the West.

AT New York, the other day, George Francis Train was tried on the charge of publishing obscene literature. The jury acquitted him on the ground of insanity, and no sooner was the verdict pronounced than the presiding Judge issued an order committing him to the insane asylum....Gov. Dix thinks that to include beer and cider in prohibitory liquor laws can have no other effect than to increase the use of stronger drinks, and thereby swell the very evils of intemperance which such legislation seeks to lessen. For this reason he has vetoed the Local-Option bill lately passed by the New York Legislature....A great struggle is prevailing in Shamokin, Penn., for the possession of over 10,000 acres of land in the anthracite coal regions, valued at $20,000,000. One party has burned three houses which the other side had erected, and retaliation is now threatened.

THE Connecticut Legislature has passed a constitutional amendment providing for one State capital at Hartford....The statements of the various members of the crew of the Polaris relative to the death of Capt. Hall render the case more uncertain than ever. If Esquimaux Joe's story is to be believed, there is little doubt that poison, and not apoplexy, was the cause of Capt. Hall's death. Capt. Hall, he says, returned from his last sled well and happy, but was taken sick after drinking some coffee. He vomited, his throat swelled, he could not drink, and was tortured by burning pains. Joe says that Capt. Hall told him that there was "something bad in his coffee." His sickness lasted two weeks. During part of this time he studied his medical books to discover the meaning of his symptoms, and came to the conclusion that he had been poisoned. Joe's account is corroborated by one of the Icelanders accompanying the expedition. Who administered the poison he does not state; but it is evident that his suspicions point to Buddington, the sailing-master, who refused, through cowardice or some other motive, to allow the expedition to proceed any further north, and compelled Capt. Hall to retrace his steps.... Southern Presbyterians, who are very sensitive to any inclination of the church towards political dogma or organization, have made so strenuous an opposition to the proposed participation of the church as a church in the Centennial Celebration, that the Northern General Assembly has made them a verbal concession. The preamble of the resolutions in which the Assembly decided to take part in the exhibition has been altered to make it appear that the church seeks only to improve the occasion to the glory of God. No other change than this of words is made, and the programme of exhibition will be adhered to.

The West.

MODOC war items: Gens. Davis and Gillem had a narrow escape from drowning while crossing Tule lake during a heavy storm. Gen. Davis will not attack the Modocs in their new stronghold until he receives reinforcements. The troops are suffering from want of water. The Modocs lost two braves in the late fight. They entered the fight stripped to their breech-clouts.

CHARLES MORTIMER, recently hung at Sacramento, Cal., was the murderer of eight women. ....Joseph O'Neil was hung at Mt. Carroll, Ill., on Friday, the 16th, for the murder of Hiram Rexford.....At Oskaloosa, Iowa, recently, a little two-year-old child was attacked and frightfully mutilated by a rooster.... Eighteen buildings were destroyed by the recent fire at Joliet, Ill. The loss is about $40,000.....William McDonald, of Cincinnati, the other day fell across a 24 inch circular saw operating at full speed. The saw took off his left arm and heel, sawed into his body, cutting his heart half in two. He extricated himself, ran 50 yards, and fell dead.....A new railroad imbroglio of a rather fierce description has been started in Wisconsin by the refusal of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company to accept the St. Croix land-grant on the terms of the recent act of the Legislature. The reason assigned for the refusal is, that the title of the State to the lands is in litigation. ....Advices from the lava beds state that the Modocs are intrenched in the Crater Butte. Capt. Hasbrouck is camped within watching distance of the enemy with a force of 210 men, where he awaits the arrival of Col. Mason. It is intended that the two commands shall amalgamate under Col. Mason, and hold the Indians at bay until mortars are forwarded and a scout is made around the southern boundry of the beds. At last accounts the Indians were fortifying their present position, with the evident intention of giving battle the first opportunity.

MRS. ELLEN LARSEN and her husband quarreled about some family matter, and the wife ended the wrangle by knocking her liege down with an iron poker and then stabbing him with a dirk knife, from the effects of which he died. All this in Chicago.

THE Yellowstone river has been found to be navigable for a large part of its course. An exploring expedition under Gen. George A. Forsyth recently ascended the river in one of the largest of the Upper Missouri steamers.

....Mary Jane Hart died at Troy, Ohio, last week, at the age of 110 years....The Wabash Elevator, at Toledo, was recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $170,000....Several hundred Apaches have fled from the Camp Verde (Arizona) reservation, and gone on the war path again.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., is happy over the completion of the new railroad bridge across the Missouri river at that point....Gov. Booth, of California, is raising a company of sharpshooters to hunt the Modocs.

ARTICLES of consolidation of the New York Western and Fort Wayne and Pacific railroads have been filed at Indianapolis under the name of the New York Western and American of Ohio. This road is to be built from Council Bluffs to New London, O., and from there to connect with the various lines to the seaboard. The capital stock is $50,000,000. It is the intention to build the road as rapidly as possible....Advices from the lava beds state that Capt. Hasbrouck had overhauled the Modocs, and a lively fight ensued, in which the Indians were badly whipped. Five braves are reported killed, and ten squaws and papooses captured. Capt. Jack is said to be making his way toward the Pitt River Indians....The Ohio Republicans have nominated Gov. Noyes for reelection.

The South.

THE leaders of the recent movement at St. Martinsville, La., to resist the installation of the Kellogg officials, have been arrested and taken to New Orleans, where they had a grand ovation from the citizens, thousands turning out to do them honor.

JOHN W. WILLIAMS, a colored youth of 18, has been appointed a cadet to West Point from Virginia, having won the prize in a competitive examination at Norfolk. There were twenty contestants—fifteen white and five colored....A Roman Catholic church for colored people, the first established west of the Mississippi, was dedicated at St. Louis recently, with imposing ceremonies.

TRACK-LAYING is progressing on the Texas and Pacific railway, between Jefferson and Dallas, Texas, at the rate of two miles a day.

THREE hundred delegates, representing thirteen States, were present at the opening session of the Governor's Convention at Atlanta. ....Galveston spent $20,000 in feting the Congressional excursionists, on the occasion of their recent visit.

Washington.

SENATORS CASSERLY and Bayard, of the Senate sub-committee on Transportation, have returned to Washington from an extended trip along the existing and projected line of the Virginia and Kanawha canal from the James river to the Ohio. They examined the possibility of a tunnel of a mile through the Alleghanies, and were assured by a competent engineer that it could be completed in four years from the time the requisite assistance was rendered by Congress....Senator Casserly, of California, has returned his back pay. ....Charges of corruption having been made in connection with the recent award of contracts for Indian supplies, an investigation is demanded by Secretary Delano and Commissioner George H. Stuart.

THE President has appointed William E. Davis Assistant Treasurer at Cincinnati.... Chief Justice Chase's will is short and simple, and names Henry D. Cooke as sole executor. It is said he leaves $10,000 to Wilberforce University, Ohio; $6,000 to his niece, Mrs. Auld, and the remainder of his estate, about $175,000, equally between his daughters, Mrs. Sprague and Mrs. Hoyt....The Indian Bureau has received from a Special Commissioner sent out to talk with the Indians who threaten the progress of the Northern Pacific railroad, which is to the effect that the tribes are quite determined in their hostility to the building of the road, and that there is little hope of conciliating them....The regulations for a postal treaty with France progress slowly, but promise favorably.... The postal card manufacturers at Springfield, Mass., have promised to increase their facilities so as to turn out 1,000,000 cards daily..... It is insisted at the State Department that the charges against Gen. Van Buren, Commissioner-General to Vienna, who denounced Minister Jay as a cowardly knave or liar, have been proven. Arctic Exploration.

Capt. Hall's Arctic expedition cannot justly be called a failure. He did not entitle himself to the reward of £5,000 which was offered so long ago as 1776 by the English Government to the explorer who should get within one degree of the North Pole. He has not discovered the northwest passage, a channel which the commerce of the world has long since ceased to think about; but he has undoubtedly by his intrepid exploration added to our geographical and scientific knowledge of that mysterious northern region with which the names of Cook, Ross, Parry, Franklin, Kane and Hayes are forever associated. He has carried his vessel within 464 miles of the Pole, 219 miles further than Dr. Kane went, and a greater reach of Polar navigation than has ever before been accomplished, and he seems to have discovered the true entrance into the open Polar Sea, which has eluded preceding explorers. Capt. Hall, of whose death on Nov. 8, 1871, the world has just learned for the first time, from the lips of nineteen survivors of his party, was in early life a prominent journalist of Cincinnati. He became deeply interested in the subject of Polar exploration by following the career of Dr. Kane in his two Arctic expeditions, as well as watching the searches for Sir John Franklin. He determined to join the search for the lost navigator, and in 1860, when 35 years of age, sailed on an expedition of which a large part of the cost was supplied from his own means. He was more fortunate in his search than any of his predecessors, and brought back with him, after an absence of two years and three months, some very valuable information in regard to Sir John's fate. He published a narrative of his voyage under the title "Explorations and Adventures in the Arctic Regions." He made a second expedition in 1864, during which he spent five years in learning the Esquimaux language, and habits of life. He secured many relics of the Franklin crew, and discovered beyond a doubt that they had perished, and when and where. After his return he spent a year in scientific study, and sailed in July, 1871, never to return. The Polaris, which carried him, was a Government steamer equipped with especial reference to his needs, with a picked crew, scientific observers, and all necessary appliances, for which Congress had appropriated $100,000. He was sanguine of reaching the North Pole, but has perished in the attempt, another sacrifice to the ambition to which Kane and Franklin gave their lives.

PROTEST AGAINST CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.—It is understood that the surviving members of President Lincoln's Cabinet purpose publishing a card, wherein they will refute certain statements made by Charles Francis Adams in his oration upon the life and character of William H. Seward. The idea was suggested by the late Chief Justice Chase, who, after reading Mr. Adams' oration, was of the opinion that he did gross injustice not only to Mr. Lincoln, but to the members of his Cabinet. The card will probably be prepared by Montgomery Blair, and will be signed by that gentleman and Gideon Welles. Had Judge Chase lived he would have signed it also, and as his views were well-known to the gentlemen, his name will be affixed.

THE DEATH OF CANBY.

Exact Particulars of the Final Conference—The Warning of Riddle's Squaw Disregarded—The Fatal Surprise and Cruel Massacre.

[Correspondence New York Herald.]

The day before the massacre Boston Charley and Bogus Charley both came into camp and made arrangements for the meeting of the succeeding day. They arranged to meet at a spot about half a mile from our camp, near the edge of the second inlet on the lake.

Early Friday morning, the day of the massacre, Tobe, Riddle's squaw, came to Mr. Meacham and besecched him not to go out, as she was certain the Indians meant to kill them. But the warning was unheeded. Gen. Canby said he could not see how the Indians would help their case by murdering them, with so many troops on each side of them; it would be only precipitating a war which they seemed anxious to avert. Mr. Meacham and Mr. Dyar shared Riddle's suspicions, but finally consented to go. Dr. Thomas said he was satisfied that the Indians meant no treachery, and that he should go, as he felt certain that the God in whom he trusted would guard over him while he went on such a mission.

When the party were preparing to start, Riddle called them all into Gen. Gillem's tent and said: "Gentlemen, I want you to hold me blameless if any harm comes to you to-day, as I feel confident that the Modocs mean no good. They will not shoot me, because I am married to one of their tribe, but I greatly fear they have treacherous intentions. Gens. Canby and Gillem rather laughed at his fears, and the party finally started on their mission, from which two never came back alive. Just before leaving, Boston Charley asked Mr. Dyar's permission to tie a bag of provisions on his horse, a favor which was granted. The party consisted of Gen. Canby, Dr. Thomas, Boston and Bogus Charley, on foot, and Mr. Meacham, Mr. Dyar, Riddle and his squaw, Tobe, on horseback. Gen. Gillem did not go, as he was on the sick list, having been in the doctor's hands for the past three days.

They all walked quietly toward the rendezvous and arrived there without any incident of importance occurring, but it was noticed that Boston Charley stopped behind them a little and looked about to see that there were no soldiers about. Gen. Canby and the Peace Commissioners, when they arrived at the tent, were shortly afterward joined by Capt. Jack, John Schonchin, Shack Nasty Jim, Hawker Jim, Ellen's Man and Black Jim. The party finally sat down in a kind of broken circle. Gen. Canby sat facing the west, with Mr. Meacham on his left. Dr. Thomas sat to the left of Mr. Meacham; a little back and adjoining him were Riddle and his squaw. Capt. Jack sat nearly opposite Gen. Canby, with Schonchin, Black Jim and Ellen's Man on his left, and on his right were Mr. Dyar, Shack Nasty Jim, Hawker Jim and Boston Charley. Mr. Dyar was standing alongside of Jack during the conference, holding his horse, and Mr. Meacham's was tied a little in his rear. Bogus Charley was not sitting down, but kept roving about in a restless manner. Mr. Meacham opened the talk with a long speech, in which he told the Indians how anxious he was to arrange a peace with them, so that the President would be pleased, and there would be no more fighting.

While Dr. Thomas was speaking, Capt. Jack got up and walked back to where Meacham's horse was tied, and then returning said aloud, "Heluck!" (Are you ready?) and, pulling his hand out of his pocket, snapped a pistol at Gen. Canby. This was the signal for the murderers, and they immediately commenced their bloody work. There was no hurry or confusion in their manner; each man had selected his victim, and they had only been waiting the signal. At the first snap of Capt. Jack's pistol Gen. Canby got up and ran in a southerly direction, followed by Capt. Jack and Shack Nasty Jim, who both fired at him. The poor old gentleman ran about fifty yards, when he threw up his hands and fell.

Bogus Charley, Shack Nasty Jim and another Indian then threw themselves upon him, and, after stabbing him in the throat, stripped him of everything he had on. They did not leave a vestige of clothing on his body, and the only portion of his apparel found was a small black necktie.

Mr. Meacham rose at the same time as Gen. Canby, to receive a bullet from the pistol of John Schonchin, but he ran off a short distance, about seventy or eighty yards, and then fell, shot in four places. His murderers then stripped him to his underclothing and then left him, as they supposed, a ghastly, bleeding corpse. Poor Dr. Thomas was shot through the head in the first fire by Boston Charley, the treacherous brute who had breakfasted with him the same morning. He staggered a few yards and fell on his knees, at the same time asking Boston Charley to spare his life. The fiend replied by firing another bullet through his head, and, at the same time, Bogus Charley said to him, "Why you no believe squaw?" Boston Charley, after stripping the body of Dr. Thomas to the waist, ran to where Meacham was lying and commenced scalping him, when the squaw Tobe shouted, "The soldiers are coming!" and the cowardly devil ran off. Mr. Dyar was standing on Jack's right when the first shot was fired, and he immediately turned and ran for camp, followed by Hawker Jim, who fired two shots after him. Dyar, thinking that Hawker Jim was gaining, drew his Derringer and, turning round, snapped it. The pistol did not go off; but the coward no sooner saw the weapon than he wheeled and ran back to where the rest of his party were finishing their bloody work. This whole scene was enacted in a very few minutes, and before the troops got on the ground the murderers were safe in their rocky fastness.

ONE of the most exciting and hotly contested games of base-ball on record was played on the 14th inst. in Philadelphia, between the rival clubs of that city—the Philadelphia and the Athletic. Thirteen innings were played, the former winning by a score of 5 to 4.

The Kansas Horror.

[From the Kansas City Times.]

The devil's kitchen, otherwise the Bender house, is a small, rude frame shanty, without lath or plaster or intervening substance between its floor and the rafters of the pointed roof. In size it is 16x24 feet. Small uprights 2x4 inches are set to mark the house into two compartments, but no wall had ever been made other than a white cotton cloth hung in the rear apartment and against these uprights. The front apartment had in it a counter, over which the butchers once pretended to sell groceries. In the rear room was a rude a bed, a table, a stove, and three chairs.

The table, to which the guests of the fiends were seated, was placed directly over the trap-door, so that the guest's back was to and against the white curtain. In this position it was an easy thing for the male villains in the front apartment to strike the form clearly lined and resting against the white cloth, and when the blows of the sledge and the hammer had knocked the victim, with a crushed and broken skull, senseless and helpless to the floor, for the female fiends in the back room to cut the throat. The execution was as simple as it was dreadful, but, though it would seem resistance to such well-planned murder of the trusting and unsuspecting was impossible, the walls gave silent evidence that some of the murdered ones had not been sent to their doom without an effort to defend their lives. No less than a dozen bullet holes in the sides and roof of the house attest that armed men, when struck down so relentlessly, had attempted to shoot their murderers, but, unfortunately, the aims had been wild, and the murderers are reserved for the hempen halter.

One of the most marvelous stories ever heard, but which is vouched for by reliable men, is the following: One evening about three months ago, a poor woman, footsore and weary, traveling to Independence, without money, stopped at the Bender den and asked for some supper, and for the privilege of resting awhile. She was invited in, and being nearly exhausted she took her shoes and scanty wrappings off and lay down on the bed in the back room. She soon fell into a troubled doze, from which she was awakened by the touch of the old hag of the den, who, pointing to an array of pistols and double-edged knives, of various sizes, lying on the table, said in the spirit of hellish malignity: "There, your supper is ready." The woman was motionless and breathless with terror, and as she sank back on the bed, the devil dame picked up the knives one by one and drew her finger along the sharpened blades, at the same time glancing fiendishly at her intended victim. How long this terror lasted the woman could not tell, but at last she, in the very desperation of fear, arose as though not alarmed, and made a private excuse for going out. She was permitted to do so, and moving around to the shelter of the stable, barefooted and scarce half-clad, she darted off on the wings of fear, and ran two miles to the house of one who protected her and gave her shelter. As she was running away, she turned frequently to see if she was pursued, but no one followed her, though she saw the light from the opened doorway several times, as though the devils inside were awaiting her return.

A Touching Incident.

A short time since, in this city, a brilliant and much admired lady, who had been suffering for some time with a trouble of the eyes, was led to fear a speedy change for the worse, and immediately consulted her physician. An examination discovered a sudden and fatal failing in the optic nerve, and the information was imparted as gently as possible, that the patient could not retain her sight more than a few days at most, and was liable to be totally deprived of it at any moment. The afflicted mother returned to her home, quietly made such arrangements as would occur to one about to commence so dark a journey of life, and then had her two little children, attired in their brightest and sweetest costumes, brought before her; and so, with their little faces lifted to hers, and tears gathering for some great misfortune that they hardly realized, the light faded out of the mother's eyes, leaving an ineffaceable picture of those dearest to her on earth—a memory of bright faces that will console her in many a dark hour.—*Covington (Ky.) Specific for Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis.

A correspondent of the Freeport (Ill.) Bulletin pronounces what is known as the cerebro-spinal meningitis, now prevailing so extensively and fatally in many parts of the country, as the same epidemic which raged in Michigan about twenty years ago to such an extent that it actually broke up the Legislature, and carried to the grave every one whom it attacked, until the "old-fashioned hemlock sweats were adopted," after which every case was saved. He says: "Our people sent about twenty-five miles distant and procured hemlock boughs, and they sent for it from all parts of the State. There was a company called the Hook and Ladder Company, and for weeks they did nothing, night or day, but go from house to house giving hemlock sweats, and it never failed to save every case. Thorough sweating might do, but there is no mistake about hemlock sweats being a specific."

The Muscles.

The order in which the muscles lose their power is worth knowing. The muscles which move the arms and legs usually become relaxed before those which maintain the body in an erect position. In relation to the social senses, that of sight is first lost, the eyelids forming a barrier between the retina and external world; but independently of eyelids, if they had been removed by the surgeon, or could not be closed by disease, this is still the first sense whose functions are abolished. Some animals, as the hare, do not shut their eyes when asleep; and in case of somnambulism the eyes remain open, although the sense of sight is temporarily abolished, but their acuteness is much lessened. Taste is the first to disappear, and then smell; hearing follows, and touch is the most persistent of the senses. So, conversely, a person is most easily awakened by the sense of touch; next in order by sound, and then by smell.

A Shameful Exhibition.

A shameful exhibition has very recently taken place in London under the especial oversight of the Marquis of Queensberry. The entertainment was a prize-fight of the most brutal description. The arena selected was a disused chapel, now known as Grafton Hall, in Soho. The lessee of the building had understood that it was to be a sparring match, and did not know the real character of the performance until he entered the hall a short time before the opening. He says: "I was told there was a noble Marquis, two noble Lords, and three Colonels of her Majesty's army in the crowd. The persons forming the meeting all appeared to be well-dressed, well-fed men, with the animal strongly marked in their features." The prize to the winner was given by the Marquis of Queensberry, and an additional sum of £100 was raised by subscription. This young nobleman is an officer in the navy. The pugilists wore gloves, but of a very different kind from the ordinary boxing-gloves. The agony caused is greater than with the naked fist, and a man may be killed quite as easily. One of the men was hammered until insensible, after which, by the use of stimulants, he revived enough to fight several rounds more. The backers of the loser tried to crowd in and break up the fight when they saw their money would be lost. Nothing seems to have been wanting to make the fight brutal. We are told these contests are now of almost daily occurrence in London. Only a short time ago a man was killed in one of these glove-fights after it had lasted about seventy minutes.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP.—A Washington correspondent says the President recently expressed his regret that the appointment of a Chief Justice would devolve upon him, and that he would willingly shrink from the responsibility if he could. He further said he would appoint a man independent of political considerations, and one whom the lawyers of the country would indorse. In the meantime he hoped his friends and prominent men in the country would give him their views upon the subject.

The President's Progress.

Readers of the Tribune of yesterday may or may not have noticed a suspension of a South Park ordinance "for one day only," which was announced in the advertising columns. In order to give it a wider circulation, we reproduce it in this place:

> Notice is hereby given that, by order of the South Park Commission, Sec. 2 of ordinance 20 will not be enforced on Grand Boulevard from the railroad crossing to Fiftieth street, on Wednesday afternoon between the hours of 2 o'clock and 7 o'clock p. m.
>
> The ordinance is as follows: "No person shall ride or drive upon any part of the said Park, or upon any road, roadway, or avenue included within the boundary thereof, at a rate of speed exceeding eight miles an hour."
>
> (Signed) WM. M. BERRY, Supt. S. P. C.
> This notice applies only to Grand Boulevard, and only for the day named. The ordinance will be enforced as usual on all other boulevards.

The above will only become intelligible when it is remembered that the President of the United States has honored Chicago with a visit. The process of suspending a useful and necessary ordinance, prohibiting fast driving in a crowded thoroughfare, was one of the methods adopted to entertain the distinguished visitor with his favorite amusement of horse-racing. The "spring meetings" not having opened yet, and the regular trotting parks being in bad condition, owing to the backwardness of the season, the Grand Boulevard was transformed into a race-course for the occassion, and an advertisement was inserted in the newspapers to inform the community of the fact, in order that persons who desired to walk or drive on it during those hours must do so at their own risk. The circumstance is certainly worthy of the attention of the people, as it would be difficult to find a case among the effete monarchies of Europe where any regular law, enacted for the protection of life and the maintenance of public decorum, has been temporarily suspended for the gratification of a Prince.

Gen. Grant cannot be held strictly responsible for the suspension of an ordinance against fast driving on his account, but his absence from public duty at this time, and his jaunt about the country for pleasure, are matters of concern to the American people. It is not long since he was inaugurated for a second term of four years as the Chief Executive of the nation, with a residence at Washington, and the duty of giving his personal attention to public affairs. Congress had no sooner adjourned, however, than the President prepared to make an extended pleasure tour throughout the country, terminating at Long Branch for summer repose. The natural inference from this brief statement of Gen. Grant's saunterings is, that the condition of the country is so entirely peaceful, serene, and prosperous that the active services of an Executive may be dispensed with. Certain well-known facts, on the other hand, tend to rebut this inference. One of the States of the Union is just now in a revolutionary condition. The political troubles in Louisiana have actually broken out in civil war. One desperate battle between the two contesting parties was recently fought with an aggregate loss of 93 killed and 72 wounded, and the dispatches of this morning bring the news of a conflict in another parish. The Metropolitan Police, of the city of New Orleans, are being armed and drilled as regular troops, to sustain Mr. Kellogg's cause in other parts of the State, while the people of New Orleans are left without protection for life or property. The thieves, burglars, and roughs have already begun to take advantage of the helpless condition of the New Orleans people to plunder their homes and places of business. In the meantime, it has been brought to the attention of the Grand Jury that the conversion of the Metropolitan Police force into a State army is contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. The anarchy which reigns in Louisiana is the direct reult of the action of the President in sustaining the usurpation of a United States Judge who exceeded his authority in an infamous manner, and in forcing upon the people of Louisiana a Governor whom they did not elect. The revolutionary condition of the State, at once ruinous to commerce and threatning the lives of its citizens, is precisely what the majority of the Committee on Louisiana Affairs—a committee of Senators acting politically with the Administration—predicted as the result of the President's action in sustaing Kellogg and his bogus Government. Now that the policy is bearing its bloody fruit, the President is roaming about the country attending improvised horse races, and wending his way, by slow stages, to a watering-place. There is no other circumstance that could so well illustrate Gen. Grant's stolid indifference to his public duties.

the condition of Louisiana is not the only thing that demands immediate, constant, and well-considered attention from the Chief Executive. There is an Indian war on hand, in which fifty or sixty savage Modocs hold an American army at bay, slaughter as many officers and soldiers at every engagement as their whole band numbers, and defy the power of the American nation. There is a national disgrace at Vienna, where the eyes of the civilized world are centered at this moment, and where American Commissioners have brought new disgrace upon their country. There is a scandal in New York city, where a Custom-House ring has levied black-mail to the tune of $271,023 on a prominent business firm. The Civil Service, which was already odious, has become piratical and dangerous. If the subordinates did nothing more than imitate their Chief by neglecting their duties, the case would not be so bad, but when they become blackmailers and organize raids on private business, there should be somebody in Washington to call them off.

There is another view of the President's absence from his post of duty about which there can scarce be any difference of opinion. Just before the adjournment of the late Congress, a bill was passed which raised the salary of the President from $25,000 to $50,000 a year. This measure received the prompt approval of Gen. Grant, and became a law. He was thus instrumental in doubling his own salary. Whether [illegible] purely selfish, or prompted by a conviction that the President should receive $50,000 a year for his services, no one but himself can say. It is obvious, however, that the act of doubling his own salary increased his responsibility to the nation for a conscientious devotion of his time and services for which he is paid so munificently. We have had Presidents in the past who worked themselves sick, and even to death, at a compensation of just half what Gen. Grant now receives, while he travels about the country on pleasure excursions, and leaves the most serious emergencies of the Government to take care of themselves.—Chicago Tribune.

Louisiana and the Law.

If Louisiana were tranquil under the treatment to which she has been subject, the tranquillity would be a worse reproach to the character of her people than even the condition of anarchy to which she is tending. For anarchy is simply a reversion to the primeval chaos. It leaves every man free to struggle for whatever place and pelf he has the power to lay his hands on, and it awards the battle to the strongest, who are, at least in one sense, the best. Such a state of things would result, at least, in the survival of the fittest and the success of the fittest to the surroundings. But now Louisiana is ruled by a power interfering from without, in the shape of the Federal Government. This power has not merely let loose the elements of society to struggle among themselves for the pre-eminence, as they may. It has forcibly put one set of men in power, and forcibly kept the other set of men not only out of power, but out of the voice which the law guarantees to them in designating the men who shall hold power. There is next to no question that the party thus excluded from participation in politics comprises a numerical majority of the real citizens of Louisiana. But it is more than that. It comprises, we had almost said, every respectable man in the State. We will say that every respectable man in the State belongs to it by natural affinity. It represents all the legitimate industries of Louisiana, all the honorable wealth of Louisiana, all the cultivated intelligence and deserved eminence of Louisiana. All these interests and classes are disfranchised and deprived of representation by the action of the Federal Government, insisted upon by the President of the United States, at the instance of his brother-in-law, the Collector of New Orleans. He has put over them what calls itself an elected Government.

But the pretence is a barefaced and shameful fraud. The Government is in fact a satrapy. The miserable minority which alone it represents comprises all the worst, as the majority which goes unpresented comprises all the best elements of society in Louisiana. Ignorance and crime are its co-efficienists. A leadership of white demagogues like Casey and Kellogg and a following of black dupes compose it. Whatsoever things are impure, whatsoever things are dishonest, whatsoever things are unjust, whatsoever things are hateful, if there be any vice and if there be any infamy in Louisiana, all these things gravitate naturally and irresistibly to it. If it were not upheld from without it would fall in a day before the just wrath of the people of Louisiana. By meddling to uphold it Grant has assumed to himself the burden of odium which it bears. As we said, he has not merely left the good and bad, the strong and the weak, the wise and the foolish to struggle for the mastery. He has put the criminal and the ignorant above the virtuous and educated men of Louisiana, the basest above the best, and he holds them there. By this he has inflicted an industrial paralysis, a political oppression, and a social degredation upon the people of the State. These things are unbearable by freemen, and the Louisianians have most righteously refused to bear them and risen up against them. It is idle to talk of the law being on one side of this wretched business and lawlessness on the other. A perversion and mockery of the law it has alone to plead, and the other side can rightly claim that it has the spirit of the law on its side. It has not so much an injury to be redressed—though the injury is very grievous—as it is an intolerable insult to be resented. Kellogg and his accomplices swaggering about the City Hall of New Orleans form such a spectacle in the eyes of the men of New Orleans as would be presented to New York if the President had interfered to put and keep in power at the City Hall "Dutch Heinrich" and "Reddy the Blacksmith." A New Yorker jealous of the honor of his city and beholding what these men had wrought upon it would naturally and rightly pour out to their faces the contempt which he felt for these puppets in power. This is what the dispatches a day or two ago told us a citizen of New Orleans had been impelled to do to Kellogg. We had no Kelloggs and Caseys in the New York Ring.

But though that was a much lower power of rascality than the Louisiana ring, when the extent of its rascality was made manifest the people of New York rose and put it out of power. The remedy was always in their own hands, and they deserved some share of the discredit of their Government. But the people of Lonisiana have done nothing to deserve the disgrace which has come upon them. They never chose these men to office. If the opportunity were offered them they would seize it to put these men out of office. But their remedy is not in their own hands. It has been taken from them by Federal usurpation. The more desperate among them saw no other resort than the use of forcible resistance, which they have taken. They are perhaps blamable. But theirs is not the greatest blame. The blame and shame lie at the door of the President of the United States, who preferred the unjust interests of a pettifogging brother-in-law to the undivided interests of a great commonwealth. He has foisted upon the people of Louisiana a set of rascally adventurers for rulers, and he holds these adventurers in power though the industries of Louisiana stagnate with the discredit into which they have brought its name in every money market in the world. He has the power of abating the disorder now, not by proclaiming martial law, as it is reported he is instigated to do, but by desisting from the interference he so shamefully began, and by permitting [illegible] to him to deny, a full and free election by the citizens of Louisiana. Until he does, upon his head be the crimes and the excesses which threaten to deform and disgrace the State, as it has already been disgraced by the men whom he has held in place against the will of the people.—New York World.

The Modoc War.

The news from the Modoc war is, to say the least, not very encouraging. The force of 500 troops, after two or three months' hard labor and a heavy loss of life, having forced the thirty savages out of the lava beds, have the satisfaction of knowing that the latter, after getting twenty miles away, have now occupied a position which is even stronger than that of the lava beds. Meanwhile, the troops are engaged in disputing possession of their camping-grounds with scorpions and rattlesnakes, and Capt. Jack, in Gen. Canby's uniform, is striving to make his position impregnable, upon which no attack will be made until reinforcements arrive. What the result will be then, no one can say with confidence. Meanwhile, two plans of disposing of the Modocs have been suggested by Indians who have an ill-will towards them. A strategic Piute has volunteered a suggestion that it is of no use to fight Modocs with guns. The general impression of white people is very similar to that of the Piute, although they will hardly agree to the plan of "fixing" the Modocs, which he then suggests, namely, to inform them that they want to have a big talk with them, and, having got them to the big talk, that each Piute shall seize his Modoc neighbor by the right wrist and then smash his head with a rock. This would settle the Modoc question very conclusively, if the Piute didn't make a mistake, and get his own head smashed. The Indians whom Gen. Crook used in his recent successful raids against the Apaches have, however, stated very succinctly the reasons why the whites are not generally successful in hunting the Indians. One of their number gave the key to the Modoc situation in the following terse language: "White man is a fool. He gets up in the morning and makes heap noise. He travels in day-time and kicks up much dust. See him for twenty miles. At night he makes big fire. See him everywhere." The mistake which our forces commit is in employing the tactics and strategy of modern warfare against a foe who fights upon an entirely different plan. The Indian follows his trail by moonlight, and when the morning comes he hides away and sleeps, after posting a sentry upon some high place which commands a view for miles around. At night he travels again, and when he overtakes his enemies he springs upon them suddenly, and seeks to kill every one. If but one escapes, he turns about and disappears, that he may not be surprised in an enemy's country. The Indian must be fought with the Indian tactics. Those who hunt him must know him and his habits.—Chicago Tribune.

How Do They Find the Way?

Two weeks ago an account was given of a dog that had been carried 700 miles somewhere at the West, but, not liking the place, alone, guided by a faculty quite unknown to man, he footed his way to his old loved home without making inquiries, consulting a guide-board, or traveling out of the way, at the rate of nearly a hundred miles each day.

An old horse, purchased of a farmer in Vermont m[illegible]ears since, was shipped at Seabro[illegible]n., with others, to the West Ind[illegible]or grinding cane. A storm occurring in Long Island sound, the deck horses were washed overboard and supposed to have been lost. The old Vermonter, however, reached land in the darkness of a stormy night, and finally was found standing at the barn-door of his old home. The horse had never been far from the town till sold, therefore could not have been familiar with the way.

Carrier pigeons perform feats as swift messengers through the air, because they are in a hurry to reach home. However far they may be carried confined in baskets, they invariably speed their way without ever resting on the voyage till they reach the place dear to their affections. In 1819, with a view to ascertain their speed a pigeon was carried from Antwerp to London, and there liberated. The bird was at its cote, have flown 180 miles, in a straight line, in just six hours.

Horses, mules, dogs, cats, and all the migrating birds, find their way as unerringly as the carrier pigeon does; but how they do it is beyond our ken. Some imagine birds see telescopically one or two hundred miles when high in the air, and over the tops of mountains. But the theory throws no light upon the movements of a mule that found his home in Brazil, hundreds of miles over a region where man could hardly move, having neither a path to follow nor a companion to lead the way. Science, therefore, has something more to do to clear up this mystery.

A writer in the Quarterly Review advances the theory that "they have a certain sense of the magnetic currents, sufficing to afford them a sort of internal mariner's compass marking the direction in which they travel. We know that the magnetic currents affect the needle, and the hypothesis that they may also affect living frames with special organizations seems in no way incredible; while the fact that a dog, who can find his way for a hundred miles in the open country, may lose it in five hundred yards in a town, seems to point to the multitude of streets turning at right angles as the cause of confusion to a sense which simply indicates a straight direction.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

THE following is said to have been a Yankee's reasoning on progress in locomotion: "I can reclect, ten or twelve years ago, if I started from Bosting on a Wednesday I oud git in Philadelphy in one day; and I've been calc'lating that if the power of steam increases for the next ten years as it has been doin' for the last ten years, I'd be in Philadelphy just two days before I started from Bosting."

FARM AND GARDEN.

A New Departure in Agriculture.

Mr. H. Schmolley, editor of the Farmer's Friend and Guide, published at Peoria, Ill., proposes a new departure in agriculture. He is sanguine that corn can be grown for less than five cents per bushel, and wheat for less than ten cents per bushel. He says:

In these days of new departures in politics and religion, I thought I would get up one in agriculture. I have been experimenting with deep and shallow plowing for the last thirteen years, and I always found the shallow plowing the best. I have also found that the annual plowing of the soil is unnecessary and worse than useless, for the soil as furnished by nature is pulverized more thoroughly than any tool can do it. I have no use at all for the common harrow or drag, and consider them all humbugs from the old Scotch down. I consider them a dead drag upon the man, the land and team, and they ought to be so named.

I have several bits of evidence I here propose to offer:

On the 24th day of April, 1870, I was at the Illinois Industrial University, at Champaign. I inquired for the Regent. The reply was, "Gone to New York." I asked for the Professor of Agriculture. He had gone too. So I wended my way down to the experimental farm. Here I found Mr. Vickory trimming trees. I remarked to him, "Butchering trees, are you?" "Yes," said he, "we trim them every month in the year, and make a record of it." I wanted to know of him how much corn he had planted.

"Corn planted!" said he, looking at me with astonishment. "Why, yes," said I. "Time enough for that," said he.

I replied that the old saying of "Time enough" had ruined many a man, and I had lost more money at it than from all other causes put together.

He replied that they had only replowed that small strip between two rows of apple trees as fall plowing.

I told him that was wrong; fall plowing ought never to be replowed.

"Why," said he, "we are going to subsoil and trench-plow this whole field."

I told him not to do it, as I had watched trench-plowing, subsoiling and deep plowing for twelve years, and had never seen any land that would produce as good a crop after as before either was done. I told him to plant what he had plowed between the next two, trench-plow the next two, shallow-plow the next two, and the balance of the field I would not plow at all, as that ground was in better condition than he could make it by plowing. It was done accordingly. Now for the result.

On the 15th day of July the result was published in the Western Rural, of Chicago. The corn growing on the unplowed land was far superior to any of that on the plowed land, and, strange to say, that which was trench-plowed and subsoiled was the poorest of all. Now, if it will not win in a dry season, when will it win? So much for the year 1870.

Now, for 1871. I paid another visit to the University, and found my friend Vickroy superintending the plowing. I said, "Butchering land this time." He was plowing about eight inches deep and harrowing. I told him to stop both, which, to my surprise, he did, and commenced to plow shallow and using the board. I told him he hitched to the wrong end of the board—that agriculture as recommended by agricultural penny-a-liners, and practiced by many farmers, was wrong end to, and upside down—so we turned the board upside down and t'other end to. After this was all done, we took about three acres, one-half of which was plowed, the other half was not. It was all planted the same day, with the hoe (the favorite way of planting there, as Mr. Flagg had previously planted deep-plowed land that was laid off with painted stakes in the same way). I paid a visit there last week, found the corn cut up, asked the men that cut it if they could see any difference in the three-acre piece. They said they could not. I told them how it was planted. They wanted to know which end it was that was not plowed. I did not tell them.

On the old home place, one of the old marks of this county (the Red Barn), 22 acres of corn were planted this year. The ground was plowed two and and one-half inches deep, twelve acres of which was timothy soil, all treated alike, plowed with same plow. A plank was drawn over the whole field, then planted with a common Brown corn-planter; planted very shallow, so much so that, owing to the dryness of the spring, the old ground had to be replanted, ditto the sod, the cut-worms having destroyed nearly the whole of it. It became necessary to plant again, which was done the same as in the first place. It was cut off again, but not killed. On the old ground the corn was plowed three times with a common walking cultivator, the sod but once, five rows of which were not plowed at all.

This field has been in cultivation thirty-five years. Ten acres of this field were trench-plowed once, and has never produced a good crop since, and there is now not much more than half as much corn per acre as there is on the adjoining piece, which will yield from seventy-five to one hundred bushels per acre, the best crop ever grown upon it. In this new departure I propose to show how cheap any kind of grain can be raised. I am able now to show that corn can be grown for less than five cents per bushel, and wheat for less than ten cents per bushel. These are practical results, and can be fully proven by the wheat and corn grown upon the old home place in the years 1870 and '71. I mean the cost less the expense of harvesting, thrashing, etc. This is something I want to draw public attention to, and have this kind of cultivation extended all over creation.

Practical Suggestions.

IF nothing else serves to render a farmer contented with his occupation this thing should—he is his own master. The farmer, almost alone of the whole army of workingmen, can say this with any sort of propriety.

TEN bushels of corn fed to the mothers of ten lambs in the months of April and May, as they need it, will return double if not three times its value when both progeny and fleece are sent to market.

IF a hired man will adopt good habits, keep neat, and spend his time in reading, he will be treated as an equal of the family, or he will have a family of his own that will be superior.

A FARMER says it is safe enough for all practical purposes to calculate that 518 cubic feet of hay in mow will weigh a ton. He recently tested the matter and found it remarkably correct.

A FARMER makes no greater mistake than in supposing he must be wealthy to have a nice lawn in front of the house planted with flowers and evergreens; nor that he cannot have pear trees and grapes and abundance of small fruits.

THE last idea about fencing is to plant trees for posts, and when they are strong enough, string wires from one to another. The kind of tree is unimportant, but of course fruit, nut, and maple trees. On the plains, where fruit trees will not grow without shelter belts, cotton wood and white or golden willow may be planted.

Sumner's Divorce—The Facts in the Case.

It is announced that the Hon. Charles Sumner has obtained a divorce from his wife on account of five years' willful absence from bed and board, which is a ground for divorce under the laws of the State of Massachusets. We have a suspicion founded upon the gossip of Mrs. Grundy, who in this instance, we are quite sure, has not made a mistake, that Mrs. Charles Sumner has really secured the sundering of the marital tie rather than her distinguished husband, although it appears in his name. Mrs. Charles Sumner was, at the time of her marriage, a widow, young and blooming, still in her twenties, and, we believe, without children. Her first husband was the eldest son of Mr. Hooper, a millionaire Congressman from Massachusetts. It is believed in Washington that Mrs. Sumner had a good legal ground for divorce against her husband, recognized as such under the laws of all countries and States, but that she was unwilling to plead it both from motives of delicacy to her and to himself, and that, therefore, it was mutually arranged that she should absent herself for a period of time that would give the Senator a legal right to cancel the matrimonial contract.

We know not how it may be, but it has been said that a jealousy on the part of the honorable Senator had considerable to do with this unfortunate proceeding. When the parties were married, one, we presume, was in the neighborhood of three score, and the other a score and a quarter. There was, therefore, naturally a disparity of years and of tastes and habits. This almost universally produces an unhappy marriage. But in this instance it was aggravated. Mr. Sumner was not only a bachelor of long-matured habits, but he had formed other connections and associations peculiar to himself even aside from that fact. For instance, it was said that he always had his carriage at the door at any ball or party they mutually attended, at which he would say, "Madam, it is now 10 o'clock; it is time to go home, and our conveyance is below." She would reply, "I am happy to hear it. You are sleepy and tired. Go home and go to bed, but I am not yet ready. I will follow you by and by. So good night, my dear." Then, as we have said, the Senator was said to be morbidly jealous of a certain gentleman connected with the Prussian embassy, whom he had himself introduced to his wife and extolled in the highest terms, and which gentleman afterward escorted her to many evening amusements which her husband's habits forbade him to attend. One day this young attache received a very peremptory letter from Berlin ordering him to return home immediately, and recalling him from the Prussian legation. He was thunderstruck by the intelligence; not conscious of any offense against his Government, he could not conceive what it meant. He, therefore, wrote to an influential friend at home to make inquiries of Count Bismarck as to what was the real reason of this very extraordinary proceeding. In reply he was informed that the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, who was then Senator Charles Sumner, had written a letter requesting his recall, and that the Count did not consider that he was authorized to refuse a request coming from such an influential source in the Government to which he was accredited. Of course the young Prussian gentleman informed Mrs. Sumner of all this, and rumor hath it that that lady was not at all pleased with the conduct of her husband in the matter. The German secretary returned home, and for a time that cloud upon the marital relations of the Senator disappeared.

But, by and by, as it was announced to the public, and, we think, by an agreement between the parties, Mrs. Sumner's health required that she should leave the American continent, and breathe for a time the air of Europe. This was accordingly done, and the atmosphere has been so bracing and the scenery so pleasant—to say nothing of her companionship—that she has lingered there so long as to enable Mr. Sumner to obtain a divorce for willful absence, required by the statute. Mr. Sumner will resume his bachelor relations, and his late wife—a young, handsome and wealthy widow—will be a prize to be contended for by gentlemen of position who are in the matrimonial market.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—Facts furnish more lasting warnings than precepts. We have frequently found occasion to speak of the danger of spontaneous combustion, and now select an item from the report of the Fire Marshal of New York city, which will support our ideas on the subject. Sixteen recent examples of fires caused by spontaneous combustion are recited in this report. During the year 1872 there were 1,380 fires in New York. How many were spontaneously caused there are no means of knowing. Of the sixteen spontaneous cases above alluded to, nine originated among oily rags, cotton waste or rope materials, two in piles of coal, one in a mass of "excelsior" or fine wood shavings used for cheap upholstery purposes, one in salt hay, two in oily sawdust, one in rubbish.

THE Revista Militaire furnishes the following information respecting the number of horses and draught animals in the various countries in Europe: Russia appears to have 18,000,000 horses, and to employ 325,000 for her army. In Germany there are 2,500,000 draught animals; in Austria, 3,100,000; in France, 4,250,000; in England, 2,666,000; in Italy, 1,100,000, or 700,000 horses and mules and 400,000 donkeys. During the last war Germany had as many as 290,000 horses, and it is calculated that France requires 230,000. In France mules are extensively used in the military train, and the country contains 500,000 donkeys.

Death in Stoves.

The Journal of Chemistry, in an article warning its readers to be careful in the management of stoves, says:

"A lump of anthracite of the usual varieties is composed largely of carbon, with a small amount of sulphur. When ignited, the gaseous products formed are carbonic oxide and sulphuric acid, the two latter being poisonous and the former destroying life by its physical presence, excluding oxygen from the lungs. Death is caused by asphyxia when these gases are inhaled. The blood becomes dark from imperfect aeration, and the action of the heart gradually grows sluggish, and finally it ceases to beat altogether. When these are allowed to escape into a room, the inmates are not usually sensible of their presence after a short time. The senses of smell and taste become in a great measure impaired, and indifference to danger and disinclination to arouse one's self are observable. Hence the great peril of the poison is at night time, when the inclination to sleep is strong. A very large number of persons, old and young, suffer in health from inhaling coal gases in city and country during the winter months. Whenever the slightest odor is perceived in a dwelling, instant vigilance should be exercised, and the cause removed at once. It is a bad plan to put coal upon a fire in furnace or stove just before retiring at night. The gaseous products, especially the sulphurous acid, are more copious for an hour or two afterward, and, consequently, more dangerous.

"It should be a rule in every family that some trusty person should examine the heating apparatus carefully before retiring each night. In dull, damp, moderate weather, the danger is greater, and the supervision should be more thorough. Never sleep in a room heated by a coal stove if it can be avoided. Never allow children to sleep in rooms warmed by stoves in contiguous rooms unless they are under the direct charge of some careful person. Never carry ignited charcoal into a sleeping room with the view of warming it in cold weather. Never leave a pan filled with coals used for warming beds in the room where a patient sleeps; such an act may cost a life."

A Year Without a Summer.

The present unpromising season has caused an old settler down East to give an account of the weather during the year 1816, which was known as "eighteen hundred and starve to death." The season of that year was quite different from the present one thus far January was so mild even in New England that fires was scarcely needed. February though not cold, was comparatively colder than the previous month. March ever a pleasant month, and that in 1816 was no exception to the rule. April began warm, but "for the time of year" the latter part of the month was less favorable than the former. In the latter part of May flowers froze in the gardens, and corn-fields had to be replanted. June was the coldest ever known. Frost Ice and snow were common. Snow fell over considerable part of New England to the depth of ten inches during a single storm. Fires were needed on the Fourth of July, and on the fifth ice formed to thickness of window glass. Occasionally a field of corn in a favorable position was not killed, but generally it was all destroyed. In August snow fell in most of the Northern States, and in the Middle States ice formed an inch in thickness. Most of the corn that escaped thus far was cut up for fodder. The first two wee's n September furnished the warmest weather of the season, but the last half was cold. October was as cold as November usually is winter set in early in the last named month. Such was the season known asthe ear with "Y' ment a Sumer.'

A SCENE AT A HOTEL.

A Bridegroum Gets into the Wrong Bed.

At a late hour on Tousday night quite a bridal party arrived in the city and put up at one of the hotels. The bride was accompanied by two of her lady friends, and the groom by two gentlemen. The names were registered in the usual way, but in some manner a mistake was made in registering the identity of the bride. The hours sped on towards dawn, and the bride in her silent chamber waited the appearance of her lord. Yet he came not. Surely he was not sitting up all this time. The rest of the party had retired, she was certain, since she had heard them in their apartments.

What has become of him? Impatience grew into terror. She rang her bell and aservant presently knocked at her door.

"Do you know where my husband is?" she inquired.

"Ain't he in here ma'am?"

"No."

"Maybe he stepped out into the city, and will be back directly, ma'am."

"I'm afraid not; oh, do enquire at the office and see if there is any intelligence about him."

The servant retired, and in a few moments returned with the information that there was none.

The wife was now alarmed in earnest. She had never had a husband before, and like the man who drew the elephant in the lottery, scarcely knew what to do with the animal. In her anxiety she went to the room of her bridesmaid and knocking at the door.

"Who's there?" came in accents unmistakably masculine.

"Me, Sarah; but who on earth are you?"

There was a sudden stir, and the sound of feet falling heavily upon the carpeted floor.

"Who the devil am I in bed with then?" she heard the man say, as the door swung open and the husband's face peeped out.

"Oh, I'm distracted about you; where have you been?"

"I've been here in bed; but deuce take me I thought you were too."

"Oh, James it wasn't me."

"Who was it then?"

"Why, it's Sarah."

"The devil!"

"Oh! no, James, it was Sarah. Didn't you know it James?

"Blast me if I did. I found her asleep, and thinking this was our room I crept into bed and went to sleep," replied James, evidently impressed with the idea that he had a difficult case to argue.

"Is she asleep yet, James?"

"Why don't you hear her snore."

But just then Sarah waked up, and seeing a man in her room filled the hall with people!

And now the bridegroom found himself in a delicate position. In the hurry of explaining the matter to his wife, he had neglected to put on his pants, but now in his eager search for them he was dancing around the room like one possessed, and then imploring Miss Sarah to hush—

"I'm going don't you see."

But Sarah was seeing too much, and she wouldn't hush; and the wife in the hall, hemmed in by the eager crowd had leaned her head against the wall and was enjoying a hearty cry.

At last however, the pants were found, and put on, and the husband and wife escaped to their chamber, whilst Sarah doubly locked her door against further intrusion.

The next morning explanations were gone into, but there's no denying that both the ladies were the least bit incredulous, and it is said a preceptible coldness has sprung up between them, whilst the unintentionally offending bridegroom walks about a good deal, his head down, and evidently indulging in pleasant meditations.—Louisville Exchange.

A gentleman who has been all through the extensive wheat growing region of Bartholomew and Jennings counties informs the Mitchell Commercial that the wheat crop there will be almost if not quite an entire failure.

A Touching Incident.

From the Covington (Ky.) Journal

A short time since, in this city, a brilliant and much admired lady, who had been suffering for some time with a trouble of the eyes, was led to fear a speedy change for the worse, and immediately consulted her physician. An examination discovered a sudden and fatal failing in the optic nerve, and the information imparted as gently as possible, that the patient could not retain her sight more than a few day at most, and was liable to be deprived of it any moment. The afflicted mother returned home, quietly made such arrangements as would occur to one about to commence so dark a journey of life, and then had her two little children attired in their brightest and sweetest costumes, brought before her; and so with their little faces lifted to hers, and tears gathering for some great misfortune that they hardly realized, the light faded out of the mother's eyes, leaving an ineffaceable picture of those dearest to her on earth—a memory of bright faces that will console her in many a dark hour.

A Specimen Radical U. S. Senator.

A few years ago there lived in Butler Pa., a man named John Hipple. His father and a number of relations are still residents of the county. Young Hipple read law, and after his admission to practice, formed a partnership with Col. John M. Thomson, who war a Grant elector at large, in that State last fall. Everything went smoothly for a time. Hipple was happily married to a young lady of Mt. Chesnut, and the law firm was prosperous. But tnings changed. Hipple became discontented, and left rather mysteriously, taking with him money collected to not less than a sum than $6,000, for which Thomson was, held responsible. Hipple's wife was left in a desticute condition. She worked at different places in this and Lawrence counties, and for a time was employed at the Knox house. She was afterwards sent back by the overseers of the poor to be cared for at home, where she now is. About a year ago Hipple, through his attorney, applied foa a divorce from his wife. After leaving Butler he went west. In California he practiced law for a time and finally settled in Oregon, where he took an active interert in the politics of the young state. With the decree of McGuffin, annulling the marriage contract in his pocket he returned to Oregon and toak an active part in the political canvass then going on in his adopted state. He was smart and cunning, and must have carefully watched the career of Jeremiah Colbaith Henry Wilson. The republican party was successful, having a majority in the legislature, John H. Mitchell was elected United State Senator for six years, to succeed Senator Corbett. That John H. Mitchell is none other than the former citizen of Butler, an absconding attorney, now the Hon. John Hipple Mitchell, United States Senator from the soveriegn State of Oregon.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.

We feel like giving a cheer for Garfield, who, in defense of his vote for the Congressional salary Bill against some of his dissatisfied Republican constituents, made this telling hit for Grant.

"If the delegates believe the retrative salary clause is so infamous that I ought to resign for voting for the appropriation bill to which it was attached, will they follow out their logic an insist that the President ought to resign for signing it? My vote did not make it a law. His signature did."

That may be replied to but it can not be answered.

It is estimated that the expense incurred on Decoration Day, all over the United States, will aggregate over a million dollars! If people could be induced to contribute this amount to the orphans and widows of soldiers in a quiet exercise of patriotic duty, how much more substantial would be the tribute to honored dead. The beautiful form of decorating the resting places of heroic [illegible] within it the charm of sentiment of veneration, but a [illegible] of flowers laid upon the table of a [illegible] is a still greater act of [illegible]. The tinsel and parade, however, [illegible] have the advantage, for there are men who will give ten dollars for such display, that would not contribute one cent to relieve the wants of poverty, even in the habitation of a soldiers family.

Lying.

Two boys were in a school room alone together, when some fire works, contrary to the master's express prohibition, exploded. The one boy denied it; the other, Bonnie Christe, would neither admit or deny it, and was severely flogged for his obstinacy. When the boys got alone again—

"Why didn't you deny it?" asked the real delinquent.

"Because there were only us two, and one of us must have lied," said Bonnie.

"Then why not say I did it?"

"Because you said you didn't, and I would spare the liar."

The boys heart melted—Bonnie moral gallantry subdued him.

When school resumed, the young rogue marched up to the master's desk and said:

"Please, sir, I can't bear to be a liar, I let off the squibs," and burst into tears.

The master's eyes glistened on the self-accuser, and the unmerited punishment he had inflicted on his school mate, smote his conscience. Before the whole school, hand in hand with the culprit, as if paired in the confession, the master walked down to where Christie sat, and said aloud with emotion:

"Bonnie, Bonnie, lad—he and I beg your pardon we are both to blame."

The school was hushed and still, as oldars schools are apt so be when any thing true and noble is being done—so still they might have heard Bonnie's big tear drop on his copy book, as he sat enjoying the moral triumph which subdued himself as well as the rest; and when for the want of something else to say, he gently cried: "Master, forever!" the glorious shout of the scholars filled the man's eyes with something behind his spectacles, which made him wipe them before resuming his chair.

The Farmers' Movement.

A bushel of corn will bring only 15 cents out in Kansas; while it is worth 68 cents in New York. The difference 53 cents, goes into the Treasury of the railroad, for carrrying the corn to market. While the farmers of the Great West are thus robbed, is it any wonder they are establishing "Granges" to protect themselves?

Illustrating the relation of producers to railroads and commission men and consumers, it is asserted that a farmer at Paxton, Ill., shipped 160 bushels of potatoes to Chicago and received $10.40 cents as his share of their value in market, which was $60—the railroad company and commission men absorbing nearly five-sixths the market value of his product.

The Ohio Farmer says: "The Western farmers' anti-monopoly movement is fast being wholly wrested from its legitimate meaning and intent. Every scurvy politician in that quarter albeit, has never in his life so much as turned a furrow, is on the keen scent to ride into office behind an agricultural ist's wagon. Unless the farmers have a shrewd eare, they will find their last end in this matter a good deal worse than the first.

Died Poor.

"It was a sad funeral to me," said the speaker, "the saddest I ever attended in many years."

"That of Edmonson?"

"Yes."

"How did he die?"

"Poor—poor as poverty. His life was one long struggle with the world, and at every disadvantage. Fortune mocked him all the while with golden promises, that were destined to never know fulfillment."

"Yet he was patient and enduring," replied one of the company.

"Patient as a Christian—enduring as a martyr," was answered. "Poor man! He was worthy of a better fate. He ought to have succeeded, for he deserved success."

"Did he not succeed?" questioned the one who had spoken of his patience and endurance.

"No, sir. He died poor, just as I have stated. Nothing that he put his hand on ever succeeded. A strange fatality seemed to attend every enterprise."

"I was with him in his last moments," said the other, "and thought he died rich."

"No he left nothing behind," was replied. "The heirs will have no concern as to the administration of his estate."

"He left a good name," said one, "and that is something."

"And a legacy of noble deeds that were done in the name of humanity," remarked another.

"And precious examples," said a third.

"Lessons of patience in suffering, of hope in adversity, of bravely [illegible] confidence when no [illegible] his bewildered path," was the testimony of another.

"And high truths, [illegible] courage, heroic [illegible]."

"Then he died rich," was the emphatic declaration. "Richer than the millionaire who went to his long home on the same day miserable in all his gold. A sad funeral did you say? [illegible] triumphal procession! Not a burial of a human clod, but the ceremonies attendant upon the translation of an angel. Did not succeed? Why, his whole life was a series of successes. In every conflict he became the victor, and now the victors crown is on his brow. Any grasping, soulless, selfish, man, with a moderate share of brain, may gather money, and learn the art of keeping it; but no one in a hundred can conquer bravely, in the battle of life as Edmonson has conquered, and step from the rank of men a Christian hero. No, no; he did not die poor, but rich—in neighborly love, and rich in celestial affections. And his heirs have an interest in the administration of his affairs. A large property has been left, and let them see to it that they do not lose precious things through false estimates and ignorant deprecations. There are higher things a this world than wealth that perishes. He dies rich who can take his treasures with him to the new land where he is to abide forever; and he who has to leave all behind on which he placed his affection dies poor indeed.

The Crops.

The St. Louis Democrat prints another batch of letters from a great number of correspondent's touching the condition of the crops, especially of wheat and corn Its reports of the greater part of the States of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska, and on the strengh of them and what it gathers from county papers it assumes that wheat is 10 to 12 per cent. greater in area than it was last year, oats 50 per cent. short, and prospects for corn dismal, The peach crop throughout the Southwest is very generally reported killed. It says:

"The tenor of our entire correspondence on this subject—and we have printed several hundred letters already—seems to warrant the belief that both winter and spring wheat will be harvested in great abundance—that corn is very uncertain—thousands upon thousands of acres designed for the purpose not yet having received their first plowing—and that oats will be only about a two third crop. Some mention is made, in the batch of letters printed to-day, of the reappearance of the chinch bug—that direful pest of the wheat field. We do not believe its ravages will be great, this year as it is only specially destructive in drouthy years, and there is no probability that 1873 will be a tear of this class; therefore neither the chinch nor Colorade potato bug will prove very destructive the coming summer, in our opinion.''

Lincoln used to say if he had a son who would part his hair in the middle he would maul him with a squash.

Editorial Excursion.

After a general change of views of the members of the association, it is thought best to postpone the Editorial Excursion to Duluth till the first of July. This is only about two weeks later than at first determined on, but the backwardness of the season and the accumulation of ice in the straits and on lake Superior, has made this necessary. The party will probably be accompanied by the Warsaw silver band, and will go west from Duluth to the terminus of the road, five hundred miles or more, to the Missouri river in Dakota Territory. A separate coach is to be placed at their disposal over all the roads.—Laporte Herald.

The grazing capacities of Texas are prominent among other features of that State. It is estimated that 100 cows, bought for $[illegible], number 3000 head worth $30,000 in ten years. Sheep husbandry is more commended, as this country imports 50,000,000 pounds of wool annually. Texas can raise every variety acquired as cheaply as Buenos Ayres. The pasturage is illimitable, and the natural increase 100 pre cent. annually. Both cattle and sheep can be grazed the year through, in most of Texas, on bunch and gramma, and other nutricious grasses; and when hay is wanted the grasses cure themselves. The Platte valley alone has 32,000,000 acres of rich lands, and the country 1,000,000,000 that will sustain as many sheep and give fine wool and mutton at the lowest cost—in annual temparature of fifty degrees Fahrenheit. The water is good and abundant, and the grazing belt, which stretches west of the Rio Grand, will be reached at Fort Worth, by the Texas and Pacific railroad in 1874.

School Revenue.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction made the May apportionment of school revenue last week. The following is a statement of the amount each county in this Congressional District is entitled to:

COUNTIES.	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
DeKalb	[illegible]	[illegible]	12,404.30
Elkhart	10,225	21,733.48	[illegible]
Kosciousko	8,991	[illegible]	18,251.75
Lagrange	4,889	10,292.16	[illegible]
Marshall	7,390	11,131.42	14,901.76
Noble	7,342	11,201.66	14,304.26
Steuben	4,757	[illegible]	9,656.71
Whitley	5,282	8,727.88	10,822.96

The distribution averages $2.03 to each child of school age in the State. It will be seen also that Elkhart and Lagrange counties pay more into the School Fund of the State than they received out. The other counties receive more than they pay. This can only be accounted for on the aggregate wealth and consequent amount of tax collected is greater in proportion to the number of children of school age in these two county than the others.

The several counties paid into the State Treasury School Fund at the following rate for each child between 6 and 21 years:

DeKalb, for each child	$1.45
Elkhart " "	2.13
Kosciusko " "	1.42
Lagrange " "	2.10
Marshall " "	1.50
Noble " "	1.52
Steuben " "	1.24
Whitley " "	1.63

All received at the rate of $2.03 per child. Twenty-eight counties in the State pay more State School Tax than they receive in return, and consequently contribute thereby to the education of the children of the other counties. Marion county, in which Indianapolis is situated, pays $31,162.63 more than it receives, whilst Allen county (Ft Wayne) receives $12.037.84 more than it pays.

The times are affecting the poor Indian. He complains that none but bald-headed emigrants go West.

Giving seventeen hundred pounds coal for a ton is among "the weighs that are dark."

All things are systematized nowadays. Even every milk train has its cow-catcher.

The season is approaching when drinking men as well as drowning men, catch at straws.

A strong kind of a hint—A young lady asking a gentleman to see if one of her rings would not go on his finger.

APACHE PETE.

Thar ain't no trusting an Injun;
He's a [illegible],
And when he's a doing of suthin' bad,
He's a wishing 'twas suthin' wuss.

And he'll lie and steal, and he'll circumvent
You out of your very eyes,
And he takes his tod in a way that I
As a Christian, do despise.

The most ongrateful, thankless wretch
That ever a feller see!
Favors is lost on the likes of him,
So he never gets none from me.

There was little Pete, a 'Pache boy,
Which we had around the camp,
Down in Arizona, in [illegible],
And I've knowed that sneaking scamp,

When the boys was a havin' a little fun
And shooting, it might be, free,
To mosey behind a rock or stump,
Or shin himself up a tree.

Till a Greaser chap, which was full of tin,
Drawed a bead on the yaller brat,
And Pete never felt the want of specs
To read with, arter that.

They was little shot, and we hooked 'em out
With our knives from the critter's eyes,
Which never squirmed a derned bit,
Nor cusses, nor groans, nor cries.

But he takes a stick, in a blindish way,
And meanders outen the camp,
And strikes a trail for his cussed tribe,
Which we'd corralled in the swamp.

But he didn't forget us, that reptile snake!
I was woke in the dead of night
By the hosses a rairin', and [illegible] round,
And cavortin' mad with fright.

Which it were a stampede, and the cattle broke,
With a painted, yelling mob
A whooping like devils, and that thar Pete
A bossin' the little job.

They stamped the critters; nary a hoof
Nor ha'r was left behind,
And Pete elevated the Greaser's ha'r
Which was kinder goin' it blind.

Wal, thar warn't no jestice out on the plains,
For the sojers wouldn't help,
And you don't go Injun-fighting on foot
If you happen to vally your skelp.

But it shows how the ornery varmints act
If you happen to cross their track;
They just lays for you, and they fetches you
The minnit you turn yer back.

Satisfaction? Wal, no, I wouldn't say
As you'd feel you had much cause
To be satisfied, in a case like this,
By killing a few old squaws.

That's why I'm riled when I hear 'em say
They've an Injun soul as white
As a Christian gentleman's [illegible],
In God A'mighty's sight.

For I put it fa'r to a larned man,
As invited me to drink,
(Rum is my tap) and I sez to him,
"I'd like to know what you think."

And he studied a bit in a jubous way,
And he didn't seem to take,
Which his language were, "Tain't much of a choice
'Tween a bar and a rattlesnake." —Graphic.

JOHN YATES BEALL.

His Trial and Execution for Piracy—An Interesting Leaf from the History of the Rebellion.

[From Harper's Magazine.]

The young Virginian, an officer of the Confederate army, was hung as pirate and spy on Governor's Island, New York harbor, Feb. 24, 1865. The sentence was just, and its execution a necessary part of the discipline of war. Yet now that years have elapsed, and we can review the past without that terrible personal interest that made our hearts burn within us, there is something worthy of note in the story of this man, who, young, wealthy, and educated, threw himself, as it were, into the jaws of death from sincere though mistaken love for his native country.

John Yates Beall was a native of Jefferson county, Virginia. He graduated at the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, and at the breaking out of the rebellion owned a large plantation in his native country; his property was estimated at $1,500,000, and in addition he was said to be the heir of an estate in England. In the earliest days of the war Beall organized Company G, Second Virginia Infantry, and his regiment afterward formed part of the original "Stonewall Brigade," under Stonewall Jackson. He took part in many battles, but it is his piratical expedition among the islands of Lake Erie which brings him within the range of our subject—an expedition which ended in disaster and death. It is well remembered along the lake shore; Buffalo, Detroit, and Cleveland were filled with excitement; the citizens patrolled the streets by night, and visions of a piratical craft sailing boldly in and firing upon the defenseless houses filled all eyes. Exhausted Ohio had sent into the field regiment after regiment beyond her quota, but her northern frontier was entirely exposed, and it seemed an easy thing to sail across from Canada and batter down her towns. Looking back upon it now, it still seems easy; and yet it was never done, although Canada swarmed with conspirators, under the leadership of Jacob Thompson, secret agent of the Confederate Government. The United States had but one war vessel on the lakes, the Michigan, a paddle-wheel steamer carrying eighteen guns. The capture of this boat would enable a small body of men to carry destruction from one end of the lake to the other. In September, 1864, the Michigan was lying off Johnson's Island, Sandusky Bay, which had been used since 1862 as a depot for prisoners of war; here were confined 2,480 men, all, with the exception of about one hundred, officers of the Confederacy, enough to command an army of 80,000 men. The little island was naturally uppermost in the thoughts of the rebel officers in Canada. It was near at hand, a steamer could run across in the night, and in the winter a land force could attack it, for the ice was strong, and nowhere was there more than five miles between island and island, stretching like stepping-stones across the lake from Point Pelee to the Ohio mainland. No other prison was on an exposed frontier like this, and were it not for the guns of the Michigan a rescue might be effected; the Michigan, therefore, must be captured.

On the morning of the 19th of September the steamer Philo Parsons, plying between Detroit, the islands, and Sandusky, left Detroit at the usual hour on her way down the river; at Sandwich, on the Canadian side, four men came on board, and at Malden a party of twenty more, bringing with them a large old-fashioned trunk tied with ropes. As at this period there was a constant stream of fugitives crossing the border, fleeing from the draft, or coming back with empty pockets, this Malden party excited no comment, and the steamer went on her way through Lake Erie, stopping at the different islands, and taking on a number of passengers for Sandusky. After leaving Kelley's Island, the last of the group, suddenly four men came toward the clerk, who, owing to the absence of the captain, had command of the boat, and leveled revolvers at his head; at the same moment the old black trunk was opened, and the whole party armed [illegible] knives and hatchets, and took possession of the defenseless boat. The course was then changed, and after cruising about [illegible] the pirates turned back to [illegible] Middle Bass [illegible] While there the Island Queen, a steamer plying between Sandusky and the islands, came alongside, and, suspecting nothing, threw out a plank in order to land some freight. Instantly the pirates swarmed up her sides, calling upon the captain to surrender; shots were fired—apparently more for the purpose of intimidation than for any real injury—knives and hatchets were held over the passengers, among whom were thirty or forty one-hundred-days men on their way to Toledo to be mustered out. The pirates were few in number, but they were well armed, and held both steamers at their mercy. The captain of the Island Queen made sturdy resistance, endeavoring in vain to cut the ropes that bound his boat to the Parsons; and the engineer, refusing to obey the orders of the pirates, was shot in the cheek. Resistance was evidently useless; the passengers were put into the hold, with a guard over them, and the captain was asked if many strangers had come to Sandusky that morning, and if there was any excitement there. After some delay and discussion among themselves the pirates decided to exact an oath of secrecy for twenty-four hours from the women and citizen passengers, and allow them to go on shore, together with the hundred-days men, whom they paroled, and then the two steamers, lashed together, started out toward Sandusky, the captain of the Island Queen being retained, with the hope that he could be forced to act as pilot. When four or five miles out the Island Queen was scuttled and abandoned, and the Parsons went on alone. A debate sprung up among the pirates as to whether or not they should run into Sandusky Bay; evidently something had failed them, some one had disappointed them. At length the captain was again put into the hold, the boat's speed was slackened, and she was kept cruising up and down outside as if waiting for a signal.

Chief in command of these raiders was John Yates Beall; his appearance and manner rendered him conspicuous among the others, who are described, in the language of one who saw them, as a "mean, low-lived set; Burley, the second in command, being a perfect desperado." In the report of Jacob Thompson, secret agent of the Confederacy in Canada, a document belonging to the rebel archives, the whole plot is related. There were two parts, the first being the expedition by water under Beall, and the second a conspiracy on shore, by means of which the officers of the Michigan were to be thrown off their guard, so that upon a given signal Beall could steam rapidly in, surprise them, and capture the boat. A cannon-shot sent over Johnson's Island was to tell the prisoners that the hour of rescue had come; Sandusky was next to be attacked, and after horses had been secured, the prisoners were to mount and make for Cleveland, the boats co-operating, and from Cleveland strike across Ohio for Wheeling and the Virginia border. The key to the whole movement was the capture of the Michigan.

The plot on shore was headed by a Confederate officer named Cole. As has been related, Beall performed his part with entire success; and had the other head possessed equal capacity, no doubt the plan would have been successful, and the whole North taken by surprise at this daring raid and rescue upon a hitherto peaceful and unnoticed border. The 2,000 young officers riding for their lives through the heart of Ohio, where there was no organized force to oppose them, would have seemed like a phantom band to the astonished inhabitants. Even the famous raid of John Morgan, well-remembered in the great red-brick farm-houses of the central counties, would have been eclipsed by this flying troop, the flower of the Southern army. On the lake Beall would have held the whole coast at his mercy, and the familiar old Michigan, turned into a piratical craft, would have carried terror into every harbor.

But the plot on shore failed. Cole spent his money freely in Sandusky, and managed to procure an introduction to the officers of the Michigan, inviting them to supper-parties, and playing the part of a genial host whose wines are good and generously offered. The tedium of the daily life upon the steamer and in the small town was enlivened by his hospitality, and for some time all went well; but gradually he began to mar his own plot by so much incautiousness and such a want of dexterity in his movements that a suspicion was aroused in Sandusky, and his maneuvers were watched. On the evening of the 19th of September, Cole had invited the officers of the Michigan to a supper-party. Everything was prepared for them, the wine was drugged, and when by this means they had been rendered helpless, a signal was to notify Beall that all was ready for his attack. But in the meantime suspicion had grown into certainty, and, at the very moment of success, Cole was arrested by order of the commander of the Michigan, the signal was never given, and Beall, on board of the Parsons, strained his eyes in vain toward Sandusky and Johnson's Island, cruising up and down outside the bay, now talking with his prisoner, the Captain, and now urging his men to dare all and make the attack alone. But the men, a disorderly rabble, gathered together in Canada, refused to enter the bay; and at last, disappointed and disheartened, Beall gave the signal to turn the boat, and abandoned the attempt. Back went the Parsons, with her pirate crew, past Kelley's Island, where the alarmed inhabitants were burying their valuables, and looking for the flames of burning Sandusky; past Middle Bass, where the unfortunate passengers, watching on the beach shortly after midnight, saw her fly by, the fire pouring out of her smoke-stacks, and "making for the Detroit river like a scared pickerel." The Captain and those of the crew who had been retained to manage the boat were put ashore upon an uninhabited island, and after reaching the Canadian shore and scuttling the steamer, the pirates disbanded, and Beall, the master spirit, was left to brood over a failure which had the additional bitterness of possible success.

In the morning the lake-country people woke up to hear the news. Incendiaries and conspirators in their midst, raiders by land and pirates by sea—these were the tidings of the breakfast-table. Batteries, soldiers and Generals were hurried hither and thither, strict investigations were ordered, guards doubled, and above it all rose the sound of popular comment in newspapers and on street corners, until the news spread through the nation. To be sure, the horse was not stolen, if we call the Michigan a horse, but there was an immense amount of shutting the stable door. And when the old steed appeared again in the various harbors of the lake, she was regarded with curiosity and redoubled affection as one who had indeed snuffed the battle, though from afar.

In less than four months Beall was captured near the Suspension Bridge, and taken to New York. An attempt to bribe the turnkey with $3,000 in gold having been discovered, the authorities sent him to Fort Lafayette, and while there he made an appeal to the bar of New York to undertake his defense. For a time no one responded, but at length Mr. James T. Brady offered his services, and the trial began before a military court. Beall was charged with the seizure of the steamer Philo Parsons, at Kelley's Island, Lake Erie; with the seizure of the steamer Island Queen, at Middle Bass Island, Lake Erie; with being a rebel spy in Ohio and New York; and with an attempt to throw the express car off the track between Buffalo and Dunkirk, for the purpose of robbing the express company's safe. The officers of the captured steamers came from the West to identify him, and it is said that Beall frankly confirmed their testimony, remarking that as regarded the lake affair the trial had been fair and impartial. In the defense a manifesto from Jefferson Davis was offered, asserting that these acts upon the border were committed by his authority, and should be recognized as the acts of lawful belligerents. But the court pronounced the verdict of "Guilty," and Gen. Dix approved the finding, ordering the prisoner to be hung on Governor's Island, Saturday, the 18th of February. In reviewing the testimony Gen. Dix said: "The accused is shown to be a man of education and refinement, and it is difficult to account for his agency in transactions so abhorrent to moral sense and so inconsistent with all the rules of honorable warfare." In this opinion all just-minded persons will agree. And yet, as an example of judgment mistaken but equally sincere—an example of perverted vision—take the farewell letter of Beall to his brother, written on the eve of the day appointed for his execution:

"Remember me kindly to my friends. Say to them I am not aware of committing any crime against society. I die for my country. No thirst for blood or lucre animated me in my course. . . . My hands are clean of blood, unless spilled in conflict, and not a cent enriched my pocket. . . . Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord, and I will repay. Therefore do not show unkindness to the prisoners—they are helpless.

"JOHN YATES BEALL."

A short respite was afterwards granted by President Lincoln to enable the mother to see her son; but on the afternoon of the 24th of February the execution took place upon Governor's Island, New York harbor, the prisoner responding to the prayers of the Episcopal service for the dying, but otherwise remaining apparently unmoved. One item in the newspaper accounts of the day is worthy of note. During the whole of the long proceedings before the execution the young man kept his eyes steadily fixed upon the southern horizon, as if looking toward the very heart of the country for which he was giving up his life.

Beall was finely formed, about five feet eight inches in height, with hazel eyes, brown hair and beard, and a firmly compressed mouth. He was 32 years old at the time of his death.

Weighing the Evidence.

A short time since a worthy magistrate of New Orleans had a rather difficult question to decide, in the solution of which he struck out a path hitherto unknown in jurisprudence. It seems that twelve negroes appeared before him, each one of whom swore positively that himself and the other eleven had done a certain amount of work on a steamboat, and was entitled thereby to wages. It was a steady streak—each of the dozen swearing precisely the same. On the other side appeared the mate of the boat and eleven deck hands, who all swore directly and point blank to an opposite state of facts to that testified to by the twelve plaintiffs. Here the evidence closed, leaving the judge to make up his mind.

His Honor scratched his head, looked wise, pondered a few moments, and then said: "The law makes it the duty of the court, when in doubt, to weigh the evidence. I shall proceed to do so in this case. You," turning to one of the suing darkies, "take your crowd over to Mr. ——'s (a grocery store in the vicinity), and have them weighed, and bring me a certificate of their weight from the clerk. And you," turning to the mate, "do the same with yourself and witnesses. This court must make up a judgment somehow."

The mandate of the court was obeyed; the contestants appeared with their respective certificates, the mate's party outweighing the other by nine pounds, which was sufficient to turn the scales of justice, for judgment was given for the boat.

SOUTHERN RAILROAD PROSPERITY.—A gratifying evidence of Southern prosperity is furnished in the recent report of the directors of the Mobile and Ohio railroad. The close of the war left it a wreck and bankrupt. It now shows a revenue of $1,022,285 for the year just passed, the total earnings having been nearly $3,000,000. This is the great cotton road of the south; the figures, therefore, show an increase of the staple business and trade of that section, and promise well for the future.—Boston Globe.

THE seat in the astronomical section of the French Academy, made vacant by the death of M. Delaunay, has been filled by the election of M. Loewy. The opposing dandidates were Wolf, Stephan, and Tisseraud.

The Crisis in France.

The political crisis which has threatened France for several months has finally been precipitated in a sudden and unexpected manner. M. Thiers has yielded to the trifling majority against him in the Assembly; he and his Ministers have resigned, and Marshal MacMahon has been elected President of the Republic.

The withdrawal of M. Thiers must be regarded as a serious blow to the Republic, and the election of Marshal MacMahon as a very decided step in the direction of some kind of monarchical restoration. MacMahon has always been a Monarchist. He is essentially an army man. He has been the pet and the pride of the French army for twenty years, and every Government has recognized it. The reverses and defeats which he met in the Prussian war, in common with all French officers, did not affect him as it did the others. He was the man to whom President Thiers intrusted the work of reorganizing the army, and there is little doubt that he has set it on its feet again. If Napoleon were alive, and there were a strong Bonapartist party, it is probable that MacMahon would attach himself to the Imperialists. As Napoleon is dead, and his dynasty has no organised strength in France at this time, it is probable that MacMahon will go with the strongest party—whether it be for the Count de Chambord (Henry V.) or one of the Orleans Princes. He has been elected as the representative of the Monarchists, his personal attachments are with them, and, as the head of the Government and the chief of the army, he will play an important part in the drama, or perhaps tragedy, that shall decide what the next permanent Government of France shall be.

It may be that the present anomalous Government of France will hold for a time without trouble of any kind. The army, under MacMahon's leadership, will be able to enforce order throughout the country. But the Monarchical intrigues may now be expected to take a more definite shape than before, and the division of the country between Monarchists and Republicans, as indicated by the recent vote in the Assembly, is so close that the Liberals will hardly yield without a desperate struggle. The situation, therefore, is full of peril. There is no prospect of appealing to the sentiment of the people. The Liberals have been anxious to do this, but have made no headway at it. But, if the appeal were made, the real sentiment of the people could scarcely be brought out under the pressure of the army and the clergy. Another danger which threatens the country is the eagerness to make war on Prussia—a sentiment with which MacMahon, as an army man, will be much more likely to sympathize than Thiers. Another war with Germany would be the most disastrous of all the threatened perils; but, even if this be averted, the present revolution in the Government and the retirement of M. Thiers foreshadow new sorrows and sufferings for a people which is to-day the Niobe among nations.—Chicago Tribune.

The Weather of By-gone Ages.

The late Mr. Babbage, of calculating-machine fame, had a singular faculty of suggesting avenues to knowledge. We are told by one who knew him well that it seemed possible to him to obtain an exact record of the succession of hot and cold years for long periods in by-gone ages. His plan was as follows: Among the stumps of trees in some ancient forests he proposed to select one in which both the number and the size of the rings that have [illegible] annually produced were clearly [illegible]. He would write down the [illegible] of hot and cool summers so marked in this tree, assuming that the larger the ring in each case, the hotter has been the summer. He then proposed to examine other trees of about the same date, until he found some which recorded a series of hot and cold seasons exactly similar to that which he had already noted down, and until the series extended far enough for him to be sure that the resemblance was not accidental, but that he had before him a natural register of the same seasons which had been recorded in the first tree. As some of these trees would be somewhat older than the first tree, while others would have survived it, he considered that it would be possible, so to say, to piece out the information obtained from one tree by means of the others; and that, after examining a great number of trees, his record of warm and cold seasons might be extended at both ends almost indefinitely.

A Popular Theory Combatted.

The long-received and familiar theory that the temperature of northern continents is modified by that of the sea-currents which pass near them is receiving the reasonable opposition which it seems to deserve. Among the most forcible of these opposing views is that advanced and supported by Prof. Whieldon, that the modifying currents exist in the air, not the sea; and one of the most effective of the arguments advanced in its support is, that the accounts of arctic voyagers show sudden rises of temperature when nothing but an unlimited extent of ice is near, while the temperature of the nearest open water was nearly that of freezing. The theory of Prof. Whieldon, as briefly stated, is that open water, melting ice, rain after snow, and other phenomena in arctic regions are not caused by winds warmed by an open sea, but by circulation of air in which warm winds descend from upper atmospheres, which winds are heated at the equator, and, following the known laws of atmospheric circulation, reach the poles. Although this theory threatens to deprive the Gulf Stream of one of its most worthy functions—that of keeping England warm—it is so far in accordance with probability that it it merits discussion if not acceptance.—Appletons' Journal.

THERE are rumors of difficulties, political and otherwise, in the way of the Duke of Edinburgh's marriage with the daughter of the Emperor of Russia. They say that there are high personages at court strongly opposed to it, and that hints have come from "cousins" in Berlin that it might perhaps be as well even if it did not take place. They say further that the Duke of Edinburgh will have his own way, let everybody else do or say what everybody else pleases.

Driving Snipe.

Among our own hunters was a trapper named Shep Medary—a lively, roystering mountaineer, who loved nothing better than to get a joke upon any unfortunate "pilgrim" or "tender-foot" who was verdant enough to confide in his stories of mountain life.

"What a night!" said Shep, as the moon rose broad and clear—"what a glorious night for drivin' snipe!"

Here was something new. Two of our young men were eager to learn all about the mystery.

"Driving snipe! what's that, Shep? Tell us about it."

"Did ye never hear?" replied Shep, with a face expressive of wonder at their ignorance. "Why, it's as old as the mountains, I guess; we always choose such weather as this for drivin' snipe. The snipe are fat now and they drive better, and they're better eatin', too. I tell you a breakfast of snipe, broiled on the buffalo chips, is not bad to take; is it, Dick?"

Beaver Dick, who had just arrived in camp, thus appealed to, growled an assent to the proposition contained in Shep's question; and the boys, more anxious than ever, pressed Shep for an explanation.

"Maybe," said one of them, "maybe we can drive the snipe to-night and get a mess for breakfast; what have we got to do, Shep?"

"Oh, well," responded Shep, "if you're so plaguey ignorant, I'm afeared you won't do. Howsomever, you can try. You boys get a couple of them gunny-sacks and candles, and we'll go out and start 'em up."

Elated with the idea of having a mess of snipe for breakfast, the two young men, under Shep's direction, each equipped with a gunny-sack and candle, followed him out upon the plain, half a mile from camp, accompanied by some half dozen members of our party. The spot was chosen because of its proximity to a marsh, which was supposed to be filled with snipe. In reality it was the swarming-place for mosquitoes.

"Now," said Shep, stationing the boys about ten feet apart, "open your sacks, be sure and keep the mouths of 'em wide open, and after we leave you light your candles and hold 'em well into the sack, so that the snipe can see, and the rest of us will drive 'em up. It may take a little spell to get 'em started, but if you wait patiently they'll come."

With this assurance the snipe-drivers left them and returned immediately to camp.

"I've got a couple of green 'uns out there," said he, with a sly wink. "They'll wait some time for the snipe to come up, I reckon."

The boys followed directions—the sacks were held wide open, the candles kept in place. There they stood, the easy prey of the remorseless mosquitoes. An hour passed away, and yet from the ridge above the camp the light of the candles could be seen across the plain. Shep now stole quietly out of camp, and, making a long circuit, came up behind the victims, and, raising a war-whoop, fired his pistol in the air.

The boys dropped their sacks and started on a two-forty pace for camp, coming in amid the laughter and shouts of their companions.—"Ascent of Mount Hayden," by R. P. Langford, in Scribner.

To Make Fabrics Water-Proof.

A writer in an English paper says: "By the way, speaking of water-proofs, I think I can give travelers a valuable hint or two. For many years I have worn India rubber water-proofs, but will buy no more, for I have learned that good Scottish tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, and, moreover, I have learned how to make it so; and for the benefit of readers, I will give the recipe: In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead and half a pound of powdered alum; stir this at intervals until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Two of my party, a lady and a gentleman, have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they were really water-proof. The gentleman walked nine miles in a storm of wind and rain, such as you rarely see in the South; and when he slipped off his overcoat, his underclothes were as dry as when he put them on. This is, I think, a secret worth knowing; for cloth, if it can be made to keep out wet, is, in every way, better than what we know as water-proof.

Sunshine as a Force.

A good illustration of man's inability for self-support, independently of sunshine, is afforded by the following calculation: The mechanical equivalent of the vertical sunshine upon a square mile of the earth's surface is computed to be 3,333,000,000 pounds raised a foot high in a second. Under the most favorable circumstances, a square mile of terrestrial soil receiving this amount of sunshine, if planted with bananas, would yield, according to the estimate of Baron Humboldt, 50,000 tons of nutritious food yearly. This is the greatest amount of food-producing power of which the earth appears to be capable. But this quantity of food would suffice only 100,000 men, whose united mechanical force would not raise more than 10,000,000 pounds a foot high in a second. It would therefore not be possible for any number of men, by their mechanical force, to produce anything like sufficient light and heat in the absence of sunshine to raise from the soil the food needful for their own support.

THE BEECHER SCANDAL.—A New York letter says that the war against Henry Ward Beecher, on the charge of his improper conduct with women, continues, to the great injury of his paper, the Christian Union, the circulation of which has fallen off wonderfully within the last few weeks. His friends urge him to openly denounce the statements as false, and, in all probability, he will do so before many days, although he is himself opposed to such a course. Theo. Tilton, and Bowen, editor of the Independent, are solely responsible for the slanders, and, as Bowen sits in Beecher's church, the feeling against him runs high.

WHEN A DREAM COMES TRUE.

BY CARL [illegible].

I hold your hand in mine, my darling, darling;
I look within your eyes;
I ask you [illegible] only [illegible]
To hear your [illegible].

And all the while the glimmer of a wonder—
A moon-lit rapture cloud—
Flits o'er my silent heaven of joy, while under
I stare my [illegible] bowed.

I think how oft the future will require it—
"Ah, how then did it seem?"
To-morrow and to-morrow will desire it
Vainly as any dream.

What is it more? In dreams the eyes are holden;
They know not near from far;
I wake with outspread arms, a shadow folding—
And such life's visions are.

It is but touch and sight a little plainer,
A voice that telling, hides;
I doubt, "O heart, art thou so much a gainer?
For something still divides."

O fire of God, O living, winged creature
That in this clay doth rise,
How canst thou warm to the divine nature
These lips and hands and eyes?

Too eager quest, that hastes to their meeting,
Hoping desire to fill,
Thou standest half abashed, in tenderest greeting,
Yet finding welcome chill.

With stinted bread the life-long hunger staying,
With fasting visions blessed,
With longing that makes life perpetual praying,
A stranger has confessed.

If yet, O dearest heart, the world grows dearer,
Because 'tis sweet to stand
(While that which never has enough cries, Nearer)
One moment hand to hand,

What will it be when every barrier breaking
Lets heart to heart come through?
Will heaven leave one corner for an aching
When the long dream comes true?

A Reminiscence of Alexis.

The tender of the appointment to the Russian mission to ex-Gov. Marshall Jewell, of Connecticut, brings to mind the fact that when the Grand Duke Alexis visited the United States, taking in Hartford on his trip, Mr. Jewell then occupied the gubernatorial chair of Connecticut and extended to the royal visitor the courtesies of the occasion. After inspecting the wonders of Colt's great pistol factory, Alexis was taken to the immense leather belting manufactory belonging to Gov. Jewell, his father and brothers. After explaining the processes, the Governor informed the Grand Duke that he had once been a tanner himself. This was a practical example of republican institutions which Alexis was rather unprepared for, and, looking at his companion in wonder, he exclaimed: "A tanner, and now Governor!" If he had been informed that the President of the United States had once followed the same humble occupation, his astonishment would have, no doubt, been almost too great for utterance. His acquaintance formed with the son of the Czar would, no doubt, make Gov. Jewell's residence at St. Petersburg very pleasant.

Fresh Air.

In the name of oxygen, which is the great life principle of the animal body, let us beg you to give the sick person a full and constant supply of fresh air. If you keep him well covered he can never take cold by having the windows open day and night. If the wind blows upon him, rub his face and neck with your naked hands frequently, and there can never be a mischievous impression made there.

Remember that although a well man may live on in a room with imperfect ventilation, a sick one must have the help of a pure tonic atmosphere.

Remember that when typhoid fever attacks an army, and there is a deficiency of hospital accommodations, those who lie in an open shed or exposed to the dews and storms do much better than those who enjoy the average hospital facilities.—To-Day.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Somebody says: I have a recipe to offer. It is a compound, being composed of several ingredients. It is an excellent remedy, and when properly applied has an amazing good effect upon farmers' boys, keeping them at home in the evening when they ought to be there, and making them better than any other place on earth. Here are the ingredients:

1. Treat them as partners with you. Give them to understand that they are interested in the success of the farming operations as much as you are yourself.

2. Converse freely with them. Get their opinions, and give them yours. If at all prudent, make use of their plans, and when you think your own best, explain to them why you did not adopt theirs. Don't keep them altogether in the dark with reference to your plans for the future.

3. Don't require them to stay at home in the evenings all the time. When there is [illegible] entertainment from which they may receive benefit, be sure to let them go.

4. Provide them with plenty of good books and papers; especially referring to agriculture. Let them be well posted in their own business—farming.

5. Never scold them because they don't do their work or attend to the business of the farm as well as you do. Encourage them.

6. Give them a holiday now and then. They look for it, and they need it; and it will be better for you and them to let them have it.

Other ingredients may with safety be added, but the above are of infinite importance, and should never be omitted. Farmers, try my recipe; it acts like a charm.

Plant Often.

One of the best rules the farmer or gardener can follow to insure success in getting a good stand of successful crops, is to plant often. Take, for example, melons, cucumbers, squashes, Lima beans, and such other products as may be desirable to start early, and which often fail when planted early, and apply the rule at the head of this article, and success will be certain. Fit your ground early; make broad, rich, flat hills, slightly crowning, to insure dryness and gain warmth. Then plant early in the season, and one week later put down a few more in the hill with the thumb and fingers; a week later repeat the planting, and if the season be particularly cold and backward, and the first plantings do not appear, a fourth may be necessary. By this method, success is rendered certain; but little time is lost, for the latter plantings will grow so fast as to overtake the first. At the proper time, thinning must be done, and the crop is then handsomely started on its journey.—Rural Home.

Cross-Breeding Wheat.

The Commissioner of Agriculture having caused Prof. Vasey, the botanist, to make a dissection of two-and-twenty flowers of wheat in different stages as they approached maturity, came to the conclusion that wheat is not liable to cross-breeding, unless it is done artificially. The close and well-protected nature of the floration seems to forbid any fertilization from the outside. Hence new varieties are seldom produced by accidental crossing. This is certainly worth being made more generally known, and indicates that measures of a scientific character should be taken to cross-breed and raise new varieties artificially. Not that we believe new varieties will be of any use until we prepare the soil to feed them up to the requirements of their development. New varieties half-starved will not be any better than the old varieties.

Wheat and Oats Together.

The Western Farmer says: The plan of sowing some oats with spring wheat has been practiced to a considerable extent in some parts of Wisconsin, and probably more this spring than ever before. James Gillis, Cooksville, Wis., informs us that in his vicinity but little wheat was sown alone, most farmers sowing from a fourth to a third of a bushel of oats per acre with the wheat. The attacks of the chinch bugs are thought to be prevented to a good degree by this method. There is little difficulty in separating the wheat from the oats.

Food for Poultry.

Sour milk, buttermilk and whey are excellent for poultry of all ages, and at all seasons, especially in winter. Milk is a very good substitute for the insect they are deprived of at that season, and we believe it is much more profitable to give it to them than to swine. Unless it is allowed every day it is best not to give fowls all they will drink, for they will become purged by excess, so that more harm than good will be done. A good way is to mix the corn meal dough with milk.

Domestic Recipes.

To Assist the Growth of Hair.—Wash the head two or three times a week in clean soft water, with two or three drops of aqua ammonia added.

How to Preserve Soap Grease.—Fill a cask half full of good strong lye, and drop all refuse grease therein. Stir up the mixture once a week.

Potato Fry.—Slice (thin) cold boiled potatoes into a pan; cover them with good milk; add salt and pepper as soon as the milk boils; hash them (while cooking), adding a little butter.

To Clean Furniture.—Take equal parts of the boiled linseed oil and spirits of turpentine, and apply sparingly with a soft cloth; Canton flannel is the best. Wipe dry with a clean cloth. Gilt frames may be varnished with common white furniture varnish, and afterwards be cleaned without detriment as early as any other other article of varnished furniture.

Household Suggestions.—The white of eggs with lime makes a good cement for broken china. Honey and castor oil mixed are excellent for asthma; a teaspoonful may be taken night and morning, with great benefit. Rancid lard may be purified by frying it over with a little water, adding a few sliced raw potatoes. The potatoes seem to remove the bad taste from the lard.

Lemon Puffs.—One pound of pulverized loaf sugar beat in the yolks of four eggs; add one tablespoonful extra for every spoonful of flavoring; beat the yolks and sugar as stiff as possible; then add the whites beat to a stiff froth; beat well, flavor with lemon juice and extract of the peel or citric acid, and extract of lemon; drop on buttered papers in small cakes, and bake quickly without browning; leave the puffs on the paper until entirely cold.

Useful Cement.—The following cement is found excellent in cases where it is found desirable to join or close vessels for containing the vapor of acids or highly corrosive substances: Beat and sift finely, dry pipe clay; add painters' drying oil, and mix in a mortar to a molding consistency. Use this lute in cylinders, flattened, and apply to the joinings. The points to which it is applied must be perfectly clean and dry.

Recipe for Indian Bread.—One quart of buttermilk, one teacup of molasses, one teacup of flour, one teaspoon of saleratus, and salt. Steam three hours and bake half an hour.

Hen's Nest (A Fancy Dish).—Take half a dozen eggs; make a hole at one end and empty the shell; fill them with blancmange; when stiff and cold, take off the shells; pare a rind very thin, boil in water till tender, then cut in thin strips to resemble straw, and preserve in sugar; fill a deep dish half full of jelly or nice cold custard, put the eggs in and lay the straws, nest-like, around them.

To Keep Flies from Picture Frames.—Boil four onions in a pint of water, then with a brush wash your frames over in this liquid, and the flies will not light on them. The onion water will not injure the frames, and the odor soon disappears. It is better than unsightly gauze coverings to your pictures.

The Mormon Bible.

I find in my scrap-book, set down there thirty years ago, an item which may be of interest at the present time, when the Mormon problem is evidently approaching a civilized solution. The truth of the statement herein given was vouched for in my presence by a man who was above deceit. The orgin of the "Book of Mormon," so called, has been a puzzle to many, much of it being evidently the production of a cultivated mind, and yet springing to light from the hands of illiterate men.

It was written, in 1812–13, as a literary recreation, by Rev. Solomon Spaulding, a graduate of Dartmouth College, at that time residing in New Salem, Ohio; and, as he wrote it, it professed to be a historical romance of a lost race, the remains of whose numerous mounds and inscriptions are found on the banks of the Ohio. After the work had been completed the author had thoughts of having it printed, and for that purpose he gave the manuscript into the hands of a printer, in whose office it remained for several years, but the design of printing was not carried into execution.

As foreman in the printing-office where Mr. Spaulding's romance was lodged was employed Sidney Rigdon, who afterward figured conspicuously in Mormon history; and there is no doubt that he copied the manuscript, and subsequently gave it to Smith. Upon the appearance of the Book of Mormons, in 1830, there were those living to whom Mr. Spaulding had read parts of his romance, and they recognized his verbiage in the book. Upon search the original manuscript was found among the papers of the deceased clergyman, and on comparison the Mormon Bible proved to have been not materially altered from this parent text. Of course the discovery soon made considerable talk. A great many people went to see the manuscript, and at the expiration of a few weeks it mysteriously disappeared. As there was a Mormon preacher in New Salem at the time, with proselytes at his heels, the mystery of the disappearance was not very deep.—Cor. New York Ledger.

Moving a Washstand.

Says a writer in the Utica Herald: "You never know the latent talent in a washstand until you try to move one. Just to look at it one would think it could be moved with all the crockery on it; but when you pick it up the wash-bowl and pitcher waltz around so that you are obliged to set them down to prevent fracture. Then the drawer comes out and spills everything you have lost for the last three months over the floor, and when you get on that side to keep the drawer in, the doors fly open and bark your shins. When you get to the door, all the corners hit promiscuously, and you get the skin knocked off from three knuckles of one hand; but that makes you just mad enough to finish the the job in twenty-three seconds—and the washstand. The safest way is to hire a man on a fair salary, and charge him for breakage."

We have often wished for a sentence that would clearly explain it. A Western paper kindly supplies the want in this beautiful simile: "You might as well attempt to shampoo an elephant with a thimbleful of soap-suds as to do business and ignore advertising."

Crippled Constitutions.

It is difficult to ruin a strong constitution. To weaken, injure or cripple this source of physical vigor and endurance is an easier task, and may always be accomplished by positively disregarding or violating certain hygeian laws, the observance of which is essential to the well-being of the body and to the sustainment of that vital force by which it is animated and supported. But a good constitution is wonderfully elastic, and even after it has been very hardly dealt with by its possessor, all its pristine vigor may be recovered if the proper course of treatment is adopted. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be justly denominated a constitutional tonic. Not only does it improve the appetite, stimulate the stomach, tone and regulate the disordered liver and bowels an steady the trembling nerves, but it also (and this is its most important effect) restores the staminal strength of the system, where it has given way under the pressure of excessive labor, exposure, privation, acute disease, fast living, a foul atmosphere, extraordinary heat or any other cause. In summer, the constitution is often severely tried by a long continuance of hot weather. Nothing tells more heavily upon the sources of vital activity than solar heat, and hence the expediency of recruiting and replenishing them with a wholesome vegetable tonic, like Hostetter's Bitters, during the summer months.

DR. RADWAY'S
SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT
Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.
If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.
Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for Kidney and Bladder Complaints,
Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.
Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by RADWAY'S RESOLVENT.
PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

MUSICAL ALMANAC for 1873, sent free. LEE & WALKER, Philadelphia, Pa.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, June 12th, 1873

The government has been removed to Long Branch. Applicants for unfilled places will govern themselves accordingly.

A young lady in Missouri emulates the example of our Radical congressmen. Before eloping with a colored man, she inteviewed her father's bureau drawer and voted herself an increase of back pay to the extent of $1,000. She would have made the vote more unanimous, but that was all the old man's pocket-book contained.

Life is cheap Kansas. Old Bender slaughtered about twenty persons, and the Governor of that State offers $500 for his apprehension. This is $25 for each murder. However where Radical officials pay as high as $7,000 for a single vote, they must economize in some direction. It is a pity to have people murdered, but after they are murdered, you know it is impossible for them to vote.

Frank P. Walworth, a young man aged 19, residing with his divorced mother at Saratoga, N. Y., went down to New York City on Monday last, and next morning shot his father before breakfast. The son had sent his father a note of invitation to call at his hotel, which was Stutevant House, and shot him soon after he entered. The excuse of the young chap was, that his father had sent insulting and threatening letters to himself and his mother.

There is not a Sovereign of Europe who runs around the country and spends as much of his time away from the seat of Government as General Grant does. His long-protracted absence and his general inattention to business either prove that he is not necessary to the Administration, or else that the latter must suffer from his absence. In either event we have a fine commentary upon the increasing of his salary from $25,000 to $50,000 a year.

There was a time when the American people sent such men as Webster and Clay and Calhoun to the Senate of the United States. Their names are a National possession. Laterly we have commenced to send men to the United States Senate whose names, even, no fellow can readily find out. We have some prejudices against the sending of rascals like Pomeroy and Caldwell to the Senate, but we have vehement prejudices against sending men there without a local habitation and a name. Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, it appears was elected under an alias. It is said that he had had some misunderstandings in his native State which made it convenient for him to change his name to that of Mitchell, and it is claimed that the election is valid notwithstanding this fact. "The time is out of joint."

The following pleasant information comes from Washington. It is refreshing to read about tax-paying time. It is makes one love the American eagle and want to wrap the stars and stripes around him It infuses poetic thought such as "happy proud America," with such variations as "Pop goes the Weasel,' It is also logical and looks like a legitimate business transaction. But read gentle reader read; Mr Babcock the President's private secretary. will have a nice cottage, costing $50,000 when finished at Long Branch, in July. He has recently put up, in copartnership with Boss Shepard, a costly block of houses in Washington, and upon his return from San Domingo, purchased the residence now occupied by Secretary Delano. We should feel proud of these examples of prosperity, for it speaks the virtue of our institutions to develop men. A few years ago Mr. Babcock was a poor man: He wore a boot on one foot, and the other he ornamented with a gaiter that had known service on several Congressional feet. But the young man was proud and assured his friends that the dissimilarity was caused by a huge bunion. He, however, acknowledged his poverty, but was willing to serve the President, and under the benign favor which attends industrious, patriotic men, who place themselves where they can do the most good, he is now one of the wealthy men of Washington city—all on a salary of about three thousand dollars a year! It shows what young men can do if virtuous and economical.

It having been charged that the Hon. W. S. Holman, Democratic member of congress from this state, had taken the back pay voted to congressmen, the Bartholomew Democrat makes the following statement:

"We have the authority for the statement that Holman has not touched a penny or any other amount of the steal, nor will he ever touch, take or use a cent of that money. Before leaving Washington, after the adjournment of congress, he directed the sergeant-at-arms to cover the amount credited to him back to the treasury, and Gen. Spinner, United States treasury certifies that that has been done."

A Washington letter gives this bit of gossip, which, it appears, is current at Washington: "Gen. Grant's friends have begged him to follow the example of certain timid or anxious or honest Congressmen, and to decline to accept the extra salary of a hundred thousand dollars, which could only become a law by his signature. This, it is further stated. Gen. Grant refuses to do. One hundred thousand dollars is a great deal of money, and too much for a man that does not have money to throw away. 'Then,' say the friends of the President to him, 'why not assume a virtue though yet have it not? Listen to reason! Condemn the salary bill! Pay back the money, and let us give you the $100,000 by private subscription.'" This last suggestion may have a wholesome effect upon the President, who knows.

A dispatch from Galveston, Texas, says that the late heavy rains have completely flooded the country, entailing great damage on the growing corn and cotton crops. Many parts of the State have been visited by the severest hail storms ever known, entirely destroying the growing crops.

The Warsaw Union of last week says:

Hon. William Williams arrived home the other day, and greeted his home constituents in his usual affable and pleasing manner. He does not shrink from the salary grab swindle, but stands up to his actions in Congress like a man, and to the best of his ability makes an attempt to cover up his tracks of taking the people's money without their consent. He alleges the inability of Congressmen to live in a style becoming to their station on the original salary of five thousand per annum. All that might be true, but why did the salary grab advocates not give the people a chance to investigate the matter before election, and understandingly remedy their financial disabilities? Mr. Williams, of course, tells a plausible story, and his argument of excuse and palliation is even better than his colleague, Packard, who wished to silence his grumbling constituents by forking over twelve dollars to the district he represented; but for either it will be simply impossible to find a moral justification of the wrong committed in the retractive part of the salary increase. If Mr. Williams and his Congressional associates cannot maintain themselves creditably and honorably on a reasonable salary, there must be something connected with the official position that needs remedy in a social point of view. The founders of this government never did, nor do the people now, desire to maintain an aristocratic form of government, which has for its chief object the mimicking of foreign courts and nobilities. Mr. Williams does not represent a velvet jacket and short trowsered court at Washington, but a hard-working, industrious people, of whom but one in five thousand earns one-half HE receives. We are opposed to high salaries in officials on various grounds. First, because aspirants will feel themselves more justified in extreme efforts to obtain them; second it has a tendency to do away with our simple Republican government, and give us one of formality, extravagance and aristocracy. Our government was intended for a simple and plain one, which the people, through their representatives, administered. The farmers and mechanics of the Tenth District are not paticular as to the grandeur of the style of living of their Representatives in Congress. With the abandonment of the plainness and simple mode of our institutions will also vanish its Republicanism.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps, time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

Emigration Turning.

Cheap Farms in Southwest Missouri.

The Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company offers 1,200 000 acres of land in Central and South-west Missouri, at from $3 to $12 per acre, on seven years time, with free transportation from St. Louis to all Climate, soil, timber, mineral wealth, schools, churches and law-abiding society invite emigrants from all points to this land of fruits and wers. For particulars address A. Tuck, Land mmissioner St. Louis, Mo.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Festival next Friday.

Ice Cream and Strawberry festival to-morrow night.

Dr. Williams, of Ada, Ohio, is giving our place a visit.

The South Bend Tribune Company is now issuing a daily edition.

Nice fresh strawberries just received at Hare & Co. Ice Cream saloon.

G. C. Ralston, and Cook Ford left last week for a short exploration in Texas.

The material is all ready on the ground for the new brick school house at Corunna. It is to be completed for the fall term.

Messrs. Abright and Shepherd are establishing themselves on the corner of Main and Seventh streets, in the Hebel property.

Davenport & Co. have now the entire room of the building in which they are located. You may look out now for a model drug store.

Mr. Shaffer has removed the frame building from the ground where he purposes erecting a brick.

Columbia City is having just a little taste of small pox. Several cases are reported. The citizens are confident of controlling any further spread of the disease.

Next Friday eve., at the Court House, will be given our first festival. the proceeds to go into the Presbyterian Sunday school. A large patronage ought to be extended.

One of our unexperienced story tellers, a young man of the Washington stripe, says he knows a woman in this county who cut twelve cords of wood in one day. This, remember was a poor day for stories, too.

Mr. Wickham, of the Vindicator a religious paper recently established at Fort Wayne, visited our place this week. Our religious friends should extend a helping hand to this paper.

An editor says: "A man who will take a newspaper four or five years and then refuse to pay for it, should begin his name with an H, and end it with a G, and put an O in the middle of it.

The Tiffin (Ohio) Advertiser says—"Some papers still talk about the New York and Chicago Air Line (Continental) Railway. It is as mythical as the railroad to the moon"

The Auditor and Treasurer submitted their reports to the Board of Commissioners last week. These reports ought to be published in both papers of the county for the information of the public generally.

W. D. McGonigal, formerly editor of a paper in this place, has mounted the editorial tripod of the Angola Republican.—We hope he will be successful in bringing that paper up to a higher standard of journalism.

It tickled Mays so much to have a show come to his town, that he gave Hamilton Bros. a free advertisement.—Press.

It is said that Baxter was so tickled over the defeat of the consolidation that he never smiled again.

It is related that a painter being asked to estimate the cost of painting a certain house drew forth pen and paper and made the following calculation: "A naught 's a naught, three into five twice you can't; I'll paint your house for fifty dollars."

The Fort Wayne Sentinel has partly changed hands—Wm. Fleming, Esq., retiring. The firm is now composed G. W. Riley, Robert D. Dumm and J. Enos Neff. Mr. Dumm still has charge of the editorial department, and we know it is in good hands.

The re-building of the Snyder brick has been let to Messrs. Altenburg & Galloway. Work has commenced. Mr. I. Cool and others will erect an additional building along side of this one, on the west, making a continuous block of six store rooms.

A few weeks ago the Press, of Waterloo stated that a committee from this place had, or was intending to visit Commodore Vanderbilt in regard to the Eel River road. We can now safely say that said committee has been heard from. For full report see vote at Columbia city last Thursday.

The question of a fire engine is being agitated. We ought to have one by all means. The Babcock is highly spoken of and is being generally used. We should have an engine before a great fire visits us, and not wait as they did at Clyde Ohio, until after a fire before one is purchased.

Those who have aspirations for editorial honors and emoluments, can read their fate in this paragraph: "When you see a dead man in the road with long bushy hair, no underclothing, and his boots run down at the heel, you may be confident it is a newspaper man, murdered for his money."

LOST.—A common calf-skin pocket book, containing a small amount of money and some notes and other papers only valuable to the subscriber. Lost last Sabbath in the mill yard at Auburn. The finder will be liberally rewarded by leaving the same at this office.

C. G. SMITH.

Some one in Waterloo is making it rather unhealthy for dogs. A number have been poisoned, among them the fine hunter of Si Lock's. Gus Lent' coach dog got a dose, but was improving at last accounts. The best dogs seem to be the victims while miserable curs that ought to die seem to be impervious.

A very wealthy farmer of Titusville has this "notis" posted up in his field: "If any man's or women's cows or oxen gits into these here oats, his or her tail will be cut off, as the case may be. I am a christian man and pays mi taxes, but dam a man, who lets his critters run loose, say I."

The Marshal has been grading up Seventh and Fifth street and has got them in good shape. We are glad to note the improvement of our town generally. Hank promises to make an efficient officer, and he should have the hearty support of all A lot of workmen are also engaged in fixing up the lower part of town.

Those of our subscribers who receive the COURIER outside of Auburn Postoffice will be required to pay postage on the same, 20cts per year. They are especially indebted to a Republican Congress for this luxury. Our subscribers at Auburn will still receive their paper without this addition by calling at the COURIER office after the first of July.

John Hebel, Esq., of this place, our heretofore highly accomplished and popular saloonist, closed his establishment last Monday. Kegs of beer have taken their departure for more congenial climes and whisky bottles are now holding a convention in the back yard. They have fallen from their high estate—the top shelf—where they were wont to appeal invitingly to a thirsty crowd. Their occupation is gone.

Work is progressing along the whole line of the B. & O. Extension between Tiffin and Chicago—probable the grading will be completed all about one time.—We understand that it is proposed to commence laying the iron from Alma on the Dayton & Michigan R. R.—laying both ways and doing the ballasting at the same time. This will also afford opportunity for the transportation from Baltimore directly to where wanted the Iron Bridges of the Road.—Defiance Democrat.

THE FOURTH AT NEWVILLE.

The citizens of Newville will celebrate the Fourth in a grand old fashioned way. Good speakers and an excellent band have been secured. In the afternoon there will be a trotting match open to all horses, 1st premium $25, 2d $15. After which a running race will come off the slowest horse taking the money, $10. To be followed by a foot race for two purses of $5 and $3. Fire works in the evening, and a grand canvass dance. All are invited.

We are glad to learn that few energetic young men have now reached the point of graduation in the Butler graded school The commencement exercises come off on Friday evening, at 7½ p. m, the 20th of June, in the Luthern church at that place. Remember all are very cordially invited, and do not fail to be present.—Good music is secured for the occasion. speeches by the graduating class. Board of Visitors and others. All come! All come! 2t

The Fort Wayne Sentinel wants to know whether the Danbury News can furnish as enterprising an individual as this one:—A lady here bought two pullets, set 'em to hatching, and when their chickens were old enough to eat traded the whole for two goats. The goats were traded for a cow, and the proceeds of the milk of this cow purchased another cow, and the sale of the milk of both cows furnished other cows. These cows were sold for cash, and the cash used in purchasing a large stock of millinery goods. The chickens are dead, and the goats and cows are doing well. The milliner has now a large and fast increasing business, and wants to marry a handsome young man with $3,000 cash in hand.

A special P. O. Detective has just lodged in Boston jail a night clerk in the P. O., who has spent his winter evenings in stealing thousands of money letters from the large and valuable mails which pass through that office, going to Hunter & Co., Hinsdale, N. H. His plan was to examine each letter over a lamp, and steal every one that contained money. In five months the losses amounted to thousands of dollars, causing great loss and annoyance to Messrs Hunter & Co.; but now that the thief is "behind the bars," the popular publishers have returned to their former sure, certain and satisfactory method of doing business, and deserve their ever increasing business.

If occasionally a few doses of Smolander's Extract of Buchu is administered, the nervous system receives strength and vitality, and fresh vigor is imparted to all function of the body. This treatment may also be relied upon for the extermination of kidney, bladder and glandular diabets, gravel, and all affections of the urino-genital organs in either sex, as well as mental and physical debility, caused by the errors of youth. Relief is at hand in the most aggravated cases.

WOOL MARKET.—There is some wool coming in, in small lots, and the present prices as far as we can learn are about as follows:

Best Fleece Washed	35 to 41
Medium	35
Coarse	30 to 38
Tub Washed Choice	40 to 45
Fair	40
Infiror	45
Unwashed fine	25 to 30
Coarse	28 to 32

Many of our friends think that we have a fat grab in the county printing, but the fact is we get a very small bite. A great deal of the printing for the county is done abroad, a good deal of it at Republican offices. By an arrangement with the Commissioners the Auditor controls this patronage, a custom not usual in our neighboring counties by any means. We have labored faithfully and unceasingly to establish a good paper in this county, but it is not from an excessive amount of patronage from the county that we have been enabled to do this. We believe that work is given to offices abroad that can be done as well and about as cheap at home. It is usual at other places to stand by the county printer, but in this county it seems to be an exception.

Grand Festival

for the benefit of the Odd Fellows,

in their new building

Friday Evening, June 20th, 1873.

Strawberries, Ice-Cream and an abundance of other refreshments will be served up in the best of style.

As this order has suffered considerable loss during the past year, it is hoped that everybody will turn out and make it a success. Every arrangement will be made to accommodate all. The Bretheren from abroad are cordially invited.

We visited Auburn, the county seat of DeKalb county, last week, and found it to be a very flourishing little place of about seventeen hundred inhabitants, and from the amount of building going on we are led to believe that its population is rapidly increasing. A fifteen thousand dollar brick hotel is in process of erection and several large brick store rooms are also being built. By the falling in of the walls of a three story brick block a few weeks ago the place sustained quite a loss but the rubbish is being rapidly cleared away, and the walls will soon again tower to their wonted height upon a surer foundation. The town is beautifully located and is destined to become one of importance. We called upon Bro. Mays, of the COURIER and accepted an invitation to dine with him and Mrs. M. Mays is a good fellow in everything but politics.—We heartily wish him abundant success—Col. City Commercial.

No Go!

That Consolidation not Ratified.

The Stockholders of the Eel River Road Sound on the Goose!

Last Thursday the stockholders of the Eel River road met at Columbia City to vote on the resolution of consolidation of that road with the Saginaw and Hillsdale roads After a few remarks by several persons a vote was taken with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast	11598
For Consolidation	900
Against	10698
Majority against	9798

The result was even more than the most sanguine expected and the people along the line felt quite jubilant.

Had not a united effort been made by the friends of the road in this county, we doubt whether this would have been accomplished. Great credit is due the committees from Butler and Auburn for their untiring efforts in this direction. We now look upon the further extension of the road eastward as a possible event, and it may not be long before work will begin. As soon as the iron is purchased we may look for a forward movement. Our citizens are ready with local aid to assist in its construction, the necessary subscription being now ready, together with depot grounds and right of way. Our people should respond promptly and we believe they have the nerve to do it.

A young girl named Elizabeth Arnold was strangled to death last week in Pekin, Illinois. She was climbing out of a window, when the sash fell, pinioning her by the neck in such a manner that death ensued before she could be extricated.

Our friends at Butler are feeling good over the result of the election at Columbia City. They have worked with a will to secure the Eel River road, and now their hopes are to be realized, we trust, in a short time. Butler makes considerable improvement this year in the erection of new residences, business houses, etc.

Though the past season has been a dull one, Butler has had her share of trade and in thriving times does a lively business in everything. Dry Goods, Groceries, Drugs, Hardware, Boots & Shoes, etc., are well represented, and several very fine store rooms filled with large new stocks are always to be found.

We do not see why Butler may not become one of the best points in the county Located in a fine section with a large territory on nearly all sides, the trade of which finds its way into her market, with an enterprising set of people as citizens, there is no room to doubt her future growth and prosperity. Should the Eel River road be extended eastward she will have the benefit of another line of road, giving her competing lines of transportation. The citizens feel encouraged, and are making prepartion for great improvements in the future.

Commissioners' Proceedings.

Commissioners met in regular session Monday, June 2d,—full Board present:

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

IT is stated that Wall street men have generally determined, in view of the new railroad law going into effect on July 1, to put no more money into Illinois railroads....Jay Gould, it is said, is making big efforts to gain control of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad....The horse disease has reappeared in Brooklyn and New York....George Francis Train has been pronounced sane, and is now at liberty.

BOSTON has been visited by another disastrous fire, which devastated an area of four acres in the business portion of the city. The loss is estimated at from $2,000,000 to $2,500,000. Among the buildings burned are the Glebe Theater and the Chickering Piano Warehouse. During the progress of the conflagration, five firemen were killed by falling walls, and a number of people were injured. ....Three hundred thousand dollars' worth of bonds, stolen from the Waterford, N. Y., bank, have been returned by the thieves, who have received 25 per cent, and immunity from punishment....George Francis Train is about to sue the city of New York for false imprisonment, claiming $100,000 damages....George Francis Train says the late Boston fire was the work of the Commune.

AT the recommendation of Henry Ward Beecher the deacons of Plymouth Church have resolved to institute an investigation into the scandalous charges against their pastor. ....Whitelaw Reid acknowledges subscriptions amounting to $10,683 to the Greeley statue fund....A New York paper says a reward of nearly $300,000 is dependent on the extradition of McDonnell, the Bank of England forger.

THE International Typographical Union, recently in session at Montreal, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, W. R. Mackean, Washington; First Vice-President, Wm. Kennedy, Chicago; Second Vice-President, W. G. Johnson, Troy; Secretary and Treasurer, John Collins, Cincinnati; Corresponding Secretary, J. E. Hawkins, Memphis....Tweed's trial has been postponed till October.

MANSFIELD TRACY WALWORTH, an author of some distinction, was shot dead in a prominent New York hotel, the other day, by his own son, Frank H. Walworth, a young man 19 years of age. Family troubles led to the horrid crime. Walworth, Sr., had been divorced from his wife (who is a daughter of the late Gen. John Hardin, of Illinois) for some three years, but as the son avers, had taken every opportunity to persecute and annoy her. The son had frequently warned him to desist, until at last, growing desperate, he invited the father to his room at the Sturtevant House, where he deliberately murdered him, firing four bullets into his body, one at such close quarters that the face of the murdered parent was scorched by the burning powder.

GEORGE MCDONNELL, the Bank of England forger, has been sent back to London in charge of the English detectives....The defense of young Walworth, who killed his father in New York, will be insanity. Charles O'Conor, the distinguished advocate, who is an old friend of the family, will assume charge of the defense as senior counsel, and will be assisted by ex-Judge Beach, ex-District Attorney Garvin, and others....The extensive woolen mills of John Brown & Sons, Philadelphia, were recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $150,000....New York city does a butter and cheese business of fifty millions of dollars a year, and the dealers in that city, who number 130, have resolved to establish an exchange for the accommodation of this trade....Within a week after the commission of his offense, a New York burglar, who was caught by one of the ladies of a house he had entered after he had fired two shots at her, has been sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment.

The West.

CLEVELAND is agitated by a mysterious murder, the victim being a young man, who was found dead in a vacant lot....A man answering the description of Bender, the Kansas butcher, has been arrested at Cedar Rapids, Iowa....The Grand Pacific Hotel, in Chicago, the largest in the world, has been thrown open to the public....A stock company, with a large capital, is about to be organized in Chicago for the establishment of extensive silver smelting works in that city....At Princeton Mills, Minn., the other day, a little girl playfully threw a pair of scissors at her young brother, the points of which penetrated the little fellow's heart, producing instant death. ....At Saginaw, Mich., last week, two men were killed and several injured by the explosion of a boiler in a planing mill....Two men were suffocated to death in a privy vault, at Columbus, Ohio, last week.

AN accomplice of the Benders was recently arrested at Denison, Texas, and while the officers were en route to Kansas with him, the prisoner got hold of a revolver and blew his brains out..Great consternation exists among the Chinese in San Francisco, occasioned by the murder of one of their countrymen, and their theaters and places of business are closed. ....Federals and Conferates united in decorating the soldiers' graves in the National Cemetery near St. Louis.

THE people of St. Joseph, Mo., have been celebrating with imposing ceremonies the completion of the great iron bridge over the Missouri river at that point. The structure is pronounced equal in strength and beauty to any bridge in the country....The Acting Attorney-General of Wisconsin has given it as his opinion that the proposed pooling of the earnings of the Northwestern and Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads is a violation of the law of the State....Arrangements are being made for a national convention of Irish-born citizens, to be held in Cleveland, O., about the 15th of July next, for the purpose of forming a league similar to the German union....A fire at Peru, Ill., recently destroyed $75,000 worth of property.

AT a saloon "opening" in Chicago, a few nights ago, the proprietor, Charles Last, quarreled with one of his customers, named Thomas Sullivan, and wound up by shooting him dead....A meeting of Western railroad managers was held in Chicago on the 3d inst., at which were representatives, among other roads, of the Chicago and Alton, the Burlington, the Northwestern, the Illinois Central, the St. Paul, the Rock Island, and Ohio and Mississippi railroads. They resolved unanimously to cancel all outstanding passes at the end of this month, and to refuse to issue any more after that date. This order is absolute, except with regard to the passage of employes over roads with which they are connected, and except in cases where roads are compelled by existing contracts to grant passes. Clergymen are no longer to be allowed half-fare tickets, and railroad officers are no longer to exchange passes with each other.

AS THE sheriff was conveying a prisoner from Cassopolis, Mich., to the Detroit House of Correction, the latter stole a bottle of chloroform from the pocket of a physician who was riding on the train, and, thinking it was whisky, drank about a gill of it, from the effects of which he died....The man arrested at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on suspicion of being old man Bender, turns out to be another man....The lager beer brewers have been holding a national convention at Cleveland. From the address of the President it appears that the brewing trade is rapidly increasing in magnitude in this country....The following Western railroads have entered into a compact to abolish the free pass system, and cancel all outstanding passes after the 1st of July: Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Chicago and Alton, Chicago and Northwestern, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Illinois Central, Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute, Ohio and Mississippi, Danville and Vincennes, Gilman, Clinton and Springfield, and the Chicago and Iowa.

The South.

THE Colorado potato beetle is ravaging the potato crop in Northern Kentucky....Robert Atwood, a Louisville merchant, has been sent to prison for twenty years for forgery and embezzlement....Gov. McEnery has issued an address to the people of Louisiana advising their acquiescence in the Kellogg Government until Congress assembles in December.

AN application for a writ of quo warranto has been filed in the Supreme Court of Arkansas against Gov. Baxter, to show by what authority he holds the office of Governor. Should the writ be granted, a conflict will ensue.

VIRGINIA has had ten murders in two weeks. ....John H. Fore, who two years ago shot and killed his brother-in-law, [illegible], in St. Louis, attempted to murder his divorced wife the other day, by assaulting her with a hatchet in the street. He is now in jail playing the insanity dodge....A band of desperadoes recently released all the prisoners confined in the Waco (Texas) jail....The murderer of the two old ladies, Mrs. Johns and Mrs. Dozier, near Richmond, Va., has been arrested. He confesses to having beaten their brains out with a billet of wood. Robbery was the motive....The dispute over the Arkansas Governorship has been settled for the present, by the Supreme Court deciding that it has no jurisdiction in the matter....The cholera has appeared at Memphis in a virulent form....Miss Leo Hudson, the well-known actress, died last week in St. Louis, from the effects of injuries received by the falling of her horse, while playing "Mazeppa," on the 10th of May.

Washington.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: It is stated positively that the Government will sustain Col. McKenzie's pursuit and punishment of the Kickapoos on Mexican territory, and there is no reason to doubt that the recent visit of the Secretary of War to Texas had for its main object the arrangement and authorization of this plan for putting a stop to Indian depredations along the Mexican frontier....The Postoffice Department has suspended the printing of postal cards for the reason that the cardboard submitted was not equal to the contract requirements....Ex-Gov. Jewell accepts the Russian mission.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that counsel for the defendants in the Credit Mobilier suits will, in a few weeks, file a demurrer for a bill in equity, taking the ground that the act under which the bill is drawn is unconstitutional, and that Congress cannot enact for the benefit of the Government what is denied to individual suitors; that the act is in direct violation of the existing laws under which the defendants have a right to ask for protection, and until they are placed on an equality with the plaintiff, there can be no equitable proceedings. This will carry the case to the Supreme Court. It is admitted that the objection of the defendants may quash further proceedings....Postmaster-General Creswell has examined the postal code, to see if it would admit of the free transmission of newspapers' exchanges and of newspapers published within the county, and has come to an adverse conclusion..... The President has received a dispatch from one Asa Howard, of California, offering to contract to capture Capt. Jack on the following terms: "I am to have his head if it is necessary to kill him in taking him; or if taken alive, I am to have the privilege of exhibiting him throughout the United States during the period of one year." The enterprising projector adds: "This, I think, will end the Indian question and the war carried on in the interest of speculators."....A Washington dispatch informs us that a solution of the Louisiana problem is offered by the Congressmen of the St. Louis Convention who have returned from their visit to New Orleans. They propose that a new election be held, under the supervision of a commission appointed by Congress, and that, in the meantime, the State be put under military rule.

THE parties who bid for the contracts for Indian supplies, and who allege that while their bids were lower than others they were not accepted, intend to carry the matter before Congress....The Secretary of the Treasury has directed the Assistant Treasurer at New York to give notice that during the month of June he will purchase $500,000 bonds on the first and third Wednesdays each, and will sell $2,000,000 gold on the first and third Thursdays each, and $1,600,000 on the second and fourth Thursdays each. In all he will sell $7,000,000 gold and purchase $1,000,000 in bonds.

THE President has appointed John A. Bingham, of Ohio, Minister to Japan....The Postmaster-General has not ordered suspension of the printing of postal cards, as was stated, but has sent directions to the Special Postal Card Agent at Springfield not to accept any cards which are printed on an inferior quality of paper....The following is the public debt statement for May:

THE question, What shall be done with the captured Modocs? is the uppermost one just now in official circles. The impression seems general that they will be turned over to the civil authorities of Oregon, to be dealt with as common malefactors....Gen. Meacham, the hero of the Modoc massacre, has gone to Washington.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: The Postoffice Department announces, relative to the non-delivery of the postal cards and the inferior quality of the work, that the requisitions thus far made on the department amount to 22,000,000, and only 8,000,000 have been delivered. The department has declined, as has been stated, to receive the latter installments on account of the inferior character of the card board.

The Agricultural Congress.

At the second day's session, the tariff question was brought before the Congress, in some resolutions offered by a South Carolina delegate. One of these calls for the admission of iron free of duty, reciting that it is the chief material in railway and steamship building, and the tax on it is one great cause of high transportation charges.

The resolutions were referred.

Mr. Ritchie, of Ohio, offered a preamble setting forth that the importation of foreign wool last year reduced the price of American wool less than half the price of one year ago, while the current prices of clothing and woolen goods to the consumer were as high as ever heretofore:

Resolved, That the members of the several societies, as well as farmers and workingmen, be requested to use their influence so with Congress that whether we have a high or low, or protective or prohibitory, or a revenue tariff, it may operate equally on all classes of the country, promote the greatest good of the greatest number, and not protect a small number at the expense and greater cost of the masses of the people.

Referred.

Mr. Hendley, of Alabama, offered a resolution providing that Congress should consider the feasibility of furnishing a complete nomenclature, on a scientific basis, of the grape as cultivated in the United States. Referred to the Committee on Horticulture.

Mr. Stephens, of Minnesota, offered a resolution recommending rotation of crops. Referred to the Committee on Crops.

Mr. Reilly, of Missouri, from the Committee on Entomology, reported, offering resolutions providing that Congress shall require railroad companies and settlers receiving the benefit of the homestead acts to plant trees on one-tenth of their land; that agricultural colleges should give more attention to forest and tree planting and horticulture; that railroads be requested to plant trees on their lands; that each State should employ an entomologist, and that agricultural societies should give more attention to the subject. Adopted.

The attempt to get a vote of approval for the Morrill bill to distribute the public lands among the agricultural colleges was a failure. The introduction of the resolutions to that effect provoked a spirited debate, which ended by laying them on the table.

The resolutions condemning the Eight-Hour law, and requesting Congress to repeal it, also provoked a lively discussion. They were voted down by an overwhelming majority.

The Committee on Transportation made their report. After a long debate, in which nearly every member expressed his dissatisfaction with it, a motion was made and carried to recommit the report to the committee.

At the evening session, the report was again presented, in an amended form, and adopted.

W. H. Jackson, of Tennessee, was elected President for the ensuing year.

The third and last day's session was marked by another attempt to take up the resolutions, previously laid on the table, approving the distribution of the public domain among the agricultural colleges, but it was unsuccessful.

Consideration of the proposal for a State railroad from Leavenworth to Port Royal was postponed till next year's meeting.

The resolutions touching the Eight-Hour law were again discussed, but no definite action was had.

The question of transportation was discussed at length, the general opinion being expressed that rates are exorbitant, and that relief should be had through some channel, but the question was, How is it to be obtained? The majority of the convention evinced an indisposition to bringing about any antagonism with the railroad corporations of the country, but seemed rather to prefer to harmonize the interests of the producer and the carrier.

The Committee on the Railway System, by its Chairman, Gen. Jackson, of Tennessee, reported a series of resolutions on the subject, which were adopted unanimously, which embody the equitable view of almost the entire body, and evince a conciliatory disposition on the part of the Convention.

The subject of pomology was brought up, and delegates were appointed from the several States to attend the meeting of the American Pomological Society, to be held in the city of Boston.

A resolution was adopted asking the Government to send weather reports to all postoffices and railway stations, so that farmers may have the benefit of them, as well as the readers of daily newspapers.

The Congress adjourned to meet at Atlanta, Ga., on the second Wednesday of May, 1874.

THE MODOCS.

Surrender of the Entire Band—Capt. Jack and Three Companions Again Escape.

A dispatch dated Tule Lake Peninsula, May 29, gives the following details of the scout after Capt. Jack, the capture of him and his band, and the subsequent escape of that noted warrior: The cavalry and artillery command, and Warm Spring Indians, under Col. Green, left Boyle's camp at 2 o'clock this morning, and rode in hot haste to Clear Lake, where Gen. Davis issued special orders for a scout. Bogus Charley, Steamboat Frank, Shacknasty Jim and Hooka Jim accompanied the expedition and led the way to Jack's Willow creek retreat. They led the troops to a point within a mile of the stronghold. Capt. Hasbrouck passed up the north side of the creek with his squadron; Capt. Jackson's squadron over the creek along the south side; Capt. Hasbrouck, having had a mile further to travel than Capt. Jackson, did not arrive at the stronghold in time to accomplish the desired connection. Jack was nevertheless surprised. At 2 o'clock this afternoon, Jackson's men came across two pickets, on the bluff near the creek, and ran them through the juniper to Jack's retreat. The fleeing Modocs cried out, "Run quick! Run quick! Soldiers coming!"

Capt. Jackson deployed his skirmishers along the face of the bluff. Though expecting to receive a heavy fire, the men ran to the front like deer under the lead of the officers. Suddenly the Modocs conversant with English cried out: "Surrender! Surrender! We no fight. We want talk peace. We like peace talk."

Boston Charley, the murderer of Rev. Dr. Thomas, came in full view, and was immediately covered by a dozen rifles. Charley [illegible] into camp, as he feared the Warm Spring scouts. He threw down his rifle and extended his hand in token of friendship. The proffered member was cordially grasped by the scouts. Charley was then passed to the rear under guard. Next he was taken to the other Modoc captives, and by them interviewed. He says that several of Jack's best warriors wanted to leave him and come into our camp, and put up a job on him. His gun was returned him, and he was allowed to depart on his mission. Hardley had this arrangement been effected when the rifle in the hands of Steamboat Frank was accidentally discharged. Several Modocs who stood with uplifted hands decamped at this point. The accident was explained by Charley, and all suspicions of foul play removed, when another accident caused Charley more annoyance. Capt. Hasbrouck's command reached the edge of the creek as Charley came over the bluff, and of course he was gathered in as a prisoner a second time.

Two hours afterward he was released and sent after the fleeing Modocs, but he failed to overtake them. Not a shot other than the accidental one was fired. Had Hasbrouck formed the desired connection on time, the entire band would have been killed or captured.

It was impossible for his command to accomplish the task. His troops did all that could be done by any man. They rode over fragments of lava, and one mile further than the distance ridden by Capt. Jackson's command.

The surprise resulted in the surrender of Boston Charley, Princess Mary, sister of Capt. Jack, Black Jim's woman, five other female Modocs from 9 to 90 years of age, and the capture of seven ponies and mules.

The Modocs actually slipped from the grasp of the troops. There was no help for this result. Jack's retreat this time was inside of the canon through which runs Willow creek. The canon has precipitous sides, averaging forty feet high. There are few places where the canon can be entered by troops within six miles of Jack's last home. The Modocs escaped by running down the canon, so now the Modoc captives will try to wean more of Jack's warriors from him.

ANOTHER SCOUT.

A dispatch dated May 30 says: At 6 o'clock on yesterday morning the troops left Willow creek camp for a sharp and decisive scout, and met with admirable success. The Warm Springs trailed the Modocs across the creek, [illegible] direction, then due north, and finally to the rocky cliff bordering Langell's valley on the east. This scout from the outset was the most exciting of the campaign. The freshness of the tracks and the apparent proximity of the Modocs maintained continual excitement. It led over ridges, over mountains, along canons and valleys, and over small streams. The water-route was traveled with difficulty by the best-trained horses. Miles upon miles of lava in fragmentary form was crossed.

The troops literally left behind them a trail of blood and horse-shoes. Several miles south of the valley the scouts lost the trail, and we suffered a detention of two hours. The halt was broken by sudden yells from the Warm Springs and cheers from the soldiers.

The command "forward" was given by Col. Green; the scouts were called out to the right and left of the line, and covered the trail. Then came troop K of the 1st cavalry, Maj. Cresson commanding. Lieut. Bacon, in charge of the skirmishers of troop E, belonged to the squadron of Capt. Jackson. Capt. Hasbrouck's squadron held another equally important position, and was, as usual, on time. Along the crest of the bluff and down the steep trail on its side charged the entire force of 230 men. Suddenly four rifle shots were fired from the rocks, and four bullets whizzed over the soldiers. A line of skirmishers deployed along the crest of the bluff started the Modocs from their lair. About this time Scar-faced Charley and two or three other Modocs rushed down the rocks and cried out: "We surrender! Don't shoot." Five Modocs came in, and at once hostilities ceased. Dr. Cabaness, of Greda, a contract surgeon who has long been acquainted with the Modocs, went up among the rocks and made the peace negotiations. All the Indians, including Jack, agreed to come in. Cabaness slept with them last night. A few moments since Scar-faced Charley, Old Schonchin and ten warriors surrendered. Jack and three others decamped by night.

The End of the Farce—Capt. Jack, Surrounded in the Last Ditch, Surrenders Unconditionally.

A dispatch dated Clear Lake, June 1, says: A series of prolonged yells and cheers aroused the camp from a pleasant siesta. Gen. Davis, Gen. Wheaton, and other officers, and all the men rush from the house and tents to find the cause of the uproar, and at once the whole camp was in commotion. Down the level plain north of the house was a grand cavalcade of mounted horsemen. The steeds rushed forward at once at a furious rate, and soon neared the groups of spectators scattered about the premises. "Capt. Jack is captured!" shouted a sturdy sergeant. Again the valley echoed with cheers and yells. The mounted command was that of Perry. He had returned from a scout of 23 hours. Three miles above the mouth of Willow creek, and at half-past 10 o'clock this morning, the Warm Spring scouts struck a hot trail.

After a brief search the Modocs were discovered. Col. Perry surrounded the Indian retreat. His men were bound to fight. Suddenly a Modoc shot out from the rocks with a white flag. He met a Warm Spring, and said Jack wanted to surrender. Three scouts were sent to meet Jack. He came out cautiously, glanced about him a moment, and then, as if giving up all hope, came forward and held out his hand to his visitors. Then two of his warriors, five squaws, and seven children darted forth and joined him in the surrender. Jack is about 40. He is five feet eight inches high, and compactly built. He has a large and well-formed face, full of individuality. Although dressed in old clothes he looks every inch a chief. He does not speak to any one. The Modocs are grouped in the field near the house, and surrounded by a guard. Spectators peer into Jack's face with eager interest, but he heeds them not. He is still as a statue.

The Winding Up of the Modoc War.

A letter dated Tule Lake Peninsula, June 2, says: After writing the report yesterday I rode to this camp and dispatched it by courier. The captives and captors remained at Applegate's ranche. Before night, Capt. Jack, the murderer of Canby, and Sonchin, Meacham's murderer, were ironed together and placed with the other warriors in a small building adjoining Applegate's house, under guard. Neither Jack nor Sonchin spoke a word. Not a muscle of Jack's face moved. Scar-faced Charley protested against the indignity in behalf of his fellow-captives, and said none of them intended to escape even if an opportunity was offered. He obtained little satisfaction and retired in disgust, as usual.

The services of the Warm Spring Indians are dispensed with. They held a glorious war-dance until midnight. They leaped and howled about the fire, and indulged in other frantic demonstrations of delight. The efforts to christianize the Warm Springs have been eminently a success, for most of them are members of the Methodist Church. They overflow with fervor. All the military force of the expedition will be united at this point. The cord to Gen. Canby's hat was found in Jack's satchel. Col. Green's capture was made in Oregon; Col. Perry's in California. The question now is, What will be done with the Modocs?

To-day I paid a visit to old Sheepy, on one of the small islands in Little Klamath lake. The old Indian told me he had five Modocs on the island, and would surrender them to John Fairchild as soon as Fairchild returned from Clear lake. We saw one of the Indians, Teeneeback. He was badly wounded, and will probably die.

AN Albany damsel asked one of her fellow-boarders, a stylish dry goods clerk, at the breakfast table, "Why is your mustache like my back hair?" He blushingly gave it up. The answer caused him to blush still more: "Because it is all down."

Extraordinary Emigration.

THE London Pall Mall Gazette thus laments the exodus to the United States: "It is extraordinary that the working classes do not seem more inclined to stay at home and enjoy the political privileges which they have of late gained, and which they were supposed to prize so highly. They appear to be leaving us in swarms. The exodus from Liverpool to the United States and Canada this spring promises to be the largest on record. The number of intending emigrants which daily reach Liverpool is so great that the lodging-house keepers find it difficult to accommodate them, and the consequence is that large numbers of the emigrants have to be temporarily lodged until such time as vacancies occur in the customary lodging-houses. As showing the extent of the exodus, it is generally believed, says the Manchester Examiner, that upward of 10,000 emigrants left Liverpool last week for the United States and Canada. This number, of course, does not include those who would embark on board the steamers calling at Londonderry and Queenstown.

"From the number of emigrants at present in Liverpool, and that are expected within the next few days, it is computed that very soon from fourteen to sixteen thousand people will have sailed from the Mersey in thirteen steamers for the United States and the Canadian ports. Many of them, no doubt, are Germans, and some are from the Baltic ports, but vast numbers are English and Irish, and why they should leave us at this rate when we have so large a surplus in the exchequer that we hardly know what to do with it—when we are almost alarmed at our own prosperity—when we have a more than paternal Government, ever anxious to perform achievements, and to give offense to nobody—is a question which only political economists can answer. The tide of emigration from Germany is almost equally marvelous, for if there is a prosperous country in Europe it is Germany, beyond a doubt. It may be said that the emigrants dislike the idea of military service, but this would show a lamentable, and, indeed, incredulous blindness to the glorious prospects opened by arbitration. Altogether, this mania for fleeing from peace and prosperity is very singular.

Trouble with the Postal Cards.

The alacrity with which the American mind seizes upon the postal cards, wherever they have penetrated, as a cheap and safe method of rending the peace of happy families, shows that there is fun and misery ahead. There was a young man of Utica, a nice young fellow, just home from college for a little vacation; his father destined him for the ministry. Well, a postal card came to him the other day, on which was a bill for wine, gin and cigars. The father got hold of it, of course, and how much stock does he take in his son's piety now? A Philadelphia gentleman, of known probity and correct business habits, was pleasantly informed the other day, by postal card, that, "Unless that small bill for washing was settled, Mrs. Mulloney would bring suit before an alderman." Poor man, it cut him to the heart, for his clerks saw it, and he feels like a sheep thief. Another Philadelphia man received this suggestive epistle:

DEAR GUS: I will be on at 6 p. m. Put a bottle of Rœderer on ice. Yours,
J. T. V.

"Gus" is a church deacon, a man of stainless reputation, and an exemplary Christian; he doesn't know "Rœderer" from fusel oil. But the postoffice clerks, the carrier, and his family saw that card, and it is a thorn in his side that they think he is accustomed to drink iced "Rœderer" with "J. T. V." And a man is so helpless, too. He may get a bushel of cards every day, each one containing a villainous libel, but he has no redress. A population that will stand this sort of thing is a good property just now.—Springfield Republican.

Causes of Sudden Death.

Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from "disease of the heart," do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden deaths, experiments have been tried in Europe, and reported to a scientific congress held at Strasburg. Sixty-six cases of sudden death were made the subject of a thorough post-mortem examination; in these, only two were found who had died from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty-six had died from apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs—that is, the lungs were so full of blood they could not work, there not being room enough for a sufficient quantity of air to enter to support life. The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are cold feet, tight clothing, costive bowels, sitting till chilled after being warmed with labor or rapid walk, going too suddenly from close, heated rooms into the cold air, especially after speaking, and sudden and depressing news operating on the blood. The causes of sudden death being known, an avoidance of them may serve to lengthen valuable lives which would otherwise be lost under the verdict of "heart complaint." That disease is supposed to be inevitable and incurable; hence many may not take the pains they would to avoid sudden death if they knew it lay in their power.

AN exhibition more wonderful and interesting than that at Vienna will be held in Russia about the middle of August. The scene of its operation is the historic city of Nijnii-Novgorod, which is situated at the confluence of the Volga and the Oka, in Central Asia. The ordinary population of the ciiy is about 32,000 inhabitants, but during the fair that number will be augmented by an addition of 300,000 or 400,000 visitors from all parts of Europe and Asia. The fair is held in an immense stone building containing 3,000 shops, in which the sales are made. One hundred and forty-five million dollars' worth of wares and goods were brought to last year's fair, and out of that immense quantity only $20,000,000 worth remained unsold. All kinds of goods and manufactures are sold at this mammoth fair, and an opportunity will be afforded for seeing collected together the people of all countries, and the modes of traffic of every race in Europe.

Concrete Houses.

The English papers are giving very flattering accounts of a new method of constructing buildings for all purposes, by the use of wire and concrete. A framework is made of wood or iron supports, along which wires are stretched, to which the concrete is applied. By this arrangement, not only are the walls and floors of the building made, but the doors, stairs, banisters, partitions and shelving are formed of the same material. For doors, windows and door casings, as well as for the thin partitions, some fibrous materials are worked into the concrete in order to produce a strong cohesion and to prevent cracking. Buildings made in this manner are absolutely fire proof, and are remarkably cheap. A house made in this way was subjected to a very great heat from fires made on the outside, and the building not only escaped injury of any kind, but persons remained in the upper story all the while. Even the furniture in the room was uninjured. Several large blocks and numerous farm buildings are being constructed of wire and concrete in the north of England. Houses constructed in this way require no lathing, and the flues for carrying off smoke and foul air are formed in the walls. By using cements of different colors buildings may be made highly ornamental. It is quite likely that buildings of this kind will soon be erected in this country. It would seem that this invention would solve the problem of how stock shall be sheltered.

Thoughts for Mothers.

BY GAINES.

Oh, ye mothers of the 18th century, listen, read, ponder, and take warning from one who has been considering for some time the portentous immoral influences that are thrown around your children by your own acts. My object in thus addressing you is in a feeble way to endeavor to show you the tendency that your instability of decision has upon your offspring, and if by so doing I may be enabled to reach the better feelings of one who has been guilty of my observation, I shall feel that I have been amply rewarded for my trouble in thus addressing you; and if they do not accomplish that for which they were intended, I shall also feel that I have tried to remedy an evil and thereby benefit the rising generation, and consequently shall not be held accountable for knowing an evil and not endeavoring to expose it. The first lesson a mother should teach her child should be, "My child, always speak the truth." "Never tell a lie," "God loves truthful childrenr" In the nursery, then, the child is taught that God, who made him, provides for his every want and protects him during the hours of refreshing sleep, frowns upon and condemns every shade of falsehood. When he enters the primary school and commences to read, he is told of the illustrious Washington and his father's cherry tree. Then, too, his teacher, if he be a moral man (and I think only such should be privileged to teach), also teaches him the great importance of his always speaking the truth. By this method of training, and strict adherence to virtue, charity and truth, you carry out that Divine precept which says, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." How often is it the case that mothers will say to their children, "If you do that again, I'll whip you?" The child discontinues whatever he is doing for a short while, but commences again in a short time; and so soon as his mother's attention is drawn to him, he hears again the oft-repeated threat, "If you do that again, I'll whip you." As often as the child disobeys, she threatens until forbearance ceaseth to be a virtue, two or three times, and then perhaps she will thrash him. Sometimes it is the case that she will have to speak to her child six or eight times ere he will listen to her, and not then unless he thinks 'ma's in earnest. (It is frequently the case that fathers, deeming it not their duty to correct their children, impose this all-important duty upon their mothers. This should not be, but the fathers should have that control over their children that their influence over them would deter them from disobeying their mothers in their absence.) Now, what effect has such training, as narrated, upon the child? I would say a very immoral one, for it teaches him that his mother don't at all times mean what she says, and that she endeavors to teach him to do that which she don't do herself. Consequently he says to himself, "I'll only believe her when I shall think that there will be danger of being thrashed if I don't." It teaches him, also, when he arrives at the age of maturity, to disregard law, shun virtue and those moral influences which would make him a blessing to his family and an honor to his country. Oh! how important, then, is the correct training of our children. There are many mothers who, while the child is two, three or four years old, pursue the course of treatment as narrated, and consequently, in the end, are compelled to give a child a great many more whippings to bring him round all O. K. than they would were they positive and at all times truthful to him. Some mother, at the perusal of these lines, might say I insinuated they told falsehoods, untruths, lies to their children. I would answer such an one thus: My dear madam, if I were to promise you that if you did for me a certain thing, that I would make you a handsome present, and were you to perform that thing and I not make you the present, but promise again as before, would you believe me? Wouldn't you tell your friends that I had lied to you, and that no dependence could be put in me? Most emphatically you would. Now, what's the difference? A mother says to her child, in words of emphasis, "If you get up there again, or go out o' doors again, I'll whip you." Mothers, haven't you said it? The child does get up there again, and goes out o' doors again, and the mother, instead of fulfilling her promise, thereby showing her child she means what she says, in words of vehemence, with a scowling brow and eyes flashing daggers, stamps her tiny foot upon her carpeted floor, and with alabaster arm raised aloft, as if to call Heaven to witness her vow, exclaims as before, "If you do do that again, I'll whip you." And again and again does the child disobey, until finally, when the mother's store of patience is expended, she takes the poor little fellow and almost whips him unmercifully, when "a stitch in time would have saved nine;" for "as the twig is bent so is the tree inclined."

Since I have pointed out an error in the training of the rising generation, now let me, in as few words as possible, give what I conceive the best mode of training your children. Never, no, never promise your child anything without fulfilling your promise. If you promise to whip them for something that they may be guilty of in future (though it is best not to promise), never fail to do it. It matters not how much you regret to do so, how trying it may be upon your motherly feelings to accomplish the task, if you value the best interests, love and future welfare of your child, you must fulfill your promise. Be truthful to them in all things; never accuse them of a fault unless you know they are guilty. Teach them to reverence God and eschew evil; love virtue and hate sin; imitate the illustrious and despise the slothful; be as wise as the serpent and harmless as the dove. So soon as your child can understand you, be positive with him, and make him to understand at the outset of his training that you mean just what you say. This lesson instilled into his youthful breast will never be eradicated by time, and in the end he will bless you. This was the lesson taught me, and may God bless my dear parents for such. Time will not erase them from my memory. Those moral lessons taught me by precept and example will never be obliterated from the soul. The happy reminiscences of my boyhood days bring back to my mind those useful lessons of virtue, temperance and morality which my parents endeavored to instill into my little heart. God has blessed them for it, and nine out of ten children are now members of the church; the tenth, though not a member of the church, is highly respected, and has the influence of the people in whose midst he resides. May he soon be also a member.

My parents' mottoes were, "Implicit obedience," "Come when you are called," "Speak when you are spoken to," "In company be silent," "Eat what is set before you, asking no questions, such as 'Ma, I want some of that pie in the sideboard, or that pickle or preserves in the safe,'" etc.

In conclusion, let me say to you, Oh, remember you have in your keeping immortal souls, and the training you give them will not only effect them here on earth, but also in eternity. Train your child for that better land where he may forever bask in the glorious sunshine of our Redeemer's countenance, where he will not suffer disease, pain nor death, but enjoy peace eternal; but, alas! if you do not train him thus, there is a probability of his going where all is darkness, misery and eternal condemnation.

Making a Garden.

We suppose there is a time that comes to every man when he feels he should like to have a garden. If he takes such a notion he will tell his wife of it. This is the first mistake he makes, and the ground thus lost is never fully recovered. She draws her chair up to his, and lays one hand on his knee, and purses up her lips into a whistle of expectation—the vixen—and tells about her mother's garden, and how nice it is to have vegetables fresh from the vines every fresh morning, and she will go right out and plan the whole thing herself. And so she does. He takes his spade, and works himself into a perspiration, and she tramps around under a frightful sun-bonnet, and gets under his feet, and shrieks at the worms, and loses her shoe; and makes him first vexed, and then mad, and then ferocious.

After the garden is spaded he gets the seed and finds she has been thoughful enough to open the papers, and empty thirteen varieties of different vegetables into one dish. This leads him to step out doors, where he communes with Nature alone for a moment. Then he takes up the seed and a hoe, and a line, and two pegs, and starts for the garden. And then she puts on that awful bonnet, and brings up the rear with a long-handled rake, and a pocket full of beans, and petunia seed, and dahlia bulbs.

While he is planting the corn, she stands on the cucumber hills, and rakes over the seed-pan. Then she puts the rake-handle over her shoulder, and the rake teeth into his hair, and walks over the other beds. He don't find the squash seed until she moves, and then he digs them out of the earth with his thumb. She plants the beet seed herself, putting about two feet of earth and sod upon them. Then she takes advantage of his absorption in other matters, and puts down the petunia seed in one spot, and afterwards digs them up, and puts them down in another place. The beans she conceals in the earth wherever she can find a place, and puts the bulbs in the cucumber hills. Then she tips over the seed-pan again, and apologizes, and steps on two of the best tomato plants, and says, "Oh, my!" which in no way resembles what he says.

About this time she discovers a better place for the petunia seed, but having forgotten where she last put them, she proceeds to find them, and within an incredibly brief space of time succeeds in unearthing pretty much everything that has been put down. After confusing things so there is no earthly possibility of ever unraveling them again, she says the sun is killing her, and goes over to the fence, where she stands four hours, telling the woman next door about an aunt of hers who was confined to her bed for eleven years, and had eight doctors from the city, but nothing could give her any relief until an old lady—but you have heard it before.

The next day a man comes to his office to get the pay for a patent seed-sower which his wife has ordered, and he no more than gets away before the patantee of a new lawn-mower comes in with an order for $10, and he in turn is followed by the corn-sheller man, and the miserable gardener starts for home to head off the robbers, and finds his wife at the gate, with his own hat on, and just about to close a bargain with a smooth-faced individual for a $200 mowing-machine, and a pearl-handled, ivory-mounted hay-cutter. He first knocks the agricultural-implement agent on the head, and then drags the miserable woman into the house, and, locking the door, gives himself up to his emotions.—Danbury News.

The Mistleto.

The mistleto is a true parasite; that is, it does not merely live on trees, as moss and lichens do, but sends its almost invisible roots into the other plant's structure, and takes the sap of the other tree to support the life of its own. Like parasites among human kind, they have very little "backbone," and easily crumble when dried for herbarium preservation. Who has not heard of the English custom of kissing under the mistleto? Yet this plant, which enters so largely into English traditional history, has never been met with in a wild state in the vast quantities which the English markets about Christmas time would seem to indicate grows in England, therefore much of it is brought in crates from the forests of Germany. At the present time it abounds mostly on cultivated apple trees. Tradition tells us that it grew chiefly on the oak, and that it was held in great veneration on that account by the Druids. The mistleto is propagated by putting the seed in a slit of the bark of the tree on which it thrives.

How does a young lady who is engaged find herself? Mistaken (miss taken).

The Human Ear.

Let me describe what is probably the most frequent way in which the ear is impaired; that is, by the attempt to clean it. It ought to be understood that the passage of the ear does not require cleaning by us. Nature undertakes that task, and in the healthy state fulfills it perfectly. Her means for cleaning the ear is the wax. Perhaps the reader has never wondered what becomes of the ear-wax. I will tell him. It dries up into thin, fine scales, and these peel off, one by one, from the surface of the passage, and fall out imperceptibly, leaving behind them a perfectly clean, smooth surface. In health the passage of the ear is very dirty; but, if we attempt to clean it, we infallibly make it so. Here—by a strange lack of justice, as it would seem, which, however, has no doubt a deep justice at the bottom—the best people, those who love cleanliness, suffer most, and good and careful nurses do a mischief negligent ones avoid. Washing the ear out with soap and water is bad; it keeps the wax moist when it ought to become dry and scaly, increases its quantity unduly, and makes it absorb the dust with which the air always abounds. But the most hurtful thing is introducing the corner of the towel, screwed up, and twisting it round. This does more harm to the ears than all the other mistakes together. It drives down the wax upon the membrane, much more than it gets it out. Let any one who doubts this make a tube like the passage, especially with the curves which it possesses; let him put a thin membrane at one end, smear the surface with a substance like the ear wax, and then try to get it out so by a towel. But this plan does much more mischief than merely pressing down the wax. It irritates the passages, and makes it cast off small flakes of skin, which dry up and become extremely hard, and these are also hardly pressed down upon the membrane. Often it is not only deafness that ensues, but pain and inflammation, and then matter is formed which the hard mass prevents from escaping, and the membrane becomes diseased and worse may follow.

Washing should extend only to the outer surface, as far as the finger can reach. It is a bad practice, also, to put cotton wool soaked in laudanum or chloroform into the ear for the relief of toothache. When a child's ear becomes painful, as it often does, everything should be done to soothe it, and all strong, irritating applications should be avoided. Pieces of hot fig or onion should not be put in, but warm flannels should be applied, with poppy fomentation, if the pain does not soon subside.

It should be remembered that constantly covering up the ear is adapted to injure it. On the whole, men, in whom the ear is habitually exposed, suffer if anything less from ear-disease than women, in whom it is often covered.—Popular Science Nonthly.

Danbury's Funny Man.

[Correspondence of the Boston Transcript.]

Danbury is a thriving manufacturing town of about 8,000 inhabitants, largely given over to the appreciation of jokes and the manufacture of hats. We believe it has been engaged in hat manufacture since—well, since it was destroyed by the British in 1777.

Early evening found us creeping up a dark stairway to the composing and printing office of the News.

In one large room are the cases and presses, and fenced off by itself in one cerner is the 7x11 plain deal-board sanctum, in which we found the editor opening his mail.

Coming along in the cars to Danbury, we had, in our idleness, wondered if any of our fellow-travelers were the editor. A gentleman carefully dressed and adorned with spectacles was finally selected as the possible humorist. We had made up our mind to a middle-aged man in broadcloth and spectacles, and now we found a full-faced young man dressed in coarse clothes, with scrupulously white linen and no necktie.

It may interest our lady readers to know that Mr. Bailey is remarkably fine looking; he is even-featured, with black flowing hair and clear dark complexion, and has an eye that shows that, like John Gilpin, "he has a pleasant wit."

In conversation we found him engaging and overflowing with humor. A stenographer could make a rich article sitting by and talking with him. Many were the good things he said the evening we passed with him, and we shall long remember our pleasant interview with "this most genial genius," who, with no advertisement save that afforded by a country newspaper with an original circulation of a few hundred copies, has become one of the most quoted writers in the country, and bids fair, as a late critic says, "to take his place at the head of American humorists."

A Misguided Book-Agent.

A book-agent entered the open door of a snug Pittsfield cottage one day last week, and nodding to a trim, bright-looking little woman who sat sewing by the window, commenced volubly to descant on the merits of a great work which he was for the first time giving mankind an opportunity to purchase. It was a universal biography, cook-book, dictionary, family physician, short-hand instructor, and contained, besides, a detailed history of every important event that has transpired in the world, from the apple incident and Adam's fall to Credit Mobilier and the fall of Congress. The work contained 5,000 chapters, all with running titles. The agent, after talking on the general excellences of the volume about five minutes, commenced ton he headings of those chapters, and as the woman did not say a word to interrupt him, he felt that he was making a conquest, and he rattled away so that she shouldn't have a chance to say no. It took him nearly half an hour, and as he breathlessly went on, the sweat started on his forehead, and he made convulsive grasps at his collar, and when he finished he had hardly strength enough left to put on a bewitching smile and hand her his ready pen wherewith to subscribe her name to the order book. She took the pen, but instead of putting her autograph on his list, she lifted a scrap of paper from her work-box, and wrote in plain letters, "Ime defe and dum." He said not a word, but the unutterable things that he looked, as he turned to the door, would fill a library.

CONFLICTING—Medical evidence.

France's New President.

Marshal MacMahon, who succeeds Thiers as President of France, is of Irish descent, and belongs to a family who gave all they had to the cause of the Stuarts. When this cause was hopelessly lost, they refused to give their allegiance to the Government of King William, and carried their proud name and family traditions to France, where their blood soon was merged with that of the nobility. President MacMahon is but a few years younger than ex-President Thiers. He was born in 1808. His career has been a military one from the beginning till Saturday, when he assumed political duties for the first time. He began service in 1830, in Algiers. He was in the Crimea, and when Sebastopol was stormed he was chosen as the fittest officer to attempt the works of the Malakoff. How brilliantly he succeeded every one knows. His part in the victory of Magenta won him the title of Duke of Magenta from Louis Napoleon. In the ill-fated war with Prussia his star was less propitious, and he was defeated at Woerth and Beaumont. He was chief in command at Sedan, but was so fortunate as to receive a severe wound early in the day, which saved him the mortification of surrendering. This humiliation devolved upon his successor, Gen. Wimpffen, who signed the articles of capitulation. He was successful in the defense of Paris against the Commune, and was of great assistance to President Thiers in the organization of the army. The nearest approach to civil office to be found in the record of President MacMahon's life is his refusal to accept a nomination from the Parisian Press Union to represent Paris in the National Assembly. In his communication to the President of the National Assembly accepting the Presidency, he promises to discharge its duties with the help of God and the army.

A Greyhound's Tenacity of Life.

A correspondent of Land and Water tells a curious anecdote illustrative of the wonderful tenacity of life in the greyhound. It also suggests that hanging is not the speediest and most humane way to dispatch a dog: "A certain nobleman, now living, gave over a pensioned greyhound to his coachman, with strict orders to hang him in consequence of his having bitten one of the children. This sentence the Jehu performed immediately, to the best of his ability, from a beam in the coach house. Six hours the guilty styke suffered under the 'extreme penalty,' and then, like other culprits, was 'cut down.' His lordship, who, on the contrary, was much 'cut up' on receiving the news, told Jehu to bury him decently. Jehu, not knowing of any available cemetery, and intramural interment being contrary to law, wisely threw the supposed corpse on to the dunghill and covered him up, fully imagining that he would be carted away. And so two months elapsed, neither master nor man troubling themselves any further on the subject, or being any the wiser for what had happened to the defunct old racer, but their wonderment and surprise were past all description when, one day visiting the Hampton meeting, they perceived and recognized their 'dead 'un,' performing in his best style in the Home Park. The fact was, Jehu, who was a good coachman, had no hands for hanging, and had forgotten to see, in going through his Calcraft job, that the dog's neck should be broken, always understood to be a most essential part of the business. There is no doubt that, such not being the case, the warmth of the burial ground brought him to, and thus he lived to be revenged on his former friends for the dirty trick attempted on him."

Delightfully Romantic.

The marriage of George Marshall and Ellen Mayfield, which occurred at the Grand Hotel a few days since, was an event highly spiced with romance. The couple first met in the troublesome times of 1862, at a farm-house, on the road between Harper's Ferry and Leetburg, when Marshall, as a Union soldier attached to a New Jersey regiment, rescued the lady from outrage at the hands of two Confederate soldiers. After the battle of Antietam they met again, when Miss Mayfield, attended by other ladies, was ministering to the wounded upon the battle-field. In a wounded Lieutenant, who was lying in a barn, she recognized her rescuer, and procured his removal to Adams county, Penn., where she nursed him tenderly until his recovery. Marshall was subsequently assigned to a distant department and in time, his letters remaining unanswered, he concluded his fair friend had considered her debt of gratitude canceled, and abandoned him for some old lover. He came to California at the termination of the war, and settled in business at San Jose. A few days since his eye caught the name of "Miss Ellen Mayfield" among the list of overland passengers. Elated with hope, he lost no time in proceeding to Sacramento to meet the train that bore the object of his affections and the picture of his reveries, through the long years of separation. The meeting was mutually happy, and the marriage announcement that followed shortly after tells the remainder of the story. The estrangement had been caused by the intercepting of letters by a meddlesome person, supposed to be interested in the breaking up of the match.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A GENTLEMAN of "elegant leisure," and a bachelor at that, has been amusing himself with matrimonial statistics, and reports that out of 200 marriages published in New England journals last week only two of the ladies had old-fashioned names—such as Mary and Susan. All the others were Mollies, Dollies, Pollies, Libbies, Tibbies, Biddies, Hatties Patties, Matties, Lizzies, and so on. He says if he can hear of some girl with a familiar "Christian name," he shall "start for her."

DRESS OF AMERICAN LADIES.—The Paris correspondent of the London Vanity Fair writes to that paper: The best dressed women in Paris are not the Parisians, but the Americans. They have all the taste of the French, and far more boldness and originality. They invent combinations which frighten you at the first glance and delight you at the second—and they are almost always pretty, which is no small element in a toilet.

The Great Bell of St. Paul's.

Every American going to London visits St. Paul's Cathedral as a matter of course, and though each knows in advance of some of its grandeur, nearly all are astonished to find their preconceived notions totally at fault. The dome and the bells especially exceed in size all that one has imagined in advance. The dome alone weighs over six million pounds, and the bell-towers are of corresponding size. There are four bells in all, three in the southern, and one in the northern tower. Even the smallest of these bells is altogether too large to be turned in ringing; and were sufficient power for his purpose to be used, the great towers, strong as they are, would hardly stand the strain. The two smaller bells in the clock-tower strike the quarters, and above them hangs the great bell, which strikes the hours. It has a diameter of nine feet, and weighs eleven thousand four hundred and seventy-four pounds. Aside from its great size and unequaled tone, it is a subject of interest from the fact that it is a bell having a history of its own. In the old days before the Reformation, a great bell, named Edward, in honor of Edward the Confessor, used to toll the hours from the clock-towers opposite Westminster Hall Gate. During the reign of William and Mary it became necessary to remove the bell, and, in passing under Temple Bar, it fell from the carriage on which it was being transported, and was broken. It was placed under a shed in the cathedral yard, where it remained until 1716, when it was recast, with some additional metal, and hung in the clock-tower of St. Paul's, where the tourist visits today. It is never used except to strike the hours, and to toll on the occasion of the death of members of the royal family, the Bishop of London, the Dean of St. Paul's, or the Lord Mayor of London.

Scintillations by Heinrich Heine.

—I have always thought far better of those whom I hated than they deserved.

—He that does not go as far as his heart urges, and his mind directs, is a coward. He who goes further than he intended, is a slave.

—In these times we fight for ideas, and newspapers are our fortresses.

—I am fully convinced that a blaspheming Frenchman is a spectacle more pleasing to the Lord than a praying Englishman.

—Men at times lie. Women, like all passive beings, can rarely invent; but they possess the art of so perverting the truth that the result effects far greater harm than downright lying.

—In art, form is everything; matter nothing.

—Sentimentality is Materialism in despair.

—According to all indications, the present age will appear in the annals of Art as the age of Music. Music is perhaps the last word of Art.

—Fools imagine that, in order to conquer the Capitol, they must first attack the geese.

—We are not the masters, but the servants of "The Word."

Frightened Orators.

For the encouragement of all who fear an audience, we reprint the following from Hawthorne's "English Note-Book:"

Bulwer and a certain Dr. —— were talking together about public speaking, and the Doctor said he feared he should never be a good speaker, he felt so badly before he "got on his legs."

"Do you feel your heart beat," said Bulwer, "when you are going to speak?"

"Yes."

"Does your voice frighten you?"

"Yes."

"Do all your ideas forsake you?"

"Yes."

"Do you wish the floor to open and swallow you?"

"Yes."

"Why, then, you will make an orator!"

Hawthorne goes on to relate that Canning, on one occasion, just before speaking in the House, asked a friend sitting near him to feel his pulse, which was throbbing intensely. "I know I shall make one of my best speeches," said the future Premier, "because I am in such an awful funk!"

Another Man Wanted.

Old Farmer Pettingill went into his house one day and caught John, the hired man, hugging Mrs. P.

The farmer said nothing, and went out into the field.

After dinner he wanted John for something, but John was not to be found.

He went, at last, into John's room, where the latter was on his knees packing his trunk.

"What's the matter, John?" said P.

"O, nothing," replied John.

"What are you packing your trunk for?"

"I'm going away."

"Going away! What are you going away for?"

"O, you know," answered John.

"No, I don't know," rejoined P., "come, give me the reason of your sudden desire to go away."

"Well," meekly answered John, "you know what you caught me doing this forenoon!"

"O, pshaw!" laughed Pettingill; "do not be so foolish. If you and me can't hug the old woman enough, I'll hire another man."

Immense Windmills.

Syracuse, N. Y., is engaged in a novel manufacturing enterprise, one firm there now constructing no less than seven mommoth windmills as large as the enemies of Don Quixote. The mills are designed for crushing gold ore, and are to be sent to the Island of Oruba, in the Caribbean sea. The prevalence of trade winds in that section and the high price of fuel have induced the quartz-crushing company to introduce windmills for ore-crushing purposes. An accurate idea of the size of these powerful agents may be conceived from the following dimensions: The diameter of the wheel, which is of the "rosette" pattern, is 36 feet long, thus securing power equal to a 20-horse power engine. The weight of each mill is about 9,000 pounds, the cost of construction being about $1,600 each.

VIVISECTION—A wife cutting her husband up.

Etiquette of Salutations.

One would scarcely suppose it possible that any difference of opinion could exist in reference to the etiquette of bowing; and yet there are some who think it a breach of politeness if one neglects to bow, although meeting half a dozen times on the promenade or in driving. Custom has made it necessary to bow only the first time in passing; after that exchange of salutations it is very properly not expected. The difference between a courteous and a familiar bow should be remembered by gentlemen who wish to make a favorable impression. A lady dislikes to receive, from a man with whom she has but a slight acquaintance, a bow, accompanied by a broad smile, as though he were on the most familiar terms with her. It is far better to err on the other side, and give one of those stiff, ungracious bows, which some men indulge in. Those gentlemen who smile with their eyes instead of their mouths give the most charming bows. As for men who bow charmingly at one time, and with excessive hauteur at others, according as they feel in a good or a bad humor, they need never be surprised if the person thus treated should cease speaking altogether; nor can any man who does not lift, or at least touch, his hat in speaking to a lady, expect that she will continue her salutations.

Learn to Swim.

If anything was needed to convince the public that children should be taught to swim, it is furnished by the report of the Royal Humane Society of Great Britain, which gives the average number of deaths from drowning in England and Wales as 2,608 annually. In the river Lea alone, 366 persons were drowned last year—more than one a day. Swimming is an art easily learned by most persons, and when mastered it is a pleasant and healthful pastime. A course of practical lessons in swimming would be of vastly more practical importance than those now given in our schools in music, drawing and other things that are classed as accomplishments. Most boys take as kindly to water as young ducks do, and it is of as much advantage for them to learn to swim. Girls, too, would learn to swim if the practice was fashionable. It was a sad comment on a lack of proper education that no woman on the Atlantic was saved, because no one on board could swim. Had the steamer contained South Sea Islanders, the chances are that they would nearly all have reached shore. In the course of the life of almost every person there is an occasion to save one's own life or the life of another person by swimming.

The Atlantic.

The soundings which were made between Ireland and Newfoundland before laying the Atlantic cable have made the bottom of the Atlantic almost as well known as the surface of Europe and America. It is covered with a fine mud, the remains of microscopic insects, which will one day doubtless harden into chalk. It is a prodigious plain. If the sea were drained off you might drive a wagon all the way from Valentia, on the west coast of Ireland, to Trinity Bay in Newfoundland, and except one sharp incline, about 200 miles from Valentia, I am not quite sure that it would be necessary to put the skid on, so gentle are the ascents and descents upon that long route. From Valentia the road would be about 200 miles to the point at which the bottom is now covered by seventeen hundred fathoms of sea water. Then would come the central plain, more than 1,000 miles wide, the inequalities of the surface of which would be hardly perceptible. Beyond this the ascent on the American side commences, and leads for about 200 miles to the American shore.

Making Leather.

A scarcity of oak bark, hemlock, sumac, and some other trees which furnish tannin for making leather, is generally deplored. The discovery of tannin in vast abundance where it was least suspected is more than a compensation for the diminution of the old material.

Some time since a patent was taken out for tanning with a strong decoction of leaves. But it would be just as ridiculous to take out a patent for making meal with two stones by machinery, or frying doughnuts in an iron pan. Anybody may steep dead leaves without fear of prosecution, and tan hides by thousands. All dry forest leaves yield tannin by boiling. Oak and most of the hard woods furnish the most profitable leaves for curing leather. Make the liquor strong and then sink the skins in vats, and let them remain till they are tanned. The soft leaves, when deprived thus of their astringent qualities, make an admirable fertilizing pulp for delicate garden plants, or indeed wherever a rich manure is required.

THIS YEAR'S IMMENSE COTTON CROP.—The Montgomery Advertiser has been making an estimate of the last cotton crop, and says the incoming crop is, or will have been by September first, the most valuable crop ever raised in the United States. The average price has been better sustained and higher than ever before. The money paid for it in its raw state will not fall short of $330,000,000. Of this sum about $35,000,000 have gone to the speculators and first purchasers, leaving $295,000,000 to the producers. Alabama's share of this magnificent sum is nearly $35,000,000, estimating her crop at 400,000 bales. Events have shown that the disasters to the crop in Alabama, last season, were more numerous and extensive than in any other cotton producing State.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.—A Pittsburgh firm—Rogers & Burchfield—claim to have discovered a process by which they can make the famous Russian sheet iron. The latter is made in Siberia by a secret process, which no other nation has hitherto been able to obtain. The British Government has offered $50,000 for its discovery, but even the stimulus of that large sum has failed to achieve the result. American enterprise and ingenuity have accomplished it, and Pittsburgh, it is said, can now furnish all common markets with Russian sheet iron at even lower prices than the Russians themselves. The process has been patented.—Philadelphia Press.

A Queer Coincidence.

BY A CHICAGO EDITOR.

In a railway car on one of the many roads stretching out, from Chicago recently, three passengers occupying adjacent seats got into a quiet conversation, when it was discovered by one of them that the other two were strangers to each other; he accordingly introduced them:

"Mr. Tarnish, this is Capt. Hight my friend."

"Captain Hight!" exclaimed Tarnish, "that name sounds very familiar. One of the best men I know in the world is Captain Hight, and he is my brother-in-law."

"That isn't me," good-naturedly rejoined the Captain, "I am nobody's brother in-law, and nobody is brother-in-law to me. But who is this name sake of mine?"

"He is a glorious good fellow, I assure you," said Tarnish; "I'll tell you a little story about him—a funny story and very remarkable withal for its several coincidences."

"Let us have the story exclaimed the Captain, and myself," whereupon Tarnish proceeded to relate the following narrative:

"Well to begin with," he said, "Captain Hight and myself were entire strangers to each other up to the time of the breaking out of the war of the rebellion. We fell in with each other when our army, then under Gen. Rosecrans, was marching through Tennessee—he being in command of a company in a Wisconsin regiment, and I acting as an army correspondent for one of the Chicago daily newspapers. We some how took to each other—became acquainted by accident, and were accidentally thrown together at various times, both while in camp and when on the march, and at the battle of Nashville and Stone River had an eye to each other, to render assistance in case either of us should be mowed down by the enemy's balls or shells. Fortunately we reached Chattanooga unharmed, but much fatigued and in need of rest. On the third morning after our arrival at Chattanooga, I received the answer to a telegram that I had sent to my paper at Chicago, asking for permission to come home for a couple of weeks: 'Yes come along and report at Edittorial rooms on arrival.' No old warrior foot-sore with marching, scarred with wounds, and having a home and loved ones to think of a thousand miles away, was ever more delighted on receiving his discharge from the service than, I was on reading the welcome words of that little message. I had been mingling with and following this army from the day it commenced its movement against Fort Donelson up to taking of Chattanooga, and you may be assured it was a tough and exciting series of campaigns for me, full of hard work dangers and privations, and I was pretty nearly worn out.

Accordingly, I gathered up my traveling and writing outfit, and prepared to take the train for Nashville and the North early next morning. Meeting Captain Hight in the evening at his brigade headquarters, I communicated to him my good luck.

"You leave in the morning eh?" he asked.

"Yes and will put through to Chicago as fast as the cars will carry me."

"Just my luck," exclaimed the Captain joyfully; "I to am going north in the morning train—received a three weeks' leave of absence from the General to-day—and I am only too happy to know that I shall have such good company. I will go with you as far as Chicago, and then on wings of steam I'll fly to a little woman who wants to see me, not a thousand miles from there."

"That is good," I said heartily; "if I could have had my choice, you are the very man I would have picked out for a traveling companion for the trip."

Next morning, bright and early, we met at the depot, and took seats together in one of the cars of the waiting train, and half an hour afterwards were gliding down the heavy grades, through the valleys and hills over the bridges of that rough region, bound for Nashville; there to Louisville; thence to Chicago, where we arrived, dust-covered and completely fagged out. At the railway depot we bade each other good-bye.

"I shall expect to see you back in the army on my return to 'Old Rosey,'" said the Captain, shaking my hand. "Till then take good care of yourself, old boy."

'Of course" I said; "Give my love to that little woman—Au revoir, Monsieur Captain!"

I reported at the edittorial rooms, as instructed, and after lingering aimlessly around Chicago for a couple of days I took my sachel and boarded a Northwestern railway train, bound for a visiting expedition into Wisconsin—in fact to visit my sweetheart Reaching Milton Juction, where we changed cars for Madison, the first man I saw on looking from the window was Captain Hight.

"Hallo, Cap." I accosted him, on emerging from the car to terra firma; "where did you come from, and where going?"

"Got here from Milwaukee an hour ago—am going west on the train now waiting here."

"Good again!" exclaimed I; "we shall be traveling compaions again."

We entered the train, and were speedily transported to Madison, Wisconsin's beautiful capital city. Getting out of the train we again bade each other good-bye he going to a hotel, and I going to call on a friend. Six hours subsequently I took a seat in a train for the village of Barraboo. A few hours' ride brought us to that town. Stepping off the train, to my astonishment there was Captain Hight, standing on the platform, carpet-bag in hand.

"How on earth did you get here?" I asked, with surprise.

"By this train," he answered.

"That's mighty queer," I rejoined; "I came on this train, also, but didn't see you."

"Nor I you," he said; "I rode in the rear and you in the front one—that explains it."

"Going any further?" I asked quizzingly.

"No," he replied; "I shall put up at a hotel here for a day or two, and call on some friends residing in town. And you—where are you going?" he questioned.

"Ah, ha!" he exclaimed; "but isn't it queer that you and I should have come all this long distance without finding out our objective points, which, it seems, are very much of a sameness. Who is she, Tarnish?"

"That will be telling, Cap. I'll let you know all about it when we meet again down in Dixie."

We shook hands, he going to a hotel and I to a certain charming private residence a few blocks distant, where no human being was more joyfully welcomed than, I flatter myself, I was. But at least one other human being than, matter about that little episode of a lovers' meeting, which you can better imagine than I can describe.

On the evening of the same day, just as the dreamy twilight was darkening into night, my sweetheart, hearing the front gate opening, looked out of the window, and, raising both hands so surprise, exclaimed:

"Good gracious! if there isn't sister Sue's beau come to see her!" and rushing out of the room to communicate the unexpected information to the young lady refered to, who was an older sister, left me alone for a few minutes. Feeling curious to see what sort of a looking man this beau of my sweetheart's sister was, I looked out of the window, and who do you suppose I saw there, knocking at the front door? As I am a living man, it was nobody more or less than Captain Hight!

As I remarked in the outset of this story, concluded Tarnish, Captain Hight and I are brother-in-law—our "little women," whom we married after the war was over, being sisters. As the newspapers say "further comment is unnecessary."

But wasn't it a very remarkable coincidence.—Chicago Illustrated Journal.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q.C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The porter of a Detroit store heard a voice in the alley as he was locking up the other night, and he investigated to find that an old man had taken possession of a hogshead for the night, and that he was praying. The old fellow's petitions went right to the heart of the porter, and he called him out, questioned him, and finally gave him a dollar. He went to the front of the store to lock it, and while he was gone the hogshead man stole his new coat and a pair of boots and made good his escape.

CURIOSITIES OF JOURNALISM.—How they Read Newspapers. Uncle Ned first hunts up a funny thing then laugh with a will.

Aunt Sue first reads the stories, then turns to the marriages, births and deaths.

The laborer looks only at the 'wants' hoping to find a better opening in his business.

Miss Flora seek out the new advertisements to ascertain the newes importations in bonnets and kids

Mr. Pleasure Seeker turn to the amusement column and decides what entertainment will afford him the greatest enjoyment.

Miss Prim drops a tear—first over the marriages, then over the deaths, for, says she, "one is as bad as the other"

Mr. Peiitician commences with the edittorial, then scans the telegraph, his perusal with the speeches quoted.

Mr. Professer slowly examines the edittorial, its rhetoric, syntax, and logic, then glances at the correspondence, finally returns to his Latin, and quickly forgets what he has read.

Mr. Marvelous looks for the accidents, murders and deaths, reads the court record, and ends with the stories in search of something sensation

But why extend the list? Each individual reads for himself, and if each does not find a column or more to his particular taste papes is insipid, the editor lazy and deserving of censure.

Hunting Snipe.

Among our own hunters was a trapper named Shep Medary—a lively roystering mountaineer, who liked nothing better than to get a joke upon any unfortunate "pi'grim" or "tender foot" who was verdant enough to confide in his stories of mountain life.

"What a night!" said Shep, as the moon rose broad and clear—"what a glorious night for driving snipe!"

Here was something new. Two of our men were eager to learn all about the mystery.

"Did ye never hear?" replied Shep, with a face expresive of wonder at their ignorance. "Why it's old as the mountains, I guess; we always choose such weather as this for driving snipe. The snipe are fat now, and they drive better, and they're better eatin' too. I tell you, a breakfast of snipe, broiled on the buffalo chips, is not bad to take, is it, Dick?"

Beaver Dick, who had just arrived in camp, thus appealed to, growled an assent to the proposition contained in Shep's question; and the boys, more anxious than ever, pressed Shep for an explanation.

"Maybe," said one of them, "maybe we can drive the snipe to-night and get a mess for breakfast; what have we got to do Shep?"

"Oh well," responded Shep, "if you're so plaguey ignorant, I'm afear'd you won't do. Howsoever you may try. You boys can get a couple of them gunny-sacks and candles, and we will go out and start 'em up."

Elated with the idea of having a mess of snipe for breakfast, the two young men, under Shep's direction each equipped with a gunny-sack and candle, followed him out upon the plain, half a mile from camp, accompanied by some half-dozen members of our party. The spot was chosen because of its proximity to a marsh which was supposed to filled with snipe. In reality it was the swarming place for mutquitoes.

"Now," said Shep, stationing the boys about ten feet apart, "open your sacks, be sure and keep the mouths of 'em wide open, and after we leave you light your candles and hold 'em well into the sack, so that the snipe can see, and the rest of us wi'l drive 'em up. It may take a spell to get 'em started but if you wait patiently they'll come.

With this assurance the snipe-drivers left them and returned immediately to camp.

"I've a couple of green 'uns out there," said he with a sly wink. 'They'll wait some time for the snipe to come up I reckon."

The boys followed directions,—the sacks were held wide open, the candles kept in place. There they stood, the easy pray of the remorseless musquitoes. An hour passed away, and yet from the ridge above the camp the light of the candles could be seen across the plain. Shep now stole quietly out of camp and, making a long circuit, came up behind the victims and, raising a war hoop, fired his pistol in the air.

The boys dropped their sacks and started on a two-forty pace for the camp, coming in amid the laughter and shouts of their companions.—"The Ascent of Mount Hayden," by N. P. Langford, Scribner's for June.

Mistaken for a Lunatic.

The Delphos Herald tells a good story of a simple minded farmer, named Mike Leatherman who, to his own surprise and that of his neighbors happened to be elected to the Ohio Legislature. Thinking he ought to visit Columbus, and know something of its institutions before going as legislator, he went thither with some of his friends, and had a sorry adventure in the inane asylum.

The visit was a very agreeable one. An official at the institution took the party in charge, showing them over the establishment, explaining its arrangments, and discoursing freely upon the mode of treating their patients.

Approaching one wing of the building, he informed the party that they were about to visit a ward appropriated to monomaniacs, and it would be better to converse freely with them, without alluding to their misfortune.

The party passed into the large room, our friend Mike bringing up the rear. The door was closed by an inmate who immediately engaged Miko's attention by casually remarking:

'Come to see the crazy people?'

Mike answered in the affirmative and soon found himself in the special care of what he thought to be the keeper, or some sort of an official of the institution. Confidenly asking Mike for a chew of tobacco, which was graciously bestowed he unconsciously led him to a recess by the side of a window, and began a detailed account of the peculiarities of the patients with whom they were surrounded.

This one was crazy on the subject of religion, that one of love. Another had met with reverses in business, which destroyed his reason; another had been jilted by a lady. This one imagined himself to be an eminent banker. and in posession of fabulous amounts of landed property.

Thus the time passed away until the party, without observing Mike's preoccupation, went out of the room, the key was turned on the outside, and Mike was locked in with about forty monomaniacs.

In an instant he was surrounded by a commiseratives crowd.

You are much to be pitied,' said one; 'you are demented,' said another, and you are certainly crazy,' said a third.

'No, no,' replied Mike; 'its all a mistake. I just come here to see the institution.'

'Just what they told us,' rejoined a dozen voices in cherus.

For the next half hour Mike was receiving the attentions of disinterested friends. The banker ofered to discount his note for any amount. The land proprietor proposed selling him the very ground on which the City of Columbus was situated at a marvelously low figures. Some entirely new theory for the government of the country was decanted upon by a third person while a fourth mysteriously hinted of a grand invention which he had perfected for the navigation of air

At the end of half an hour—which to Mike seemed an age—the door was unlocked and a keeper stuck his head in to see that everything was all right, and to whom the now somewhat infuriated legislator addressed himself.

'See here mister, I wish to know why I am kept here in this manner?

'Yes. yes, that will be all right by-and-by,' replied the keeper patronizingly.

'But,' replied Mike 'I'm no crazy man; I'm Mr Leahterman, member of Legislature from Allen county.

'All right, Mr. Leatherman; we'll have it all arranged in time; and again the door was locked, and again poor Mike had to stand the commiseration of the inmates.

In an hour our keeper, meeting Dr. Aul, wish to know what new patient was in the ward for monomaniacs. The doctor knew of no new patent.

'Certainly there is,' replied the keeper; 'a middle-aged man, crazy as a March hare; thinks he is Mr. Somebody, member of the Legislature from some county or other,' hurriedly replied the keeper.

Dr. Aul felt at once that there was a very ludicrous mistake, and ordered Mike to be brought at once to his office.

Mike by this time, was furious. When brought into the presence of the doctor, he commenced a tirade against that gentleman for the indignity, but was quietly put to rest by a suggestion of the doctor that the matter had best be kept very quiet, for if the boys should get hold of the story it might make Mike appear ridiulous. Mike at once saw it in the same light. An invitation to take supper was accepted, after which Mike was taken to the hotel in the doctor's carriage.

In reply to the questions as to what had become of him, he stated that he remained to take supper with the doctor—an old friend—and had passed a very agreeable time.

For years after this was not exactly prudent for a small man to question Mike too closely on the character of the public institutions at Columbus.

How to Put up a Stove.

Putting up a stove is not so difficult in itself. It is the pipe that raises four-fifths of the mischief and all the dust. You may take down a stove with all the care in the world, and have your wife put away the pipe in a secure place, and yet that pipe wont come together again as it was before. You find this out when you are standing on a chair with your arms full of pipe and your mouth full of soot.—Your wife is standing on the floor in a position that enables her to see you, the pipe and the chair, and here she gives utterance to those remarks that are calculated to hasten a man into extremes of insanity. Her dress is pinned over her waist, and her hands rest on her hips. She has got one of your hats on her head, and your linen coat on her back, and a pair of your rubbers on her feet. There is about five cents w[illegible] of pot black on her nose, and [illegible] flour on her chin, and altoget[illegible] is a spectacle that would inspire a dead man with distrust. And while you are up there trying to circumvent the awful contrariness of some fool has been mixing it, she stands safely on the floor, and bombards you with such domestic mottoes as; "What is the use of swearing so?" "You know no one has touched that pipe." "You ain't got any more patience than a child." "Do be careful of that chair." And then she goes off and reappears with an armful more of pipe, and before you are aware of it she has got that pipe so horribly mixed up that it does seem no two peices are alike. You join the ends, and work them to and fro, and take them apart again and look at them. Then you spread one out and jam the other together, and mount them once more. But it is no go. You begin to think the pieces are inspired with life, and ache to kick them through the window. But she doesn't lose her patience. She goes around with awfully exasperating rigging on with a length of pipe under each arm, and a long handled broom in her hand, and says she don't see how it is that some people never have any trouble in putting up a stove. Then you miss the hammer. You don't see it anywhere. You stare into the pipe and along the mantle, and down on the stove, and off to the floo. Your wife watches you intently, and i thoughtful enough to inquire wha you are looking after, and on learning pulls the article from her pocket. Then you feel as if you could go out doors and swear a hole 12 feet square through a block of brick buildings, but she merely observes:

"Why on earth don't you speak when you want anything, and not stare around like a dummy?"

When that part of the pipe which goes through the wall is up, she keeps it up with her broom, while you are making the connection, and stares at it with intensity that is entirely uncalled for. All the while your position is becoming more and more interesting. The pipe don't go together, of course. The soot shakes down into your eyes and mouth the sweat rolls down your face and tickels your chin as it drops off, and it seem as if your arms are slowly but surely drawing out of their sockets Here you wife comes to the rescue by inquiring if you are going to be all day doing nothing, and if you think her arm are made of cast iron, and then broom slips off the pipe and in her endeavor to recover her hold she jabs you under the chin with the handle, and the pipe comes down on your head with its load of fried, and then the chair tips forward enough to discharge your feet, and you come down on the wrong end of that chair with force that would bankrupt a pile driver. You don't touch that stove again. You leave your wife examining the chair, and bemoaning its injuries, and you go into the kitchen and wash your skinned and bleeding hands with yellow soap. Then you go down street after a man to do the business, and your wife goes over to the neighbors with her chair and tells them about its injuries, and drains the neighborhood dry of its sympathy long before you get home.—Danbury News.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

BY F. R. E.

The bright-eyed happy little girl
Around the household hearth,
Delighted with the toy or cup,
Looks out upon the earth,

And thinks of naught but golden hours;
She loves the sun and sky,
The meads, the birds and fragrant flowers,
The waving fields of grain.

Her simple heart is filled with love,
And life's a sunny dream,
While all around, beneath, above,
Unfading pleasures seem.

Fond to parents and dear to all,
O joyful warbling song,
Thy life is sweet, there is no gall,
How calm the moments roll.

Young womanhood upon her face
Has painted beauty rare;
On every feature you can trace
What love has written there.

Upon her cheek 's a modest blush
When e'er a certain name,
In jest is whispered near. But, hush,
'Tis not the blush of shame.

And from the fair and thoughtful brow,
And through the glistening tears,
As she utters the sacred vow,
Shines forth the love she bears,

For him whose life her own shall be,
With woman's devotion,
Her love so pure, so firm and free,
She'll cross the wide ocean,

Or on the speedy rattling car,
Go with her much loved groom
To unknown regions, distant far
From childhood's happy home.

From parental care departed,
And far from dearest friends,
Woman, true and noble hearted,
Man's steps in love attends;

She guides him through the ills of life
In paths he'd ne'er have trod;
And from the storm of worldly strife
She leads him to his God.

WHO IS GUILTY?

"The man waits outside," said Mr. Spencer Fenton's servant, as he stepped in front of the low office table piled with books and law papers.

Mr. Fenton's servant was a man of penetration, and knew where to draw the dividing line between the commonplace "man" and the higher order of being known as the "gentleman."

"Let him come in," said Mr. Fenton quietly, as he took a pistol from a drawer, laid it on the table and dropped a newspaper over it.

Mr. Fenton was a lawyer in good practice in a large city, and was as widely known among the class of customers for whom he practiced as a lawyer of "great expectation" fame.

The man was admitted, and proved to be a sullen-looking personage.

Mr. Fenton looked at once at his squarely-jawed, savage face, and gauged his man.

"You may go, John [illegible] said to his servant.

"Take an hour or [illegible] for yourself, if you like."

John went out, and the lawyer then took a seat at the table opposite his client, looking at him sternly.

"Now, my man," he said quietly, "we are together, and I want to know exactly how this matter stands."

"I am going to tell you how it stands, honest Injun, I am."

"Very well. Now as to this bank robbery. You say you can give information—for a consideration, of course."

"For five hundred dollars."

"Very well."

"Then I'll tell you. The man that put up that job is Seth Amity, the cashier of the bank."

Fenton started to his feet, and for a moment lost his self-possession.

"Seth Amity! Man, you are either drunk or crazy!"

Be I? Then you take me som'er's and git me swore to it. I'll take my affidavy and whereas he's the one that put up the job. I ain't going to swear to a lie."

"I believe you'd swear to anything for a dollar, Senter; but that don't matter. Of course, if you can prove what you say, the man must be punished. Seth Amity? I would undertake to swear you are lying."

"I ain't, Mr. Fenton, so help me, I ain't. He's the man as done it; he's the man as put the others up to the fastenings, and give them the impression to the safe key and the word to unlock the safe by."

"You know a great deal about this matter, it seems to me."

"Course I know about it. I ain't sneaked and crawled there all night for nothin'. See here, they are going to make another haul on the bank, and are going to meet to arrange it to-night. Would you care to go with me and listen?"

"Can you lead the way?"

"I kin, and you'll see what your precious Seth Amity amounts to."

"Shall I bring a policeman?"

"I don't like a cop; but bring one, if you like. He can't hurt me."

"Very good; you can leave me now; but be on hand at nine."

He arose and unlocked the door, and Senter shuffled out in his sullen manner. As he passed down the wide staircase, a young man brushed past him rapidly, and gave him a look of silent scorn. Senter stopped on the stairway and looked after him.

"That's you, Seth, my boy. You are down on me for traitor and informer, but I'll fix you yet!"

The young man tapped at the door of Fenton's room and entered. The lawyer looked up at him quickly, and an expression of doubt passed over his face.

"Good morning, Seth," he said. "How do matters go on at the bank?"

"They are in trouble, of course, for there is absolutely no clue to the scoundrels who robbed the safe. They were cunning enough not to take anything except gold—actually leaving a large quantity of notes which they might have had as well as not."

"Do you suspect any one connected with the bank?"

"I own I have my suspicions, Mr. Fenton, but I have no proofs, and as the man and I are not good friends, it might look like personal enmity on my part if I spoke of it."

"The safe was opened with the key and word."

"Yes, that is the puzzle, for only two of us had the word. The key is another matter, and it might have been taken in a dozen ways. Why, if the directors did not have the utmost confidence in me I might have been suspected myself. Are you going to the house?"

"No, but you must give the name of the man you suspect; of course it will go further than myself."

"Henry Dana, the assistant cashier," replied Seth, slowly. "You know that he has not been friendly with me since he knew that Mary and I were engaged, for he hoped to succeed himself."

"Humph. You are going to the house to see Mary?"

"Yes; I thought perhaps you were going down. I can't stop a moment; so, good-bye, and if you find out anything let us know at once."

He hurried out, and Fenton remained with his head upon his hands, in deep thought. He had trusted Seth Amity so far that he had accepted him as the affianced husband of his only daughter, whom he loved as few parents love their children.

He knew that his informer was a brute, but a good spy, and had given him trustworthy information before, and it looked bad for Seth. If it proved true he would be the one to break the daughter's heart and consign Seth Amity to a prison cell for years. But he had been retained by the bank officials to work up this most audacious robbery, and he would do his duty. Seth hurried down to the cars and stepped up to the Fenton residence. As he went up the steps the door opened, and a young man stepped out, who cast a savage glance at him and passed by without saying a word.

"What is Henry Dana doing here?" he muttered; "and what a malicious glance he gave me. I must understand this matter at once."

He touched the bell and sent up his name by the servant who answered his call.

Directly after the girl came back with a card upon which was written in a delicate female hand:

"Not at home to Mr. Amity. I will never see you again.

"MARY FENTON."

Seth looked wildly at the servant, and then tearing the card in pieces, he stamped upon them furiously, and hurried out into the street, his heart full of doubts and fears. Mary had refused to see him again. Who had poisoned her mind against him, and how should he unravel the web which fate seemed weaving around him?

Senter was on hand at the appointed time, and met Fenton at his office, where they were joined by a policeman. Fenton had armed himself, and, after a stern command to be careful what he did, the informer took the lead, walking several paces in advance of the others, and not appearing to belong to them. He took a cab at a corner-stand, and they followed his example; and after ordering their driver to keep the other cab in sight, they drove through the city, and half an hour later alighted in a side street, where the houses were of the class known as suspicious. The cabmen had their orders and drove away, and Senter joined the party.

"Where is the place, you?" said the policeman.

"Gentleman Tom's," replied Senter.

"Tom keeps a little game of faro, and a good many rough customers hang around him," said the policeman. "Will you go in?"

"Of course," said Fenton, quietly.

"You're game," muttered the policeman. "This way, then."

He opened a gate, and by the talismanic power of certain words and knocks they were soon inside of the house, in which the gambling was in full blast.

Senter led the way up stairs to a small room, which was carpeted so thickly that their footsteps gave no sound. Senter moved a small panel, scarcely an inch across, and motioned to Fenton to look in. He applied his eye to the opening, and saw three men seated at a table, almost within reach of his hand, conversing in low tones. All of them were masked, and two of them called the third by name at different times, and the name was—Seth Amity.

Fenton listened and heard the whole plan of the proposed robbery, and he knew that the man whom he had trusted, and to whom he had been about to give his daughter in marriage, was a villain and a partner with robbers.

All compunctions were at an end, and the last words he heard as the men arose were these: "I have invested the proceeds of our last haul in Chicago, in such a way that it will give me influence enough with that old shark, Fenton, to induce him to hurry up the marriage with his daughter. There are over forty thousand in gold in the bank, and the specie will flow in heavily to-morrow. This will make us rich enough to retire and live like honest men."

Twice during the next day Seth passed Mr. Fenton in the street, with a wild, excited look in his handsome face, and the lawyer found it hard to believe the evidence of his own ears. Seth did not look like a criminal, but rather one whom some unexpected sorrow had driven to despair.

At night three men, with hats drawn closely over their brows, crawled through the alleys at the back of Moreton's bank and reached a door, which was opened by a key, and they entered. A man lay sleeping on the floor, who was quickly overpowered, bound and gagged. The one who appeared to be the leader showed them the place where the other watchman was seated nodding over a table. He was disposed of as easily as the other and left upon the floor helpless, and then the leader produced the key to the vault and opened it easily enough. The floor was quickly strewn with small canvas bags, each of which represented a large sum in gold.

As they were gloating over the prize, which far exceeded their expectations, there came a sudden rush of men, and the three robbers were secured before they had time to think of danger.

"Taken in the act, Seth Amity," said Fenton, showing himself. "You cannot hope for mercy at my hands."

One of the officers removed his cap and held up a lantern, and not Seth Amity, but Henry Dana, his dark face distorted by rage.

"I am beaten; take me to prison; let me hide myself from the whole world!" said Dana.

So the three robbers went to prison, and Seth Amity was clear in the eyes of all men, and what he cared for most, in those of Mary Fenton. Dana had told her that he had robbed the bank, and that the officials had proof of his villainy, and she was strong enough to cast off the man she believed to be a villain. She made ample atonement for those moments of doubt, for she is now his wife, and will love him the better because she sinned against him an hour.

The stolen property was nearly all recovered and returned to the bank. Dana was sent to Sing Sing, where he was found dead in his cell six months after the prison door closed behind him. Whether he died by his own hand or conflicting passions of his own heart no man knows.

MacMahon.

It is now almost fifty years since there was entered at the Military School of St. Cyr a young man of 17, who to other merits added that of being the son of a Peer of France. St. Cyr was at that date well stocked with the progeny of noblemen. Its catalogue bristled with Montmorencys, Harcourts, Luynes and Rohans, who amused themselves of a Sunday in going to Paris and making a rout at the Theater Francais or giving Liberal journalists, such as then was M. Thiers, reason enough for a duel. The former was generally compassed by hissing Mlle. Mars, who had a taint of Bonapartism; the latter in any of those ways which young men know how to use when disposed to be riotous; and no doubt but that young MacMahon, the son of a Peer of France, then a fierce Legitimist, later the Lieutenant of Louis Napoleon, still later the right hand of M. Thiers, but to succeed him at last, may have lain awake many a night speculating on whom he might fix a quarrel. Young gentlemen at St. Cyr were prone in those days to conspiring against the peace in a small way, and to them a Liberal journalist was vermin to be worried by the cat and then disposed of. Everybody remembers—for it was the talk of salons—how M. Constant de Rebecque, editor of the Minerve, having had a dozen duels, at last salaried a fencing-master to attend to that department, and how, the fencing-master having been cut down one day as a substitute for his master, the latter on the spot offered the vacant post to the victor, who at once accepted, and entered on his duties. The riot when Talma acted Cinna, made up as Napoleon, and all St. Cyr was present in a body, illustrates the explosive condition of the atmosphere in which MacMahon formed his opinions. Gravely remarked the Quotidienne the next morning: "There were a hundred duels on that memorable night, but [regretfully] only seven proved fatal."

MacMahon set out in life as a Legitimist fire-eater of the fiercest type—a tape dessus sort of person, as the conservatives style men who thoroughly mean what they say. The Revolution of 1830 found him battling with the Arabs in Algiers. In 1848, when the crisis was, he was a Colonel, an officer of the Legion of Honor, a Conservative—three things different in terms, but standing for the same idea. Louis Phillippe went down. Men like MacMahon looked on in silent contempt, and then called for a regime of order. Had they and theirs cast their lot with the Republic then and there, Louis Napoleon would never have made his coup d'etat. When the late prisoner at Ham ascended the throne, MacMahon swore a fourth fealty and took what Providence had in store for him, which proved to be a very liberal dole of honors. It was at this stage of his career that he learned to say nothing, but having saved his master at Magenta, he had at least earned the right to be silent; although, being the idol of the people, the Emperor, tolerating no worship of idols, got him out of the way by sending him to govern the Arabs and get killed if possible.

Since then MacMahon's opinions have been a sealed book to France. He has obeyed all orders silently. What his opinion may have been of M. Thiers—"little dada," as he is styled by Conservatives half in contempt, by the Republicans half in admiration—nobody knows. What his policy will be it is therefore idle to predict. Born in 1808, at Sully, near Autun, he will be 65 years old July 13, 1873. Descended from an ancient family of Irish Catholics, who followed the Stuarts, he is not probably an enthusiastic Republican.

The London Poor.

A reporter of a London paper recently paid a visit to one of the large old buildings in that city that is let to families of worthy poor people who use the apartments for homes and work shops. He found a building containing seventy-four rooms, having, on an average, four occupants. One room was rented to a dock laborer who was out of work. His wife and daughter were supporting the family by making the uppers of carpet slippers. By working early and late they were able to make a dozen and a half in a day, for which they received three and a half pence a dozen. A widow and two children made the sticks for lucifer matches, and for their joint labor received three shillings per week. One old woman earned her support by making wooden skewers for meat, for which she received eight pence per thousand, a part of which went for wood to make them. The shavings were her only fuel. Her furniture was a broken chair and an old table. A knife, whetstone, a cup without a saucer and a teapot constituted the remaining articles in the room. Her only food was bread and tea. Several women were found sewing umbrella covers, for which they received ten pence per dozen. Many of the men in this building sifted cinders for the use of brick burners, by which means they earned ten pence per day. Few of them had a change of clothing, and none had means to support themselves more than forty-eight hours.

AMERICAN CORN FOR EXPORT.—The Pittsburgh Commercial says the low price of corn in the United States seems to have created a large foreign demand for the staple instead of wheat. According to a late report of the Bureau of Statistics, there was exported 51,931,282 bushels for the fifteen months ending Sept. 30, 1872, against 10,441,716 bushels for the corresponding period to Sept. 30, 1871; while of wheat there was shipped 46,961,355 bushels for the fifteen months ending Sept. 30, 1871, against 36,872,712 bushels in the similar period to Sept. 30th last year. The difference in the present rates of wheat and corn is considerably greater than it was during the period to which these statistics refer, and it is probable that the present summer will show a still larger increase in the foreign consumption of the latter important breadstuff staple.

French Account of a Chicago Duel.

Dueling in Chicago is thus described by a French newspaper: If ever a nation considered dueling as a serious business, it is the American nation. One day, a Cincinnati merchant was challenged by a Chicago banker. The challenge was sent by telegraph, and these telegrams were exchanged: Cincinnati to Chicago: "Challenge accepted. Come to Cincinnati to settle the conditions." Chicago to Cincinnati: "I shall do no such thing. Why should I, and not you, take the trouble to travel?" Cincinnati to Chicago: "Because my wife is in childbed." Chicago to Cincinnati: "All right. Expect me in the next train." The Chicago banker found the Cincinnati merchant at the railway station, and asked the latter: "Well, are you ready for the fight? Why, in the deuce, are you so pale?" "Because I am afraid I am a ruined man. My correspondent at Havre has ceased making me his usual remittances." "By Jove! that's bad!" "I set out for Havre to-morrow; we will fight when I return." "I shan't quit you." They embarked on the same steamship. When they reach Havre the Cincinnati merchant finds his correspondent has run off to Canton with all the money he could raise. They go after him. They find and arrest him at Canton, bring him back to Havre, have him tried, convicted, and put in the penitentiary. This prosecution last six months. After they have seen the rogue put in the penitentiary, they return to America. They had now been traveling together for two years, and had come to love each other like brothers. Nevertheless, the day after they reached Chicago, the banker said: "By the way, we have almost forgotten our duel. We have to fight." "To be sure we must." The following day they fought on the lake-shore with rifles, the distance was twenty paces. Both fell mortally wounded, and their last breath expired saying: "All right."

Painless Death.

Chief Justice Chase, says the Boston Traveller, was fortunate in death, as he had been in life. The immediate cause of his death was rupture of the cerebral artery, whence followed a rush of blood to the brain; and as the rupture took place when he was asleep, he never knew pain, passing calmly away. Mere dying, it is probable, never is painful, but the circumstances that attend death sometimes are very painful; yet men suffer as much in sickness from which they recover as they do in those that terminate fatally. A strictly natural death would make no more impression on a man than was made on him by his birth. Nature is not such a blunderer as to make the inevitable a source of pain that can do no good. What is disagreeable in dying is the result of violations of nature's laws. To die is simply to sleep, death being the rounding of life, as Shakespeare says. To the properly constituted mind, death is no more horrible than is sleep; but then the properly constituted mind has not yet been found. Even those who die calmly or gladly, do so because they have found life a Gordian knot, which can be cut only by the dart of Death, and not because they have philosophically convinced themselves that it is a matter of no moment. Be a man the most confirmed of believers, or the most confirmed of unbelievers, he must have some doubt—and where there is doubt, be it ever so small, there must be fear. So that when one departs in his sleep he avoids the last perplexity, that which waits on the death-bed of the Christian as well as on the death-bed of the philosopher—which was felt by Adam, and which will be felt by the last of Adam's descendants. Human egotism has not yet reached to that point in which death can be a matter of absolute indifference, and probably it will never reach it.

A Hickory Fee.

Drury Hudson, of Greensburg, is a lawyer and amiable gentleman. In the discharge of his professional duties, some days since it became necessary for him on behalf of one of his clients to institute suit for the recovery of a dozen or more hogs, which a certain woman had taken into possession and confined in a pen. Under process of the court the hogs were taken by an officer and by him delivered to the owner. This excited the wrath of the woman, and it seemed especially directed against Hudson. He, however, was in blissful ignorance of the condition of affairs until Saturday last. About the hour of one in the afternoon he was standing in the store of Mr. Chell, engaged in the conversation, when the aforesaid woman entered. Looking around the room, her eyes fell on the stately form of the attorney. Her cheeks grew pale, her eyes flashed, and she verily "went for" him. In her hand she carried a switch of no small proportions. "You are the man [illegible]," was her exclamation, and with that she commenced laying on in due and ancient form. So much overcome by surprise, Drury for a moment submitted, but the blows continued to fall with stinging effect on his neck and face, he caught her hands and seated her in a chair, asking her at the same time to state her grievance. Her only answer was, "You are no friend of mine." Drury has been living in constant alarm since, and vows to sue no more women.—Columbia (Ky.) Spectator.

A Modoc Artist.

The Modoc Squaw, Matilda, often mentioned in the dispatches as one of the chief mediators, is a woman of no mean capacity. Living with an American, she keeps his house tight and snug as any white woman could, and, whenever not occupied with her household cares, she is busy over her pencil and paper. She has a voluminous roll of sketches, partly copies, but principally original drawings. With a stump of a pencil and any casual scrap of paper, she will strike off at sight an American, an Englishman, a German, a Chinaman, a Modoc, or any eccentric character she may chance to see; and her heads are wonderfully correct and graphic. If she had received an education, or enjoyed any privileges except those afforded by the rudest backwoods, she would have been heard of in the art world. Matilda is a woman of a strong, dark face, glittering eyes, slow and deliberate in speech, and of an iron will—a good type of her race.—Overland Monthly.

Joaquin Miller Once Head-Chief of the Modoc Tribe.

It may not be generally known that a few years ago—somewhere about 1858, probably—the head chief of the Modoc tribe was a white man, who had joined the tribe, and taken to himself, "for better or worse," a dusky maiden of the Modoc persuasion, with whom he lived and loved for some years. This head chief was no less a person than the now celebrated Oregon poet, Joaquin Miller.

While reigning as chief of this warlike band, probably to more securely establish his title to the chieftainship and gain the fullest confidence of his adopted brothers, the red-skins, he connected the diabolical plan of attacking and sacking the city of Yreka, Cal. Joaquin himself visited Yreka, and examined the approaches and chances of an easy capture.

Yreka then contained a much larger [illegible] population, miners, gamblers, etc., all well armed and generally of a roving, reckless disposition—just the kind of men that were always ready and willing to meet danger half way—in fact, a class of men to whom excitement of some character was an absolute necessity.

Joaquin was not long in acquiring these facts, and the attack on Yreka was indefinitely postponed by the Modocs in consequence of his report. The failure of Joaquin to carry out the Yreka scheme seemed to have "soured" the Modocs somewhat toward him, and it was not long before he returned to the "white settlements." These and other facts in the life and adventures of Joaquin were given to us by an old mountain-man, who was personally acquainted with the Modoc chief at the time of his chieftainship.—Albany (Oregon) Register.

An American Monte Cristo.

Tom Scott, as he is familiarly styled, is reputed to be a Monte Cristo in promptness, and by the fullest exercise of this quality he is enabled to do all the work devolving upon him as a great railway manager. He makes notes of all his engagements, whether they be in the North, South, East, or West—not only in regard to dates, but to the precise hour and minute. Should he agree to meet somebody in Galveston, Texas, on the 15th of next October, at 11 o'clock in the morning, he will certainly be there if he be alive and well. So it is with any other engagement on this or the other side of the sea; and if he should say he would meet a man at any given time in the moon, he would do his very best to get there in an extra train. So extremely punctual himself, he demands the same punctuality in others. If they are five minutes behind, they lose their opportunity, and are forced to wait upon Scott's convenience.

Nothing but the love of power—unless it be the love of excitement, or the result of fixed habit—can induce any man as wealthy as Scott is to work so hard as he does. Sixteen or seventeen hours a day is reported to be his average time of labor, and his capacity to sleep soundly keeps him fresh and vigorous enough to prosecute his countless plans and perfect his immense railway combinations.—New York Letter.

Important Decision.

There was a case before the Superior Court of New York city, a few days ago, that involves an important point of law in connection with strikes. The plaintiff, a railroad company, had contracted to deliver a certain number of tons of coal. The contract was so worded that the plaintiff was to be released from it in cases of storms, disasters or strikes. After delivering a few hundred tons, the company ordered a reduction of the wages paid to its employes. Thereupon they struck, and the company could deliver no more coal under the contract. The defendants refused to pay for the coal already delivered, and the company sued to recover the price of it, to which the defendants set up as a counter-claim the failure to carry out the contract. The plaintiff put in a replication, setting up that the failure was caused by a strike, which released them from the duty of fulfilling the agreement. The decision of the court was that as the strike was caused by the plaintiff in reducing the wages of its workmen, it could not use the occurrence for its own advantage.

Golden Thoughts.

Sunday skules are a grate blessing to enny comyunity; if you kant read the Bible you can sit and look at the pikturs.

Cain's Matters.

The pursuit of information is sometimes attended with difficulties, even in San Francisco. One inquirer, who applied to the Chronicle for information as to where Cain obtained his wife, is cruelly rebuffed, the only reply vouchsafed him being this: "Upon any subject of a public nature we never refuse to throw the desired light. But this is altogether a different thing. It is a family matter with which we do not care to meddle. Cain died some time before many of us were born, and such idle curiosity regarding the family affairs of a deceased person we regard as reprehensible, and calculated to violate the sanctities of domestic life. For these reasons, and because we do not wish to injure the feelings of the relatives of the deceased, we decline to answer the question."

HOW TO COMMIT SUICIDE.

[For the benefit of all young ladies who contemplate suicide, we propose the following as one of the most fashionable and certain methods of accomplishing that end.]

What harmless looking thing is this?
Surely it never did amiss!
A thing so simple and so plain
Could never much have given pain.

Hold, sir, you do not know me well?
Have patience, and I'll briefly tell;
As harmless as I seem to be,
I'm of a murderous pedigree.

Pride is my father's hated name,
And Cruelty my angry dame;
I'm courted by my lady fair,
Who prizes me with tender care.

I visit in her dressing-room,
And sleep amid her rich perfume;
I often on her toilet lay,
And [illegible] night away.

No, more—in her caresses chaste
I'm always [illegible] round her waist;
At home, abroad, [illegible], near,
I'm her companion everywhere.

And though I am a wicked elf,
Delighting to amuse myself,
Sometimes, to give my mistress pain,
[illegible] in vain.

Yet, strange to tell, the more she's squeezed,
The more she seemeth to be pleased.
That I'm an ingrate is most clear,
By such return for all this care.

I pluck away the [illegible],
And spread a livid paleness there;
I snatch with glee the rosy glow,
And let the sickly saffron grow.

I blight the luster of her eyes,
And stain her orb with languid dyes
The [illegible]
I strangle ere it breathes awhile,

And plant disease's pungent smart
And like a vulture gnaw her heart;
My name, upon your mind indorse it,
My gentle mistress calls me—CORSET

"LIVE and let live," is a genial motto. But there is too much pistol in the present period for it. The proper way to write it now is, "Live and let drive!"

"You have lost a friend, I see," said a traveler to a negro whom he met on the road. "Yes, massa." "Was it a near or a distant relative?" "Well, purty distant—about twenty-four miles," was the reply.

HERE'S a verdict rendered by an Arizona jury: "We rather think the prisoner is guilty, and if he is he ought to be hung; but as we are not quite sure of it, we recommend that he be sentenced to imprisonment for life."

JOHNNY, the minister's son, went to his father one morning, directly after family worship, saying, "Father, while you were praying I saw a man stealing grapes." "Well," said the good man, "If you had been praying too, you would not have seen him."

ACCORDING to the Coach, of Central City, Col., this is among the wants of a neighboring village: "By a Denver hotel, a first-class hash chewer. (None but those capable of masticating canine collars and mule slippers need apply.") The same paper prints marriage notices in black lines.

IT is possible to believe almost anything, however incredible, that is told about the growth of things out West; but we hesitate to accept the latest story of a Minnesota farmer who lost his gimlet about three years ago, and recently found it a three-inch auger sticking in his barn post.

NOT long since, at Sunday-school, the teacher, after trying hard to impress on the minds of a class of small boys the sin of Sabbath-breaking, asked, "Is Sunday better than any other day?" When the smallest boy in the class answered promptly, "You bet your boots it is," the answer seemed satisfactory.

THE next official manual for the use of the Senate, which is compiled by the chief clerk of that body, will contain much valuable information not hitherto included in the work, among which will be a detailed statement of the apportionment of representatives among the several States from the commencement of the Government to the present time. From the tables submitted it appears that there have been ten apportionments—one under the constitution and nine under the census, taken every ten years. The basis of representation under the constitution in 1789 was one representative to every 30,000 inhabitants, there being 13 States and 65 members of the House; the second apportionment, in 1790, was one to 33,000; the third, in 1800, was the same, 33,000; the fourth, in 1810, was 35,000; the fifth, in 1820, was 40,000; the sixth, in 1830, was 47,000; the seventh, in 1840, was 70,000; the eighth, in 1850, was 93,420; the ninth, in 1860, was 126,840; the tenth, in 1870, was about 141,494. There were 65 members of the lower house of the First Congress, there being 13 States. There are 292 Representatives in the forty-third Congress, the number of States being 37, and the Territories, including the District of Columbia, 10, each being entitled to a delegate, making in all 302 Representatives in the next House.

THERE are no less than 147 towns and villages in the United States named for George Washington, besides the Federal Capital. It is curious to note the distribution of these, and to account for the difference in number in various States. Seventeen States have one each, namely: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, Illinois, Kentucky, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas; Alabama, 2; Arkansas, 3; Missouri, 4; New Jersey, 9; Pennsylvania, 19; while Ohio has no less than 46, and Iowa, 30. Can any one tell us the reason for this great preponderance in the two latter States, which is the more curious from the accidental similarity in the names of the States themselves.

VANDERBILT'S TAXES.—Collector Bailey, of Albany, last week received from Commodore Vanderbilt the sum of $64,153.48, being the interest at one per cent. a month on the amount of tax claimed by the United States Government from March 7, 1872, the date it was demanded. The following statement shows the amount received: Tax, $460,720; penalty, $23,036; interest, $64,153.48. Total, $547,909.48. This is besides costs and expenses.

Summer Diet for Infants.

Over-feeding does more harm than anything else; [illegible] old or two every two or three hours; nurse a baby of six months and over five times in twenty-four hours, and no more.

When a baby gets thirsty [illegible] time, give it a drink of water or barley-water. In very hot weather, mix a teaspoonful of whisky and a tumbler full of water (no sugar).

Boil a teaspoonful of powdered barley (grind it on the coffee-grinder) and a gill of water with salt for fifteen minutes. Strain it and mix it with half as much boiled milk and a piece of loaf-sugar. Give it luke-warm, through a nursing-bottle.

Keep the bottle and mouth-piece in water when not in use.

Give babies of five or six months half barley-water and half-boiled milk, with salt and loaf-sugar.

Give older babies more milk in proportion.

When babie[illegible]ostive, take oatmeal instea[illegible] to cook and strain it.

When your breast milk is half enough for the infant, alternate with bread and food.

In hot summer weather, dip a small piece of litmus paper into the food before feeding. If the blue paper turns red, add a pinch of baking soda to the food.

Babies of six months may have beef tea or beef soup once a day by itself or mixed with other food.

Babies of ten or twelve months may have a crust of bread and a piece of rare beefsteak to suck.

No child under two years ought to eat from your table.

The summer complaint comes from over-feeding and hot and foul air. Keep doors and windows open. Wash your children at least twice a day. Ten times are not too many in the hot season.

When babies throw off and purge, give them nothing to eat for four or six hours, but all the cold air you can. After that, you may give a few drops of whisky in a teaspoonful of ice-water every five or ten minutes, but no more until the doctor comes. When there is vomiting and purging give no milk.

The Australian Mode.

The natives in some parts of Australia practice a very economical method of conducting courtships, that saves all the expense of operas, balls, rides, good clothes, as well as presents of sets of jewelry, and whole libraries of novels bound in blue and gold. If a young warrior meets in his travels through the bush a girl that strikes his fancy, he immediately strikes her head with his war club, and before she has time to recover from the effects of the blow, he carries her off in triumph. Sometimes, several young wife hunters secrete themselves near some traveled path, and strike down such fair maidens as pass along. At other times they enter huts and lay out such girls as seem to be the best housekeepers. The favorite and most satisfactory way of selecting wives is accomplished in this wise: Several romantic youths, [illegible] armed with a spear and knife, start out and travel round the country, seeking whom they may wed. Coming up to where a party is encamped, they examine the features of the maidens as they lie sleeping, and when each has made his selection, he twists his spear in her hair, and either pins her to the earth or drags her to some retired spot, where, with a knife drawn across her throat, she promises to love, honor and obey till her husband gets tired of her. This completes the simple and pleasant marriage ceremony. Sweet-hearts won in this way make excellent wives. The English have tried to break up this custom, but have not succeeded. The only way it can be done, in our opinion, is to introduce the style of hair worn in this country. It would be amusing to see one of these braves running off with an armful of jute stuck to his spear, and the owner laughing at the way he was deceived.

Gen. McKenzie.

Gen. Ronald S. McKenzie, who has been brought into great prominence, within a brief time, by his raid into Mexican territory and punishment of the Kickapoo Indians, is a son of Commodore McKenzie, who, in 1843, hung to the yard-arm of his ship, for mutiny, Midshipman Spencer, a son of the then Secretary of War under President Tyler—John C. Spencer. The name of Commodore McKenzie was originally Alexander Slidell, he having changed it at the request of a relative in order to inherit some property. He was a native of New York, and a brother of John Slidell of Louisiana and Mason and Slidell fame, captured on the high sea by Commodore Wilkes while proceeding to France as Minister of the Southern Confederacy. Gen. McKenzie graduated from West Point at the head of his class in 1862, and took up arms in the Union cause as Second Lieutenant of Engineers. Step by step he won his way to higher position, until, near the close of the struggle, he was made full Brigadier-General, with the brevet rank of Major-General. He now holds rank in the regular army as Colonel, and commands the 4th cavalry. He has been stationed in Texas for several years, and during that time has done good service against the redskins.

A French Lear.

A French paper relates the sufferings and revenge of a "foolish fond old man" who was driven to despair and madness by the ungrateful conduct of his children. This Lear in humble life having by anticipation divided his property among his children on the understanding that he was to be supported by them, found himself after a time ill-fed, ill-lodged, and ill-received, and resolved to revenge himself. Accordingly, taking advantage of the temporary absence of his son from home, he set fire to the house and hung himself to a beam in the stable. The son, on his return, saw flames issuing from the stable, rushed in, and caught sight of his father hanging by the neck. To cut him down with a sickle was the work of a moment; the aged man was still unhurt, but no change had taken place in his resolves, for, instead of helping his son to extinguish the fire, he seized the sickle with which he had been rescued from death, and fiercely attacked his son. The young man found great difficulty in escaping into the street, whither he was pursued by his father. The gendarmes, who came at this moment, succeeded after a struggle in overpowering the unhappy old man.

Capt. Jack Interviewed—Personnel of the Savage Leaders.

[Tule Lake (June 6) Cor. San Francisco Bulletin.]

By permission of the officer of the guard, I had an interview with Jack through the medium of an interpreter. At first he was reticent. In fact, he did not deign to notice me. His sister Mary interceded in my behalf and persuaded Jack to talk. His remark was in relation to the shackles. He said it made him feel mean to be habited like a horse. He was not afraid to die, and had no idea of running away. As he spoke his eyes snapped, and he looked a very lion in rage. All questions pertaining to his fight he declined to answer. When asked his age, he gave me to understand that he was 36. He then voluntarily started upon a statement of his grievances against his race at the time of the Ben Wright affair. He said that the white men murdered Indians years ago, and that what he did was only paying old debts. He did not enter into details, but left the interpreter, Scar-Faced Charley, to patch up the story.

A critical study of Jack's face corroborates the impressions received at first sight. He is a thorough Indian. His head is large, quite square, and for the present sets firmly on his shoulders. His eyes are black and bright, his face broad, with prominent cheek-bones. His nose is symmetrical and slightly aquiline. His lips are thin and clean-cut, and, combined with his chin, indicates that resoluteness of purpose that has won for him such a remarkable notoriety. His complexion is dark, and his face has a pleasant look. Take him all in all, he is a striking man. Place him among thousands, and he would be taken for a chief by any observing stranger. Those who have seen him marvel not that he is leader of the Modocs. Though in chains and on the brink of eternity, he is yet feared and respected by the Indians about him.

His nearest companions in chains, Sconchin, is 50 years of age, and wrinkled, and has the villain depicted in every line of his face. He wears his hair short, and stands about five feet nine in his moccasins.

Boston Charley is about 25 years old. His face is expressionless. He, Mose and Sam are very ordinary looking Indians. Jack would attempt to escape if he had a chance, even at the risk of being shot down. Probably he never realized that death was inevitable until the irons were placed upon his feet.

EDITORIAL NOTICES are so common that it is almost impossible for an editor to express his honest opinion of the merits of any article without being suspected of interested motives. This fact, however, shall not deter us from saying what we think of a new addition to the Materia Medica to which our attention has been recently directed. We refer to DR. J. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, a remedy which is making its way into more families just now than all the other advertised medicines put together. Its popularity, as far as we can judge, is not based on empty pretension. There seems to be no question about the potency of its tonic and alterative properties, while it possesses the great negative recommendation of containing neither alcohol nor mineral poison. That it is a specific for Indigestion, Biliousness, Constipation, and many complaints of nervous origin, we have reason to know; and we are assured, on good authority, that as a general invigorant, regulating and purifying medicine, it has no equal. It is stated that its ingredients (obtained from the wilds of California) are new to the medical world; and its extraordinary effects certainly warrant the conclusion that it is a compound of agents hitherto unknown. If popularity is any criterion, there can be no doubt of the efficiency of the VINEGAR BITTERS, for the sale of the article is immense and continually increasing.—[Com.

THOSE familiar with the hostility that exists between the newspapers and newspaper publishers at Los Angeles will readily place the proper estimate upon these "low-flung" stabs which the lying, vulgar and scurrilous Express sends after me; and as for me, should I ever return to the vicinity of that hoodlum organ, it would be from the sole motive of cowhiding the establishment from roller-boy down to the lowest scrub editor. Very respectfully, G. W. BARTER, late editor and proprietor Los Angeles Daily and Weekly Star.

JOHANN STRAUSS, the famous composer of waltzes, who came over to the Boston Jubilee last year, has written a note to the MASON & HAMLIN Organ Co., in which he says that their instruments richly deserve their great reputation, and that he knows no other instruments of the class in this country or Europe at all comparable to them.—[Com.

Bronchitis.

This is an irritation or inflammation of the bronchial tubes which carry the air we breathe into the lungs. It arises from a cold settled in the throat, from Catarrh extending to these parts, from scrofulous affections, and from severe use of the voice. The irritation from this latter cause commences in the larynx and glottis, which are the organs of the voice, and, extending downwards, produces hoarseness, coughing, and spitting mucous matter, sometimes mixed with blood. It is chiefly dangerous from its tendency to spread into the lungs, and terminate in consumption. It is in the cure of severe and obstinate cases of this disease that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has achieved unparalleled success, and won the loudest praise from all who have used it. It is sold by all respectable Druggists. 643

Robbed of Health.

The richest of us is poor indeed. The summer, pleasant and enjoyable as it is, is very apt to lay us open to this kind of depredation. The high temperature weakens the body and impairs its vitality, and as the strength and energy of the system decline, disease following in the trail of debility, obtains a foothold somewhere in the frame, in the stomach, perhaps, or the liver, or the head, or the bowels, or the nerves. In summer, therefore, it is of great importance to keep the body strong, and all its functions in healthy activity. To promote, or rather to insure this condition of the human machine, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the standard tonic of the age, is the one thing needful. As a wholesome invigorant it stands at the head of all medicines of the class to which it belongs. But this is only one of its many valuable properties. Its mild and painless cathartic action, its anti-bilious properties, and the certainty with which it eliminates from the blood and other animal fluids all acrid matter that tends to produce or foster disease, almost entitle this wonderful preventive and curative, to the much abused appellation, a universal medicine. It is so harmless that the most delicate female invalid may take it with safety, yet so powerful that no form of bilious or nervous disease, no phase of indigestion, no case of chronic constipation, no type of intermittent fever, can resist its sanitary operation.

IF you are thirsty, drink water; if you have Ague, take Shallenberger's Antidote. The result will be alike satisfactory in both cases. Try it.

A DISORDERED STATE OF THE BLOOD is the prime cause of many serious complaints, such as Skin Diseases, Scrofula, Cancerous and Tuberculous Affections, &c. Dr. Jayne's Alterative purifies the blood and destroys the virus of these diseases.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

No Preparation has ever given such universal satisfaction as the OLD STYLE BITTERS. They stand upon their true medicinal qualities, and are composed of Purely Vegetable Standard Tonics. The medical fraternity acknowledge them the most pleasant and reliable remedy ever offered.

For Dyspepsia, From whatever cause, the OLD STYLE BITTERS are a never failing remedy.

For Liver Complaint and Biliousness—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are a sure cure for any trouble of the Liver. When torpid and diseased the Bitters stimulate to action, causing a free flow of the stagnant bile, leaving the Liver in a natural and healthy state.

Jaundice—Is one of the results of a disorganized Liver, for which OLD STYLE BITTERS is a sure cure.

Catarrh.—Thousands are suffering from this painful and dangerous disease. The persistent use of OLD STYLE BITTERS will cure, if taken according to directions.

Fever and Ague.—The OLD STYLE BITTERS strike this disease right at the point for sure eradication, and are a positive preventive and certain cure.

For Headaches, Dizziness, Rheumatism, Vanishing Distress and Enlargement of the Spleen, Irritation and Derangement of the Stomach, Kidneys and Liver, there is no medicine yet produced equal to the OLD STYLE BITTERS.

Loss of Appetite.—If you desire to become vigorous and strong, eat good plain nourishing food and take OLD STYLE BITTERS before each meal. This will produce the desired effect.

Consumption.—This disease spares neither old or young, but quietly takes its victim to the grave. If taken in time the OLD STYLE BITTERS are a never-failing remedy.

Female Weakness and General Debility.—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are especially adapted for Females, as they contain nothing that will injure the weakest physical form. Debilitated young ladies and those giving birth and nursing children are in constant need of an invigorating Tonic to build up their constitutions. The OLD STYLE BITTERS are just the thing. The world has not produced better. They are perfectly harmless and very pleasant to take.

A Tonic.—OLD STYLE BITTERS are unsurpassed by any Tonic or Bitters, and grateful thousands acknowledge them the "Wonder of the Age."

Will any one take Vile, Nasty poisons, falsely called Tonics, when such a pleasant and effectual remedy as OLD STYLE BITTERS can be had? Those who love life will not.

Beware of Counterfeits.—None genuine without the signature of Dr. A. H. Smith, also his name and trademark blown in the bottle.

Good for Man.—Inflammation of all kinds, Diphtheria, Wounds, Bruises, Burns, Sprains, Rheumatism, Sore Throat, Swelling of the Glands, Inflammation of the Eyes, Broken Breast, Frost Bites, Chilblains, Piles, Bee Stings, and all Sores.

Good for Beast.—Fresh Wounds, Galls, Poll Evil, Sprains, Bruises, Cracked Heels, Ring Bone, Wind Galls, Spavins, Sweeney, Founder, Lameness, Sand Cracks, Scratches, or Grease, Mange, Horse Distemper.

This truly wonderful Liniment was discovered by HOMER ANDERSON, A.M., late Professor of Chemistry and Mathematics in the Clinton Liberal Institute, of Oneida County, N.Y. In experimenting for the purpose of making Prussic Acid, by uniting the independent gaseous bodies of which it is composed, a residuum was left, which, on being applied to bruises and inflamed parts, by the students of the Institute, was found to possess the remarkable property of cooling down and carrying off the inflammation and soreness at once, and restoring the parts to soundness and health in a few hours without pain or irritation.

It is not a heating Liniment, but acts by its peculiar specific or chemical qualities in dissolving and scattering the soreness and inflammation of the injured part. By a free application, the red surface soon becomes cool, moist and natural, and is restored to natural health without suppuration or destruction.

As a Liniment for Horse Flesh, for the cure of all the ailments named above, we challenge the world to find its equal.

Price 25 & 50 cents per bottle.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, June 19th, 1873

Mrs. Clem the Indianapolis murderess has been granted a new trial—the fifth.

The Court of appeals, has by a unanimous opinion, granted a new trial to Edward S. Stokes, the murderer of James Fisk, Jr.

Bingham voted for the Salary Grab took his stealings and has ever maintained the justness of the measure and, defended his own honesty. For this persistent consistency, Grant rewards him with a first class foreign mission. So we have in this, also, an almost direct endorsement and approval of the Grab and Mobelier disgrace by the Republican Administration. The v ters will please make a note of this.

Tax-payers, we care not what you are, Democrats or Republicans, look at this fact and ponder it well. A Republican Congress has increased President Grant's salary to such an extent that he now gets $137 a day. Sundays included. This is for salary alone and does not include the appropriations for the White House, some of which last year were as follows:

$35,000 for new furniture.
5,000 for gas,
5,000 for fuel, and
6,000 for hot house.

The frisky General Mckenzie, who went over into Mexico to thrash a band of Kickapoo Indians, has aroused a very large sized indignation down among the Greasers of the land of the Montezumas. The gentle Mexicans swear that it is not generous for the opulent Uncle Samuel to [illegible]-a-po' country like Mexico by [illegible] violating her national [illegible] authorities intimate that [illegible]xico of to-day is not the Mexico [illegible]846. Now look out.

In 1860 when the Democrats controlled the government the whole amount of salaries of offices in all the executive departments of the civil service at Washington was $809.864,97. The salaries for this service under Radical rule in the year 1872 were $3,568 978,35, an increase of $2,786.113,68! This is quite a difference, and we do not wonder that the laboring classes are beginning to open their eyes to the enormity of the amount which is yearly plundered from the people by their extravagant rulers.

By an extraordinary coincidence, the very identical spot of ground which General Ben. Butler purchased in the suburbs of Washington city, nobody else thought it had any particular value, has been selected, by a congressional commission, as just the most desirable place for the proposed new executive mansion.

Ben. Butler was the chief of the men who passed the back-pay bill, which gave the President an annual salary of $100,000. This purchase appears to be another evidence of that tender consideration, which the President has for those who do his bidding.

"Chinese cheap labor" has ruined California, and every device and expedient is being invoked to stop the emigration of these people. It is said that the employers of the Chinese, in whatever pursuit, have concluded that they are an unadulterated nuisance, needing the earliest abatement. San Francisco has taken the first step to this end. The Chinese have a belief that, to enter heaven, they must be buried in their own country, and they have a veneration amounting to idolatry for the pigtail queue into which they twist the hair of their heads. The authorities of San Francisco have passed an ordinance that every violator of the city law shall lose his pig-tail, and that no disinterment of Celestial bones shall hereafter be allowed for transportation to Chinese soil. It is believed this will have the effect of settling the whole business.

The New York Sun says that it ha authority to announce Benjamin F. Butler as a candidate for Governor of Massachusetts in 1873 and for President 1876. This would make Butler the centennial candidate, and once in a hundred years is about all the country can stand of such men.

The list of yesterday's crimes strings out beautifully. Murders, suicides and thefts seems to be the order of the day. The carnival of crime supplemented by sporadic cholera and yellow fever. This is a nice country to live in.

ATTENTION, FARMERS!

The late Indiana Republican Legislature concluded that real-estate was not sufficiently taxed, and in their assessment law have provided for a much higher rate of taxation on land than has ever before been attempted. The Democratic press of this State announced the fact and commented on it at the time, it passed a partisan-newspaper lie with many farmers of the opposition. Now look at your tax-list; were you ever rated as so wealthy in land before? If so, it is because you have sold half of your real-estate since the last appraisment.

The principle on which such taxations rests is a false one. Land is, in great part not productive, and should not be rated as high as property which is much more productive.

Taxation has always, when based on any just principle, been laid most heavily on articles of luxury, on personal property, and on property which gave an annual income. Much of your land is in timber, part lying fallow.

This matter is exciting considerable comment through the State, and in an adjoining county had raised quite a riot.

Now for a plain statement of the facts:

The preceding Democratic Legislature carried the finances of the State through its period of political supremacy with the tax on real-estate placed down from 25 per cent. to five per cent. on the ordinary and hitherto usual rates of assessment. Before this last assessment law real-estate had never been assessed at more than one-third its value; and this was based on sound principles heretofore adveted to. But this year the valuation your land is placed at its real value, that value which it would bring on fair sale; and more, and worse than that, the rate of taxation has been raised from 5 per cent. to 15 per cent. Thus your taxes has been raised 25 per cent. on land, the thing that should be the least heavily taxed.

Farmers is this statement true? Then how do you like it? And what do you propose to do about it? Republican farmers, this is what a Republican Legislature has done and will continue to do

Joseph Dalrymple and family, consisting of his wife, daughter and son, lived a story and a half frame house situated on one of the best farms in Elkhart county. About nine o'clock last Wednsday night the little son took a candle and went up-stairs to bed. Mr. Dalrymple soon retired and gone to sleep when smoke was discovered, coming from the upper portion of the building, by the wife and daughter who were sitting up reading. Mr. Dalrymple was immediately aroused, and they all rushed up stair to discover the source of the smoke and awake the day. It was discovered that the straw-tick had been ignited from the candle, and was rapidly burning. In his excitement Mr. Dalrymple grabbed it and rushed down the stairway leaving an impenetrable volume of smoke behind, with the women and boy still in the chamber. At this moment a son-in-law of Mr. Dalrymple arrived and effort was made to rescue them from a fiery death; but the flames had increased and spread so rapidly that the attempt was futile, and they had the inexpressive agony of standing helplessly by and knowing that the dear ones were fast becoming food for the hungry flames. The few charred remains were gathered the next morning and deposited together in a coffin. The funeral took place on Sunday and the few blackened fragments laid away in the Violett Cemetry at Waterford.

HOW THINGS HAVE CHANGED.—The New York Sun says that "when Attorney General Williams was asked a few days ago, under what law the United States troops were employed to sustain the Kellogg government in Louisiana, he replied that he did not know and he did not care, but the administration was determined to stand by Kellogg in any event." This is the one man, irresponsible power that marks the decline of civil liberty in the United States. This is the Frankenstien of tyranny which the American people, in their blindness and fury have reared, that will not bow down, but insolently mocks at their weak and impotent protests. The Sun justly observes that "if Gen Jackson's Attorney General had dared to utter such a reply as Williams did, how Webster, and Clay, and Calhoun would made the land ring with patriotic denunciations. But the Websters, and the Clays, and the Calhouns are gone, and the Pinchbacks, the Claytons, and the Pattersons have crawled into their seats."

President Grant is snugly ensconced at Long Branch in his cottage residence with the perfumes of flowers stolen from the Government conservatories. The New York Sun is moved, in contemplation of this sublime subject, to revert to the practices of former Presidents in absenting themselves from the Capital. Mr. Johnson seems to have set the first important example of deliberate absence in his "swinging around the circle." Mr. Lincoln lived and died at his post, and his presence at the Gettysburg ceremony and the Hampton Roads conference, which was official, was cited as the only exceptions to his permanent presence in Washington. General Taylor and his successor, Mr. Filmore, remained constantly at Washington. Mr. Polk went away once to Tennessee for a fortnight. Mr. Tyler, Mr. Van Buren and General Jackson absented themselves only a few times during their terms, and then for a short period. It is estimated that General Grant has already taken more personal recreation than all the other Presidents together, from Washington to Lincoln inclusive.—Inquirer

CORUNNA, IND., June 14, 1873.

The teachers of Richland held their second Institute at Dist. No. 4, better known as the Britton District. Nearly all the teachers in the township was present. Institute was called to order by Mr. Conrad, and then engaged in a general discussion of such questions as "Use and abuse of the State among juveniles," Corporal punishment," Boarding Around," &c. The Trustee then explained some of the prominent features of the new school law.

The afternoon was mostly spent in recitations. Reading was conducted by Miss Sylvia Orr, who is a good reader and manages a class admirably. Next was a class in Penmanship by Mr. Horace Calkin, who has established a reputation as a pensman. A class in Physiology was then taught by Miss Rosa Britton, and she conducted it in the very best manner which credits her as a good teacher.—Next came an essay by J. J. VanAuken, subject "History of Indiana."

The Trustee then proceeded to assign subjects for the next Institute which were as follows:

Miss Sylvia Orr, Arithmetic; Miss Hattie Houser, Grammar; Miss Rosa Britton, Orthography; Miss Callie Britton, Physiology; Miss Hornsby, Geography; Miss Elma Shook, History of United States; J. J. VanAuken, History of Indiana; Mr. Horace Calkin, Penmanship.

At the next meeting each teacher is required to bring an essay on some educational topic.

Mr. Conrad is doing a work among his teachers, and is determined to comply with the requirements of the new law.

The next Institute will be held at Dist. No. 13, four miles west of Auburn, on the second Saturday in July.

All interested in the school work are invited.

J. J. VANAUKEN, Sec'y.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missisippi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

Festival!

Rain is very much needed.

Fourth of July celebration at Butler.

Strawberries are still scarce in our market.

Farmers are satisfied with the appearance of their crops.

The Central has the nicest strawberries in town.

Butter and egg buyers are more than plenty.

The old Otto building, on Main street, is being repaired and painted.

The roads are too dusty for any pleasure in buggy riding.

The Canon Bros. have employed the well known carriage painter, C. E. Quinn, of Striker, Ohio.

The Club gives a hop one week from to day. Let there be a large attendance, good order.

The Marshal has had Main street graveled, but we hope another coat will be placed upon the one that has just been put on.

Hare & Co., have just recived a large lot of fresh strawberries, and are ready at any time to serve them up for those who desire such luxury.

A large crowd of people attended a temperance sermon at the Court House last Sunday evening, delivered by Rev. Mr. Chance—"for brevity he is called Broad axe."

Jay VanAuken had a rare and tare fight with a country cur last Monday evening, on Main street. Jay came out "high boy" on the second round.

Bill Edgerton, our fashionable barber, has before his shop one of the nicest and most tasty barber-pol's in the county. He knows how to manage his business.

C. A. Floyd and lady, formerly of this city, but now residing in Auburn, DeKalb county, spent the Sabbath in this city.—Kendallville Standard.

We have received a large lot of new job type, and are now prepared to do any kind of work in the printing line. Also binding done neatly and at reasonable figures.

The Baltimore Railroad shops, soon to be located in this place, will give direct employment to 500 men, and indirectly supporting a population of 2,000.—Defiance Democrat.

Look out for Root & Company's new advertisement next week. We are sorry that it was received too late for this issue as great inducements are offered which our readers ought to be acquainted with.

One of our largest young men in town was telling, last evening, of a match game of ball, wherein he was one of the players, and says he made nine home runs during that game. Please keep this confidential, reader.

We are pleased to learn that our former townsman, J. A. Barns, was almost unanimously elected superintendent of the public schools of DeKalb county. Mr. Barns is 'a gentleman and scholar.'—Ligonier Banner.

Michael Long, Jr., is doing the largest insurance business of any other agent in the county. He is laboring hard to establish the Watertown Company, and we expect ere long to see him push onward and upward to triumph.

THANKS.—On behalf of the ladies association connected with the Presbyterian church, and its members, I wish to extend thanks to those who patronized our festival, and the members of the band for their kindness in furnishing us with delighting music. J. EMORY FISHER.

Our boys are practicing Base Ball this week. A match game will be played with the Corunna club next Saturday.—If the latter club has average players there will be no difficulty in beating them, as we have but a few players left that understand "their biz."

The Hon. Wm. Williams, M. C. from the State-at-large, has disposed of all his property at Warsaw, and will make Washington City, D. C., his permanent place of residence. Mr. Williams has found it impossible to explain the retroactive salary bill to his constituents, and so has concluded to leave them.—Union.

G. C. Ralston and Cook Ford returned from Texas last Saturday not very favorably impressed with that portion of the State they visited. The grass-hoppers had just gobbled up the wheat crop, and farmers were replanting corn for the third time. The season was wet and backward. They concluded not to locate.

WARSAW, IND., June 19, 1873.

SULKY RAKES, low, lower, lowest; we have 20 Dayton High Wheeled Lock Lever, Sulky Rakes left, and will sell them at $34 each. A chance for the farmers to get one of the best kind of Rakes at cost.

MATSON & WATERMAN.

P. S.—A few combined Self Raking Reapers and Mowers left at $175 each and all of them warranted.

M. & W.

In an excellent paper read before the press association at Indianapolis, the other day, Prof. W. A. Bell said: "In this day, the man who does not read at least one newspaper, is dead and ought to be buried. And the teacher who does not read his own school journal, and his own county paper, should be buried without the benefit of clergy."

Our young friend R. M. Miller, of this place is canvassing for the Christain Union a very large paper of 24 pages, published weekly at $3 per year. It contains a large amount of religious intelligence and should be in every family. Several handsome chromos are given to each subscriber. We can recommend Mr. Miller as reliable and hope that he may meet with a large number of orders.

Peterson's Magazine for July, 1873, is a superb number. There is no magazine offering similar attractions upon our table. The magnificent steel engraving of "The Young Harvesters" is full of the most suggestive beauty and feeling. All of it's many departments are filled with pleasant, useful or entertaining reading. Remember it is the cheapest of the lady's books. To single subscribers it is $2 a year. To clubs it is 5 copies for $. Address Chas J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

DeKalb County.

We give below the total taxables of DeKalb county for 1873, as per report of the Auditor:

No. of acres	227,186
Value of Lands	$4,315,246
" Improvements	591,92
Average value of land	19
Total value of taxables	[illegible],127

On the above valuation the assessment on each $100 will be:

For State purposes	15 cents
County tax	40 "
Township purposes	36 "

The total taxables last year was 4,279,254, an increase this year of 2,526,873.

Teachers' Institute.

A Teachers institute was held at Spencerville, Saturday, June 14, and was conducted by Superintendent Barns. There was 16 teachers present. By motion of Mr. Barns, Trustee Nichols was elected President for the ensuing term and B. Hadsel chosen leading teacher. The teachers manifested great interest. We anticipate perfect success. Mr. Barns delivered a very interesting lecture on the History of Indians.

CHAS. EMANUEL, Sec'y.

Our former friend Mr. David Grats west of Spencerville, has, perhaps, the finest blooded cattle in the county. We are glad to learn that there is a few head of good cattle in our midst. He has a bull two heifers that he imported from Kentucky that are real beauties. The only wonder is that we do not see more of them around. They are by far the cheapest cattle in the long run, and it would speak well for our county if they were more general. While other farmers are feeding poor cattle he gets twice the weight from a less quantity of feed.

Band Jubilee.

Butler, in this county, is to have a jubilee, not quite so large, perhaps, as the one at Boston, but then a regular jubilee at which every body can have a good time. They have invited all the Bands in the neighboring towns and mean to have everything well arranged. A grand Bower Dance will come off at the same time. This is all to be on the Fourth of July, and in conjunction with the regular celebration there, will make this place the great point of attraction on that day.

This is the season for beautiful flowers and we see them all around us. Many of our ladies, yes, and gentlemen too, are becoming much interested in the cultivation of these floral treasures beautifying their own homes and thereby improving the village. This pleases us. Every one who has a home and a few rods of ground may, at a trifling expense of labor and money, do much to add to the improvement of the village thus confering a favor on all around you and also reap much enjoyment for yourself and family. The Poet said 'a thing of beauty is a joy forever,' therefore cultivate the beautiful and spread this joy all around you.

Our friends at Spencerville feel that they will not be very much benefited as far as their place is concerned by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. It passes north of them about 2½ miles and if a depot is located directly north of them it may tend to build up another town at that point. Spencerville is so beautifully located that it is unfortunate this road did not touch their town, but as the mountain would no go to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain. There is not a finer locality in the county than surrounds Spencerville, but the only chance it now has is a diagonal road from Ohio to lake Michigan.

We are glad to learn that few energetic young men have now reached the point of graduation in the Butler graded school The commencement exercises come off on Friday evening, at 7½ p. m., the 20th of June, in the Luthern church at that place. Remember all are very cordially invited, and do not fail to be present.—Good music is secured for the occasion. speeches by the graduating class. Board of Visitors and others. All come! All come!

MIRTH!

AND MUSIC!

Vocal! Instrumental! Whistle-intal! Squalleriferous! Vociferous! Magnificent and grand! On Friday evening, June 20, 1873.

Another glorious outpouring of concordant sounds, melody, harmony and all that sort of auditory and other refreshments. A host of stars, who will appear for one night only! Great attractions! Sentimental, classical, patriotic and comical music at wholesale! Rippling, sparkling, bubbling gushes of sweetness! All our throats are now lined with oiled pink silk. DeKalb county expects every fellow to do his duty! Young men, pocket your irredeemable shinplasters; get on your Sunday-go-to-meetin' clothes; rub your lips with "kiss-me-quick," ask your adorable Aramintas and Japonicas to accept your company and your [illegible], and go. Go! Go! and enjoy yourself. Go to the tintinabulations of jollification. Remember! And Go! And if you don't get more than your money's worth, tell the public he's a li—kely story-teller, and become minus your front teeth.

EVERYBODY INVITED.

Two Letters that Mean Something.

Markley & Shrader maintain such marked success that many seem to marvel at the sight. Men say Markley & Shrader mean soon to monopolize the sale of merchandise, such as Men's shoes Misses' Shoes, and even Old Maids' Shoes Mr. Markley manifestly means to make the merchandise manufactured by their own men meritorious. Sir Shrader stands by his side and says: Since we started our stock has been second to none, and we shall Still Strive to Sell Such Splendid Shoes, etc., that Several Salesmen can Scarcely tend the Sales.

A visit to the handsome store of this enterprising firm, in Keystone Block, will convince our readers that it is one of the most desirable places in our city at which to purchase anything in the line of boots and shoes, for ladies, gents, misses, boys or children. The stock at this time especially, is replete with every thing seasonable and nice. The selection of a choice stock in this line is by no means an easy matter, but Messrs. Markley and Shrader seem to have exhibited rare skill in choosing their goods. We notice many attractive novelties this spring that will be of interest to all who have high good taste to know that a neatly dressed foot is one of the most pleasing of sights.

We can heartily endorse the above as we know it to be a fact. The above firm have a larger stock than any other house in Fort Wayne, and sell at prices defying competition. When you purchase goods there you know they are reliable for that is the character of the house.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

Two persons were killed and five wounded by the fall of a building at Keyport, N. J.... One-third of the people of New Hampshire are depositors in savings banks....According to the New York Sun, Pocahontas trotted half a mile at Fleetwood Park, last week, in the extraordinary time of 1:04¼. This is the fastest half mile ever trotted. Dexter and Startle have both trotted in 1:04½; but Pocahontas has beaten their time by one-quarter of a second. She was driven publicly by John Murphy, to sulky, in presence of a number of spectators....It is understood that the decision of the New York Court of Appeals is adverse to Stokes, which, if true, seals his fate, for he has little or no hope of executive clemency.

THE examination of candidates for admission to the West Point Academy has been finished. Of 142, seven were rejected on account of physical disabilities, and of the number remaining forty-nine failed to pass examination....Hon. John Prentiss, the oldest printer and newspaper publisher in New England, and perhaps in the United States, died recently at Keene, N. H., in the [illegible]th year of his age....The Boston Grand Jury who are engaged in investigating the irregularities of James A. Coe, the alleged bank defaulter, have discovered forged certificates amounting to $325,000.

THIRTEEN THOUSAND immigrants arrived at New York during the week ending June 9.... The Hyde Park Woolen Mills, near Boston, were recently destroyed by fire. Loss, $500,000.

THREE painters fell from the railroad bridge at Coatesville, Pa., the other day. Two were killed, and the third dangerously injured.... A fire at Newburg, N. Y., last week, destroyed $250,000 worth of property....Three young men, students, were drowned at Norwalk, Ct., the other day, by the capsizing of a boat.

STOKES, the tried, convicted and sentenced murderer of Jim Fisk, is to have another chance for his life. The New York State Court of Appeals has granted him a new trial.... Bowles Brothers find themselves able to pay fifty cents on the dollar. This releases them under the Bankruptcy law from further liability, but they have issued a circular to their creditors in which they promise not to shelter themselves behind the law, and pledge the payment of their debts in full....The remains of Minister Orr arrived at New York last week... A terrible explosion of fire-damp occurred in a coal mine near Shamokin, Pa., on the 10th inst., by which fifteen or twenty miners lost their lives. The disaster, as usual, was caused by carelessness, not having been inspected for some time. Sixty-five men were employed in the mine at the time the explosion happened. Not being used to black damp, they thought it was blasting powder that had been set on fire, and remained in the slope until almost overcome with the damp, and then starting to come up, met the body of the after-damp, and fell senseless. The strong men managed to get out, however, and gave the alarm to guide the others who followed, but on reaching the top of the slope they fell back, being completely overcome. John Hays, outside boss, on hearing the alarm, immediately went to their rescue. After proceeding about 500 yards, he fell face downward in a pool of water, and was drowned. Ten men were brought out dead, and several others are missing....Three brothers, named Lawrence, were recently suffocated to death in a gasometer at Eastport, Me., two of them losing their lives in the attempt to save that of the third brother.

FRANK WALWORTH, the young man who murdered his father in New York, has been indicted for murder in the first degree. He will be tried in a few days.....Nathan Britton, of Jersey City, while in a drunken fit, shot and killed his bosom friend, John Adams, who was acting as a peace-maker between Britton and another man....Dr. Lewis E. Meyers, of Middletown, N. Y., while drunk, fatally stabbed his father in the breast....West, the Dover (Del.) physician, charged with killing, skinning and mutilating the negro "Cooch" Turner, and then setting fire to his premises, has been acquitted on the ground that the killing was done in self-defense. He will now be tried for arson.

The West.

THE Missouri Pacific railroad will be sold at auction on the 19th of December next, to satisfy a State lien of $6,000,000....The musical jubilee at Chicago on the 5th, 6th and 7th inst. was a grand success in every point of view. Upward of 100,000 strangers visited the city and participated in the festivities during the three days....John F. Tracy has been re-elected President of the Rock Island railroad. The total receipts of the road for the past year were $6,657,050.67; expenditures, $3,517,783.49; net earnings, $3,139,267.18.... During a rehearsal in the Jubilee building, at Chicago, two painters fell from the apex of the building to the floor, a distance of 80 feet. One was killed instantly, the other escaping with his life, though terribly bruised.

THE Milwaukee and Northern railroad has been completed to Green Bay....It is stated that Gen. Davis had made all arrangements to execute seven or eight of the worst of the Modocs, when he received an order from Washington to hold the prisoners. Five more warriors, four squaws and three children have been captured and brought into camp. It is now believed that there is not a single Modoc Indian at large....Toledo, Ohio, has been visited by a destructive conflagration, involving the loss of $250,000 worth of property....A young man named Speakman, living near Webster City, Iowa, having been jilted by the idol of his heart, bought a 75-cent pistol, loaded it with buckshot, repaired to his lover's residence, and fired the contents of one barrel into her temple. He then shot himself three times in the face. Both are severely, though not fatally, injured....Advices from Arizona state that the Indian agent at San Carlos, Maj. Larrabee, had some difficulty with the Apaches, and that they undertook to kill him with spears. He ran to Lieut. Almy's tent, and Lieut. Almy, with six soldiers, went to the agency with him. They went into Larrabee's tent, and soon afterward Larrabee and Almy came out, Almy in advance, when the Apaches fired on them. Almy received a bullet and fell dead without a groan. Larrabee, untouched, retreated into the tent. The Indians then fled to the mountains.

JUDGE WILLIAM B. THRALL, a prominent citizen of Ohio, and one of the oldest journalists in the State, died recently at Columbus, aged 75....The steamer Meteor was burned at Detroit last week. The flames communicated to the warehouse of Buckley & Co., which was destroyed. Total loss about $125,000.... Burlington, Iowa, has been visited by a destructive conflagration. The Lawrence House and several stores were burned. Estimated loss, $75,000....A fire in Cincinnati, last week, destroyed 1,400 barrels of coal oil, 25 freight cars, 1,000,000 feet of lumber, and 17 dwellings. Loss, $170,000....The house of Mr. Joseph Dalrymple, near Goshen, Ind., caught fire a few days ago, and was totally consumed. The wife of Mr. Dalrymple, and a daughter, aged 19 years, and a son of ten were also burned to cinders....A letter from Tule Lake Peninsula, dated June 2, says: Soon after the arrival of the Modoc prisoners at this camp, Gen. Davis sent word to the settlers of the Tule Lake and the Lost river country that he desired them to come and identify the murderers. Among those who responded to the call were Mrs. Boddy and her daughter, Mrs. Scheera, two women who were widowed by the Modocs. The General assigned them a tent, and promised to assist them in the recovery of their stolen goods. This morning Hooka Jim and Steamboat Frank were taken to the tent occupied by the women. Hooka Jim was identified by Mrs Boddy as one of the Indians concerned in the massacre in question. The women here became excited. They lost all control over their feelings, began crying, and started in for desperate work. Mrs. Scheera drew a pistol and started for Steamboat Frank, and Mrs. Boddy drew a knife and dashed at Hooka Jim. Gen. Davis stepped in and secured both weapons. During the struggle the General received a slight cut in the palm of the hand and near the thumb. Hooka and Steamboat stood like statues. Neither spoke or offered to resist. It galls Jack and his comrades to see Hooka Jim and Frank traveling to and fro at will, and armed at that. He does not understand the result of turning State's evidence. This afternoon he became greatly excited, and gave vent to his rage in a fiery oration. He rose in chains with Schonchin, and in a strong and impressive manner recited his grievances. The purport of what he said is told by Scar-faced Charley. "He is mad," says Charley, "to see that white man no serve all alike." While Jack was in his peroration, his fellow captives were warming in sympathy with him. The officer of the guard came in and compelled him to desist. There are now 161 Modocs under guard.

GEN. SCHOFIELD has been instructed by telegraph to appoint a military commission to try the Modoc prisoners....The Illinois Central railroad will cancel all its freight contracts on the 1st of July, that company having determined to conform strictly to the new Illinois railroad law....A waterspout in the Republican valley, Neb., a few days since, submerged the soldiers' camp, drowning six men, 28 horses, flooding the fields, drowning several settlers, and washing houses away. Some soldiers escaped by climbing trees until the water subsided....Gen. Davis has had an interview with Capt. Jack and Schonchin. Jack denies having killed Gen. Canby, and lays the blame on his boys. Schonchin tells the same story.

THE total earnings of the Chicago and Northwestern railway during the year ending June 1, 1873, were $12,717,616.97, which exceeds the earnings of the previous year in the sum of $1,315,455.58....The Mormons in Salt Lake are carrying on a fierce crusade against the rum-sellers....George Edmunds, of Steubenville, Ohio, bought a 25-pound can of gunpowder and placed it in a cupboard. While he and his wife were absent from the house, his four children, none over ten years of age, found the can and set fire to it. The house was blown to atoms, three of the children instantly killed, and the fourth injured beyond the hope of recovery....A young man named Bickes, at Decatur, Ill., quarreled with his father while sitting at the supper-table, and ended by shooting his aged parent through the head. He then fired a ball into his own head. Whisky did it.

CAPT. JACK, in an interview with Gen. Davis, entered into a long defense of his course, closing his speech with this statement: "Bogus Charley and Schacknasty Jim killed Gen. Canby. Allen David advised him to kill Canby, so he did it. I am telling the truth. I did not kill him; I had it done, but did not do it. I don't lie. Bring them in that saw it. I want to face them. If I had my chains off I would tell all the men who did these things."....As an indication of the strength of the farmers' associations in Iowa, it may be noted that a Grange picnic at Mt. Pleasant was attended by 10,000 Patrons.

The South.

THE New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad was recently sold by the United States Marshal to K. J. Gardner and Peter Butler, of Massachusetts, for $667,500, the purchasers assuming a bonded indebtedness of seven or eight millions of dollars....King Cholera has made his appearance in Nashville.

THE cholera is on the increase in New Orleans.

Washington.

IT has been determined by a council of Cabinet Ministers to refer the question as to the disposition of the Modocs to the Attorney-General. The ground was taken that the priority of offense would give the Oregon authorities jurisdiction over these offenders, as the murders of Lost river occurred previous to the assassination of Gen. Canby, and the subsequent hostility to the United States troops....An analysis of the testimony taken by Secretary Robeson of the officers of the Polaris crew seems to satisfy officials that there is no evidence of the poisoning of Capt. Hall, or of mutiny or heartless desertion on the part of the crew....An enterprising individual, writing to the Government from Tiffin, O., offers to pay $50,000 for the privilege of exhibiting Capt. Jack throughout the country during sixty days....The President has taken up his summer quarters at Long Branch.... Thomas Wright was hanged at Washington on tue 6th inst.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL WILLIAMS, to whom was referred the question as to the proper disposition of the Modocs, has decided that, as a condition of war existed between the United States and this tribe, and as they murdered persons who were under the protection of a flag of truce, they are properly subject to the disposition of a military court. Accordingly, Capt. Jack and his fellow-murderers will be tried by a military commission....The Commissioner of Internal Revenue writes that his office does not sanction the practice of cutting forty and sixty-pound packages of plug tobacco in halves for sale, and tobacco offered for sale or exposed for sale in a half-box without having marks of the brand, the caution notice, and stamp which the law requires, is liable to seizure and forfeiture, and should be seized. ....The Geneva award of $15,500,000 is to be paid Sept. 14....The official examination of Capt. Tyson and party shows that no suspicion of wrong attaches to any of them; that Capt. Hall died a natural death, and received the medical attention furnished the expedition; and that the separation of the survivors on the ice-floe was purely accidental, they having been placed there in good faith by the Captain of the Polaris. The subsequent drifting from them is attributable to the movements of the ice, the storm and the darkness, and [illegible] they think the Polaris did not make as [illegible] an effort to save them as she might, they believe that there was no malicious intent to abandon them.

THERE is said to be a movement in official circles for the annexation of Gautemala to the United States....The Chronicle says: "It has leaked out that Capt. Buddington was the main cause of the failure of the Hall expedition. Shortly after the death of Capt. Hall, when all the discipline of the ship became lax, and each appeared to work 'on his own hook,' he became intoxicated, and with a pistol in his hand drove the floe-of-ice party from the ship, giving them a quantity of provisions, and then deliberately deserted them."

THE following are the receipts and expenditures of the Government for the nine months ending March 31, 1873:

Net receipts from customs	$147,223,078.90
Internal revenue	4,498,526.82
Sales of public lands	2,109,704.83
Miscellaneous sources	22,098,208.20
Total	$255,929,518.75
Net expenditures for premium on purchase of bonds	$ 4,564,955.76
Civil and miscellaneous	53,687,077.59
War Department	34,035,524.38
Navy Department	18,660,183.22
Indians and pensions	29,005,443.98
Interest on the public debt	89,972,730.55
Total	$230,805,925.43

The massacre of the Modocs is severely denounced in official circles, and every possible means will be used to capture and punish the murderers....The Postmaster-General has decided not to abrogate the postal-card contract, but give the contractors time to obtain better paper and continue the work.

THE proposition is seriously discussed in official circles of exiling the captured Modocs to our American Siberia—Alaska....Secretary Delano has decided that the filing of maps of its general route, by the Northern Pacific railroad, is constructive notice to pre-emptors. All who settle after such filing on lands covered by the maps have no rights as against the company.

Foreign.

THE Bank of France has paid into the Treasury one-quarter of the sum due to Germany on account of the war indemnity. The report that there had been successful negotiations to accelerate the departure of the German troops is not verified....Gen. Chanzy has been appointed Civil Governor of Algiers....The Government of Mexico has expelled nearly all the foreign priests from the country....The contract for building the North Shore railway, between Quebec and Montreal, has been awarded to a Chicago company....The President of Guatemala has issued a decree granting religious liberty....The Matamoras Voz Publica, a Government organ, in an editorial article headed "Invasion," denounces Col. McKenzie's raid into Mexico as an act of aggression upon a nation too weak to resist, and intended as a pretext to seize more territory, and the Government of Mexico is urged to exact immediate reparation. The article concludes by saying that if this is not complied with it will be found that the Mexico of to-day is not the Mexico of 1846. It is supposed that this article reflects the sentiments of the Government, received from the City of Mexico, by telegraph, and is put forward to test the feeling of the people on the frontier in Mexico....The Constituent Cortes has replaced the Provisional Government of Spain by the proclamation of the Federal Republic. There were but two dissenting votes.

DR. D. H. WILLIAMS, who has just returned to St. Louis from a two years' residence in Mexico, is of the opinion that the Mexican Government will make no serious complaint on account of Col. McKenzie's raid across the Rio Grande. He apprehends, however, that they will use it as a precedent, and pursue fugitives on this side of the river, which will inevitably lead to trouble, and eventually plunge the frontier into war—a result that would be hailed by many with pleasure, as it would lead to the carving out of another fat slice of the "sick man" on our southern border....The Alexandra Palace, near London, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $3,000,000; insurance, $600,000....During the prevalence of a fire in Dublin, on the 9th inst., a large crowd, intent on plunder, interfered with the firemen by stoning them. The police charged the mob, wounding many. The Mayor of the city was struck by a stone, and several policemen were injured....Earl Russell has introduced in the British House of Lords a bill for the better government of Ireland, which abolishes the office of Lord-Lieutenant and provides that the voice of eight jurors out of twelve will suffice for a verdict....France has just completed the payment of the first installment of the remaining milliard francs of war indemnity due to Germany.

COUNT VON ARMIN, the German Ambassador to Paris, has been recalled, because he made unnecessary calls upon President MacMahon. ....M. Gambetta caused a tremendous sensation in the French Assembly, the other day, by reading a Ministerial circular addressed to the prefects of the departments, inquiring into the condition of the provincial press, and suggesting the employment of subsidies and such other means of influence as can be secretly brought to bear for its control. The Minister of the Interior admitted the authenticity of the circular, and accepted the responsibility for issuing the same. BLOODY RETAL[illegible]

The Murders by the M[illegible] Avenged—Five of the [illegible] riors Massacred by Oreg[illegible] —The Murderers Make G[illegible] cape.

While a number of the Mod[illegible] being removed from Fairch[illegible] Boyle's camp, on the 8th [illegible] Oregon volunteers made a ra[illegible] of the savages incontinently[illegible] particulars of the massacre [illegible] telegraph from San Franci[illegible] day morning James Fairch[illegible] dozen other men left Fairchi[illegible] tonwood creek, with 17 [illegible] women and children, inclu[illegible] Jim, Bogus Charley, Tehee Jack, Pony, and Little John. The Indians were in a wagon drawn by four mules. At the crossing of Lost river the party encountered the Oregon volunteers under command of Capt. Hiser. The soldiers gathered about the wagon and questioned Fairchild. The latter told them the Modocs were all Hot Creeks except Little John; that there were no charges against them. Fairchild undertook to push on to Boyle's camp, and the volunteers retired to the camp near Crawley's. On the road he noticed two men ahead, riding to Rocky Point, as if to intercept him. When the team approached one presented a needle gun at Fairchild, saying:

"Get down, you old white-headed s— of a b—." "By what authority?" said Fairchild. "By mine. I am going to kill the Indians and you too," was the reply. Their leader caught hold of the mules, unhitched them and cut the harness. Fairchild, clinging to the lines, leaped to the ground. The poor wretches implored for mercy, and begged Fairchild to save them. The warriors were unarmed, and knew that resistance was useless. They were the coolest in the party, though facing inevitable death, but the women and children shrieked, groaned, and wept piteously. Fairchild had nothing but a small pistol. Six inches from his ear was the muzzle of a needle gun. He says the tears came to his eyes. He mingled his voice with those of the Modocs in the hope that the massacre might be avoided. "Oh, it was a terrible scene. I never shall forget it. I shudder when I think what I saw and heard. The tearful voices of those women and children still ring in my ears, but the cowardly hounds were not to be balked. A shot, and Little John lay dead in the bed of the wagon, a bullet in his brain." The mules dashed away with Fairchild, and tangled him in the lines. Five more shots in rapid succession, and Tehee, Jack, Pony, and Mooch, the remaining warriors, were dead. Little John's squaw had a frightful wound in her shoulder. Away ahead in the road in the direction of Boyle's camp was a cloud of dust, indicating the approach of a team. The murderers espied the dust, and in a moment were riding rapidly away. Sergt. Murphy, of Aattery G, 4th Artillery, with ten men and teamsters, came by team. The sergeant took charge of affairs and remained with his men on the ground. Fairchild and the teamster, the wounded squaw and her two children, came at 2 o'clock this morning. Fairchild reached Gen. Davis' headquarters and related his story. Teams, with an escort, were at once sent out after the prisoners, dead and alive. No steps are taken for the apprehension of the felons who performed the bloody work. It is generally supposed the Oregon volunteers are the guilty parties. Fairchild is of that opinion himself. The warriors killed were not charged with murder. Those who know them best say they have only participated in open fight. Every one here condemns the affair as atrocious, and without an excuse. There is no doubt but the murders were carried out upon a carefully arranged plan, as Fairchild noticed horsemen on the road ahead and behind him when the shots were fired. Had John Fairchild instead of James been present, another murder might have been added to the list; as the Oregonians are bitter in their hatred of John, the old man, and other Californians.

THE WALWORTH PARRICIDE.

Shocking [illegible] Diocese.

The Rev. Father Preston, Vice-Chancellor of this Diocese, who was very intimate with the late Mansfield T. Walworth, and enjoyed his fullest confidence, says that the obscene letters referred to by the parricide and his friends as having been the cause of the murder contained accusations against Mrs. Walworth of indiscriminate infidelity, and assertions that Frank is a bastard. The murdered man's friends say that ample proof will be brought forward on the trial, if necessary, to establish the fact that Mr. Walworth had but too much grounds for the charges against his wife. They say that he sustained improper relations with her himself, before their marriage, and that only upon this ground would their parents consent to their union. This latter fact is the basis of the slur upon Frank's birth, which incited the young man to take summary vengeance upon its author.

Early in January, 1871, Mrs. Walworth's action for a separation began. The decree asked for was "limited divorce on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment." Adultery was not charged in the papers, nor any prayer for absolute divorce. The summons and complaints were served on the murdered man on the 27th of January, 1871. No notice was taken, however, by the defendant. He allowed the matter to go by default. Shortly afterward Bushford F. Rice, referee in the case, reported, granting the decree. At the special term of the Superior Court before Justice James E. Spencer the decree was confirmed. The divorce contained a clause compelling the murdered man to pay his wife certain sums of money for h r support, and also for the support of her children. Mr. Walworth seemed very much exasperated when he heard of the entering of the decree, for the reason that it compelled him to pay alimony to Mrs. Walworth, and also support the children. On the 1st of May following, in order to avoid paying alimony, his counsil made a motion, in the Supreme Court, to open the default and set aside the decree. This motion was never argued. After matters had rested awhile a correspondence began the year in which he murdered Mrs. Harris, after which Jack went to the Goose Lake country. His mother was a full sister to Rogue River John, who attempted to seize the steamer Columbia while she lay at anchor in the harbor of Cresent City, and also a half-sister to the war-chief Sam, of the same tribe, and Chief Joe, who received his appellation from having fought Gen. Joe Lane. All of these facts and many others which we have no space to mention were recently confirmed by Judge Prim, of Eastern Oregon, who communicated these particulars to Mrs. Knott, stating that the great Modoc chieftain Capt. Jack was the boy she took to raise in 1851.—Portland (Oregon) Herald.

The Wheat Crop of 1872.

The Commissioner of Agriculture has recently furnished a very interesting tabular statement showing the number of bushels of wheat raised in each State of the Union in each of the past 12 years. The total estimated production of wheat in the United States in 1872 was 249,997,000 bushels, showing an increase of 19,275,000 bushels compared with the crop of 1871. The largest production in any single State was in California,—25,600,000 bushels. Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa, respectively, ranked next to California, ranging from 22,000,000 to 24,700,000 bushels. The total production in the Northwestern States named, in 1872, was 92,298,000 bushels, an increase of 26,230,000 bushels over the crop of 1871 in the same States.

The Secretary of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce is authority for the statement that 43,355,000 bushels of wheat, including flour, had been received at Milwaukee and Chicago, and other points, up to May 31 last, from the crop of 1872, in the four great wheat-producing States of the Northwest,—Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota,—which, together with the estimated amounts for food and seed in these States, leaves an available surplus still to come forward between the 1st of June and the incoming of the next harvest of 16,722,000 bushels in wheat and flour.

The Crop-Maps of the Census.

The interesting feature which has appeared in the other volumes of the ninth census has just been applied to the volume upon "Industry and Wealth"—that is, the representation of statistical results by colored charts. In the matter, however, of maps delineating production, the Superintendent had a peculiar difficulty. If, for instance, he wished to represent the per capita production of wheat, the natural method would be to divide the aggregate crop of each county by the population; but under this scale some of our best wheat counties which happen to contain a large town or a manufacturing population, would show the poorest production. Or again, if two counties were taken of equal area, and with entirely agricultural population, and if one had 10,000 inhabitants, and produced 750,000 bushels of wheat, this ought certainly to be ranked higher than another with 1,000 inhabitants producing 80,000 bushels, or 80 bushels per capita. Suppose, on the other hand, another ratio were taken, the number of bushels or pounds to the acre as related to the number of acres cultivated. This would be still more fallacious, as representing the productive power of different parts of the country, for, as is well known, there are small regions under favorable conditions where the yield of wheat may reach from 40 to 50 bushels per acre, and yet if the crop were extended over the State the yield would not average ten bushels. The Superintendent has met these difficulties by the formation of a somewhat peculiar ratio, which is, perhaps, as fair as anything that could be devised. He has taken two elements: first, the number of bushels or pounds produced to each inhabitant, and second, the number of bushels or pounds to each acre of improved land. These are certainly the two important elements. He has then compounded them by multiplying, and taken the square root of the product. This final ratio he believes will fairly represent the productive power of each portion of the country.

The first chart prepared by this scale is one which represents, by green bands of various depths of color, the production of wheat. The deepest shade of green, or highest production of wheat, is found in California, in Southern Minnesota, Western Wisconsin, and Northern Iowa; nowhere else does it appear on the map.

The next lighter grade of green, or the third grade, appears in Oregon, in a small district of Montana, in Eastern Nebraska, in a portion of Iowa, in S[illegible]ois and Indiana, in Central [illegible] Eastern Wisconsin. No[illegible], is this grade reached east [illegible]e Ohio river. The next [illegible] production, or the second [illegible] largely in the Northwest, [illegible]est, Central Virginia and [illegible]nd Northern New York. [illegible] of color is seen cover- [illegible] Pennsylvania, and a [illegible]t from Chesapeake [illegible]he Southern and New [illegible] entirely white on [illegible]e chart for hay pro- [illegible]st scale is represented [illegible]nd in the map all the [illegible]Western States are of a [illegible]ep shade of pink, while [illegible]ern are white, with here [illegible] islands scattered about [illegible]he lowest grade of produc- [illegible]epest pink color, showing [illegible]duction of hay, is seen in [illegible]orth and the extreme [illegible] New England, North- [illegible] Minnesota, Iowa, Ne- [illegible]s.

[illegible]now to the corn chart, the [illegible]e of production, the fourth, [illegible]d by a deep yellow. This [illegible] color we find alone in the Cen- [illegible]est and on the borders of the ex- [illegible]me West; the largest patch of it is in Central Illinois. Still another in Central Iowa, Eastern Nebraska, and Northeastern Kansas. Another small patch of this deep color appears on the Mississippi, just below St. Louis. The next lighter shade of yellow, or the third grade of production, is found in a broad band through Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Southern Illinois, Southern Ohio, and Northern Kentucky. The lowest grade of production is seen all through the South and a large part of the Middle States. On this chart, however, the New England States, New York, and a large portion of Wisconsin and Minnesota appear perfectly white. In the chart for dairy products, the highest production is represented under a different ratio, of so much per capita. The deepest yellow, or the fourth grade, represents a value of $40 and over per capita. On this chart New York is the yellowest portion of the Union, the deepest appearing in various portions of it, and in no other State, except a small patch in Vermont on the borders of Lake Champlain, and a small patch in Northern Ohio, near Lake Erie. Pennsylvania, which has generally been supposed to be the Dairy State, par excellence, shows generally the lowest shade of production—that is, of a value between $5 and $9 per capita; and in only one small district, near Philadelphia, does she reach the third grade, of from $20 to $30 per capita. The New England States present generally the second grade, of from $10 to $19 per capita; and in Western Vermont and Western Connecticut reach the third grade. Northern Ohio attains also the third grade. Nearly all, however, of the Central West and of the Northwest present only the faintest shade of yellow, or a production of from $5 to $9. Eastern Massachusetts and the South are completely white, indicating a value of dairy products under $5 per capita. California, it should be remarked, equals New York in its grade of color in the coast near San Francisco, where dairy products attain the value of $40 and over per capita. These picturesque charts will give to every casual observer a wonderful bird's-eye view of the various productive powers of different portions of the country, and he will see how remarkably nature has supplemented the yield of one region by that of another. So that a general famine or destruction of agricultural products seems almost impossible in the American Union.—New York Times.

Wonderful Growth of Chicago.

The editor of the Danbury News has been visiting Chicago, and writes to his paper as follows:

In the East we think Chicago people are beautiful liars, because they have told such stories of their growth, and made such headaching claims of their resources. I haven't been here but a few hours, but I doubt if there is a man in this city who can hatch out a statement of Chicago's magnificence that I would not indorse—blind-folded at that.

No pen or tongue has yet given an adequate idea of its wonderful growth and beauty. The Arabian Nights are dreary facts alongside of it. Just think, once. Twenty-five years ago there was not a railroad near Chicago. It was an insignificant village, with no capital, no life. Now a dozen railways terminate here, with scores of others emptying into it. Its population is nearly a half million, and it has capital enough to set 25,000 Hartfords and New Havens by the ears. A man has got to sit down on something secure to think of these things. And what is twenty-five years! A brief space of time, a mere drop in the history of this country or of Susan B. Anthony.

And here is another thing, which, if the other is incomprehensible, is actually petrifying. Less than twenty months ago a sea of fire swept over the fairest portion of the city, destroying miles of its business wealth. Here where the hotel stands, and back to the river, block upon block away, all was desolation. Nothing but smouldering ruins remained. That was hardly twenty months ago. To-day the desolation is gone, the ruins have passed away, and in their places stand the largest collection of magnificent buildings to be found anywhere on the face of the globe. I have passed from street to street, and stood, and looked, and thought, and speculated, but in vain do I attempt to grasp the mighty fact that all this is the work of a few brief months. I believe a man could walk through those streets through all eternity, if he had the time, and yet never be able to understand the mighty accomplishment. All that I have read or have been told of Chicago's new greatness has failed to impress its dimensions upon me, just as I am failing now to give you an impression seeing alone can create. The wonders of this place, of this new growth, are more absorbing than those of Niagara or the Yosemite. They are the accomplishment of man, and well do they reflect his glory. Here are not only hotels, completed and in course of completion, which rival the best in the world, but here are block after block of business houses which have no superiors. Immense structures of masonry and iron are as common as three-story buick tenements in New York. On every side is black walnut, and glass, and iron, and granite, and gold, and hod-carriers.

Grammar.

"So you have finished your studies at the seminary; I was much pleased with the closing exercises. The author of that poem—Miss White, I think you call her—bids fair to become a known poet."

"We think the authoress will become celebrated as a poetess," remarked the young lady, pertly, with marked emphasis on two words of the sentence.

"Oh!—ah," replied the old gentleman, looking thoughtfully over his gold spectacles at the young lady. "I hear her sister was quite an actress, and under Miss Hosmer's instructions will undoubtedly become quite a sculptoress."

The young lady appeared irritated.

"The seminary," continued the old man, with imperturbable gravity, "is fortunate in having an efficient board of manageresses. From the presidentess down to the humblest teacheresses, unusual talent is shown. There is Miss Harper, who as a chemistress is unequaled, and Miss Knowles has already a reputation as an astronomeress. And in the department of music few can equal Miss Kellogg as a singeress."

The young lady did not appear to like the chair she was sitting on. She took the sofa at the other end of the room.

"Yes," continued the old gentleman, as if talking to himself, "those White sisters are very talented; Mary, I understand, has turned her attention to music and the drama, and will become famous as an actress and painteress, and even as a lecturess."

A loud slamming of the door caused the old gentleman to look up, and the criticess and grammarianess was gone.

PEACH PROSPECTS.—At a meeting of the peninsula fruit growers, held recently, statements were made that the crop will be equal to, if not greater than, last year, when the shipments reached over 3,000,000 baskets. One of the prominent topics before the meeting was the necessity of having new routes and new markets beyond New York. It was stated that the crop in all the country on the eastern shore of Maryland and the lower counties of Delaware would be enormous, and much larger than for many years, and unless arrangements could be made to send peaches beyond New York, paying prices could not be obtained. We are ready to "forgive" any quantity in this neighborhood.—Boston Globe.

Woman's Dress.

Nathaniel Word, an English preacher of the fourteenth century, thus discourses on woman's dress:

"Whatever christianity or civility will allow I can afford with London measure; but when I hear a nugiperous gentle dame inquire what dress the Queen is in this week, what the nudiustertain fashion of the court, with egge to be in it, in all haste, I look at her as the very gizzard of a trifle, the product of a quarter of a cipher, the epitome of nothing, fitter to be kicked if she were a kickable substance, than either honored or humored. It is no wonder they wear drailes on the hinder part of their heads, having nothing it seems in the fore part but a few squirrels' brains to help them frisk from one ill-favored fashion to another."

Statistics of Mortality.

The volume of Vital Statistics, which forms a part of the United States Census Report for 1870, offers much interesting information for those who take the pains to dig for it in the mass of tables with which it is filled. If we present some of the curious phases of life and death in America, it may be [illegible] convenience sake, that the total population was 40,000,000 (it was actually 38,558,371) in 1870. Of these there were more people between the [illegible] years than at any other period of life,—there being within a few thousand of 9,000,000 of young people who were over 5 and under 10 years of age. From this backward and forward the number decreases with very remarkable uniformity. Out of the entire population of the country there were only [illegible] people living over 95 years of age, only 12,671 between 90 and 95, and after the age of 55 years the [illegible] decreases from millions to [illegible]. The smallest percentage of deaths occurs between the ages of 10 and 15 years. The proportion at that age is 5.66 in 1,000 persons; under and over this age there is a gradual increase of deaths both ways, though the mortality between the ages of 1 and 2 is double that between the ages of 2 and 3, and the proportion of those dying under 1 year is three times that between the ages of 1 and 2 years. Out of every 1,000 children born in the United States, 170 die before they are a year old; if they survive the first year, however, their chances of life are not so slim again until they are 85 years old, when there are 188 deaths in 1,000 persons of this age. It is worthy of note that, while the proportion of those who survive up to the age of 70 is larger in England than America, after that age it turns in favor of this country. If one can manage to live to be 70 years of age, he has a better prospect for living to be 100 years old in this country than in England. The proportion is very nearly the same through the different ages, so that it appears, in spite of the life of excitement and overwork common to Americans, the advantages for longevity are greater in this country than in Great Britain.

The most dangerous diseases of the country may be discovered in the following number of deaths from each: From consumption, 69,896; from pneumonia, 40,012; from enteric fever, 22,187; from cholera-infantum, 20,255; from scarlet fever, 20,320; from diarrhea, 14,195; from convulsions, 12,751; from incephalitis, 13,701; from croup, 10,692; from dropsy, 7,856. There were 11,457 deaths from debility; 7,986 from old age, and 9,060 still-born. Alcohol, pure and simple, killed 1,410 people, and 22,740 people met their death by accidents and injuries. Of these, 1,645 committed suicide, and there were 2,057 homicides, with 31 executions. Massachusetts had the largest proportion of deaths from consumption, 353 in 100,000 persons. The District of Columbia comes next, with 336 in 100,000; the proportion in Louisiana was 318; New York, Rhode Island, Delaware, California, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Vermont had each over [illegible] deaths from consumption out of every 100,000 inhabitants. The States and Territories which fare best are Arizona, where there were only 10 deaths from consumption out of every 100,000 population, and then Idaho, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, Wyoming, Colorado, Arkansas and Florida. There was no State or Territory in the country where death did not occur from consumption, though there was only one death in Arizona, four in Wyoming, five in Idaho, thirteen in Dakota, and seventeen in Montana. In pneumonia, which is more prevalent and more fatal than people ordinarily suppose, the proportion of deaths is larger in that part of Texas lying east of the Colorado river than in any other section of the country, where it caused the death of one out of every 6.7 persons who died. Idaho is freer from it than in any other locality, only one death occurring there, at the rate of seven in 100,000 living persons. Those who have a wholesome dread of small-pox will probably help to populate Wyoming, Washington Territory, Idaho, Dakota and Delaware, where not a single case of this loathsome disease is reported. Arizona suffered most heavily, however, as one in every 2.7 was from small-pox.

The percentage of deaths to population was larger in Arizona than in any other section, the ratio being 2.61, caused doubtless by the visitation of the small-pox. In other localities, where no such special cause existed, Louisiana appears to be the least healthful of the States. The percentage of deaths to population there was 2; in the District of Columbia, 1.53; in New York, 1.58; in Texas, 1.37; in Pennsylvania, 1.49; in Illinois, 1.33; in Missouri, 1.63; in Idiana, 1.05; in California, 1.61; in Massachusetts, 1.77; in Nevada, 1.45. The lowest percentage of deaths was in Indaho, 0.33; in Wisconsin, 0.94; in Wyoming, 0.81; in Dakota, 0.71. Among the States of large population, Wisconsin has had the smallest proportion of deaths. The proportion of nativity in the deaths throughout the United States was 424,730 of native born to 65,963 of foreign born.

The Louisville Courier-Journal recalls the fact that Colonel MacKenzie, who would not permit his purpose of punishing the cattle thieves to be balked by any nice points of geography, is the son of Commander Alexander Slidell MacKenzie, of the United States navy, who died in 1848. It was while this officer was in command of the brig Somers, in the year 18[illegible] that a mutiny occurred. Commander [illegible] instituted a council, and the ringleaders of the conspiracy having been identified, he hung them to the yard-arm. Among those who thus suffered that punishment was a midshipman named Spencer, son of Hon. Ambrose Spencer, then secretary of war. There is good stuff in that family, clearly.

The Tight Rope—A Little Too Much of it.

The negro acrobats from Jamaica went over the other day to Port Limon, in Costa Rica, to give some of their exhibitions for the amusement of the residents there. Of the said African acrobats, one played the banjo while the other did the tight-rope business. Their exhibitions were brought to a sad end by the following tragic event: The crowning gymnastic effort was reserved for the last night. And that was that the celebrated Jamaica acrobat was to astonish the audience by hanging himself. The house was full, and expectation on tip-toe. Not that the nigger artist would actually hang himself, but come so near to it as to create a sensation well worth the entry money. When all was ready and the banjo music at its best, the other partner stood upon the chair and put the loop of a rope around his neck and either stumbled or jumped off. The symptoms of real hanging were so well imitated that the audience, both black and white, applauded, and the banjo player did his best to encourage his partner. But things at last began to look serious; the eyes began to protrude as well as the tongue, and the high peaked Chinese hat looked shaky on his head. The banjo man being appealed to, said: "Oh, let him alone, he understands his business." At last, one of the engineers of the railroad went up and looked closer into the face of the unfortunate representative of the art of Jack Ketch. The face was blacker than natural, the tongue was purple and swollen, and the pulse had stopped at the wrists. "H—ll!" he exclaimed, "the man is as dead as a door nail." The black women set up a howl of grief, and the hard-hearted white men laughed at the too successful feat of the dead nigger.—San Francisco Bulletin.

Ladies must be allowed to wear short-sleeved dresses if they wish, or the Constitution of the United States must be amended, for it expressly provides that "the right to bear arms" must not be interfered with.

There are on the globe 1,288,000,000 souls, of which [illegible] are Caucasians; 522,000,000 are Mongolians; [illegible] 000,000 are Ethiopians; 176,000,000 are Malayans; 1,000,000 are Indo-Americans. There are 3,642 languages spoken, and 1,000 religions. The yearly mortality of the globe is [illegible] persons. That is at the rate of [illegible] per day, 4,800 per hour, 80 per minute. Among 10,000 persons, one arrives at the age of 100; one in 500 attains the age of 80; one in a 100 to the age of 70. In 100 persons, [illegible] marry. In numbers, the two sexes are very nearly equal in the United States. Males, 19,493,505; females, 19,064,806; but the distribution is not even. The greatest excess of males is found in Idaho—12,184 to 2,815 females; Montana—16,771 to 3,824; Wyoming—7,219 to 1,899; and Nevada—32,379 to 10,112. Females are in excess in Alabama—508,254 to 488,738; District of Columbia—69,508 to 62,192; Georgia—605,154 to 578,955; Louisiana—364,750 to 362,165; Maine—313,812 to 313,103; Maryland—395,120 to 384,984; Massachusetts—753,572 to 703,779; New Hampshire—162,660 to 155,640; New Jersey—456,424 to 449,672; New York—2,219,530 to 2,162,229; and Pennsylvania—1,763,452 to 1,758,499. Virginia, Tennessee, both Carolinas and Rhode Island show a like excess of female population. In Utah there are more males than females.

Spicy Specimens of Slang and Sarcasm.

There is a strange silence in the local columns of the Miner. Whether it means silent contempt or supreme disgust, we are unable to determine. Some say that it means death, but we do not care. We would rather die than be outraged privately, publicly and repeatedly without striking back. Our disposition is as friendly and kindly as that of a lamb, but when we are personally involved, we yield the belt to no one in gentility, literature or blackguardism without a struggle. We have only defended thus far, and we are still able to take care of ourselves, even to the bloody end.—Central City (Col.) Coach.

The editor of the Courier seems to imagine himself a sort of Ishmaelite with the brand of Cain on his brow, excluded from society for his evil doings and ill-repute, and seeking to revenge himself by dragging some other member of the editorial fraternity down to his own hated level. Suppose we happen to have a bald head, a glass eye, or a three-cornered mouth, or a hump shoulder—or to be afflicted with some mental or moral infirmity that no other person possesses—does not the mere allusion to such a fact in the discussion of other topics stamp our opponent as a blackguard?—Titusville (Pa.) Press.

A Temperance Lecture.

A man died in Worcester, Mass., the other day, whose career ought to be for young men the most effectual of temperance lectures. Twelve years ago he was a young lawyer in Connecticut, of uncommon abilities and brilliant promise. He entered the army, and rose to the rank of colonel, but he became addicted to drink, and rapidly sank to the grade of a common drunkard. While intoxicated one night, in a low den in this city, he was "shanghaed" aboard a bark bound for China. The vessel was wrecked off St. Helena, and he with several others were rescued and taken to Cape Town. Here, while engaged in a debauch, he was arrested and imprisoned, and afterward hired to a Dutch farmer, where he worked with Hottento's. Escaping, he shipped on a trading vessel through the straits of Madagascar, where he deserted and lived for some time among the natives of the island. Narrowly escaping murder, he afterward put to sea in an open boat, was picked up and taken to Cape Town, and then to Singapore. For several years he wandered about in China and Japan, a poor, drunken vagabond, finally landed at San Francisco in a state of beggary, and made his way across the continent. His friends heard of him as a bar-tender in a miserable saloon in Elizabeth, N. S., sick and broken down, and took him home to die, a worn-out debauchee at the age of 36.

Don't Do It.

The philosopher of the Logansport Pharos issues this bulletin of good advice:

Don't invest all your money in lottery tickets. Give some other man a chance for a prize.

Don't tell an editor how to run a newspaper. Let the poor fool find it out himself.

Don't loaf about the streets and depend on the Lord for your "daily bread." He isn't running a bakery.

Don't discuss scientific questions with a lightning-rod man. His arguments are generally solid, and are always pointed.

Don't spend all your time in watching your neighbors. Every one should be selfish enough to devote a few hours to his own business.

Don't imagine that the Lord will call a first-class preacher to a church paying a second-class salary. He doesn't treat his children so shabbily.

Anecdote of King William.

The German Emperor, while visiting a village, was welcomed by the school-children of the place. After making a speech for them he took an orange from a plate and asked: "To what kingdom does this belong?" "The vegetable kingdom, sire," replied the girl. The Emperor took a gold coin from his pocket, and holding it up asked, "And to what kingdom does it belong?" "To the mineral kingdom, sire," replied the little girl. "And to what kingdom do I belong, then?" asked the Emperor. The little girl colored deeply, for she did not like to say "the animal kingdom," as he thought she would, lest his majesty should be offended, when a bright thought came, and she said with radiant eyes, "To God's Kingdom, sire." The Emperor was deeply moved. A tear stood in his eye. He placed his hand on the child's head and said, most devoutly, "God grant that I may be accounted worthy of that kingdom."

Our total loss in the Modoc campaign from November, 1872, to May, 1873, has been 71 killed and 67 wounded. The money loss is not yet estimated.

Thiers.

One day during the Bourbon restoration, a restless young man [illegible], with an essay on Vauvenargues in his pocket, and an exceedingly sharp tongue in his head. His voice had a Provence twang. He was incomparably vivacious, witty, sarcastic, and a free lance in politics, with an inclination to be liberal, since liberalism promised notoriety. They used to liken his tongue to that of a bell, from its continual wagging when Mons. Adolphe [illegible] the [illegible].

Jan. 1, 1830, appeared the National; and the little man from Marseilles, with an odd sparkle in his eye, that now and then flashed beyond the perpetual spectacles, with a shrug of his diminutive shoulders accepted his destiny. He had already distinguished himself as an art critic, besides having offered to fight the whole company at the Theater Francais, which was no very great matter, except from a dramatic point of view. He had published a volume of pencilings among the Pyrenees, and had held a position on the Constitutionnel as a kind of man-of-all-work, where his wit had made him a celebrity in epigram. Further, he had brought out a "History of the Revolution," which got him the repute of a Jacobin, who, foretold Talleyrand, would grow up to be somebody.

He had just given up in despair of ever being anybody—for the Martignac Ministry was impervious to paper pellets—and had unwisely concluded to write a general history of the world for which he proposed to put a girdle round the earth with Capt. La Place's scientific expedition, when Prince de Polignac's accession caused him to stay in Paris and found a newspaper. It bristled with points, this National, for which Judges imposed fines, and to which the people subscribed fast enough to cover the fines tenfold; and, finally, rolling all his sarcasm into one splendid diatribe, he explained his position in that famous article—"Le Roi regne et ne gouverne pas"—which was long a tocsin in the cafes.

The Bourbons gave way at last. Theirs was called to a place under the Government, and vented his spleen on the Duke of Wellington and the "[illegible]," as he termed the iron old man's administration in England. He was for sending armies to free the Poles, Italians, Belgians—any that needed freeing. But foreign Cabinets disapproving, when he became Prime Minister he laid aside his solicitude for the oppressed and betook himself to sober work, fortified Paris and developed the military resources of France. The unpleasant Egyptian episode of 1840 drew down upon him the wrath of Lord Palmerston, and he vacated.

From first to last he opposed Napoleon III., and his vote against the war with Prussia brought a visit from a Paris mob. But when the fortunes of France ebbed he showed himself generous—as generous as he had before shown himself brave; and when her destinies wavered in the balance he took the helm and brought her safely over one of the most critical and menancing periods of her national existence.—New York Evening Post.

A Geyser Wash-Tub.

The following occurs in "The Ascent of Mount Hayden," in Scribner's for June: "One evening Messrs. Spencer and Hamp, desirous of testing the cleansing qualities of the hot springs, attempted to wash a flannel overshirt belonging to the former in their boiling waters. After carefully soaping the garment, they committed it to one of the least active cauldrons in the basin, when to their astonishment the water in the spring suddenly receded, carrying the shirt out of sight. Curiosity led them the next morning to revisit the spring, which proved to be a geyser of considerable force; and as they stood in mute astonishment upon the ledge down its corrugated sides, listening to the gurgling and spluttering of the water and the ominous intonations from beneath, an eruption suddenly took place, which projected the missing shirt, amid a column of water and vapor, to the height of 20 feet in the air, and in its descent it was caught upon one of the numerous silicious projections which surrounded the edge of the crater, and recovered. During our stay in the basin, we had the good fortune to witness, beside the eruptions already mentioned, the Castle, the Bee-hive and the Grotto in action. A hard wind was blowing in the morning, when the Castle, by various throbbings, pulsations and shakings, gave notice of its intention to discharge.

Remarkable Petrifaction.

George Poole, of Bridgeport, Conn., in exhuming the remains of his grandmother, Mrs. Abigail Poole, who was buried in the old burying-ground on Park avenue nineteen years ago, discovered that the body had been petrified. The flesh upon a portion of the face, and a small spot upon the breast and a portion of the arms, had decayed ere petrifaction commenced, but the remainder of the body looked as fresh as upon the day of burial. The solid flesh rang like metal when lightly struck. It had become slightly discolored by the earth, but upon scraping the limbs a little the pure white was revealed, hard and clear as polished ivory. A singular thing in connection with this remarkable discovery is that the cords of the neck were loose and pliable, and in raising the body from the grave the head hung over backward. The box and coffin had gone entirely to decay, and the grave was partly filled with water, which had to be bailed out ere the body was reached. Mrs. Poole was almost 90 at the time of her death.

The estimates for grading on the Texas and Pacific railroad (in Texas) for the month of March were over $500,000. The close of April showed nearly 300 miles of road completed and ready for the iron. Three hundred miles in six months is a better showing than any other railroad company has ever made in any part of the world. The Company pays for everything as the work progresses, and it stands to-day with a credit second to none in this country.

A Kentucky lady lately invested a few dollars in the purchase of a feather bed. She was wroth at finding a shot-bag among the feathers, but her anger changed to rejoicing when she discovered that the bag contained $470 in greenbacks.

[illegible]

I spoke of Timothee Trimm above, and as a penny-a-liner. In point of fact, and to be quite accurate, it was five sous a line he received; but that is a mere detail, and does not affect the principle which furnishes the subject matter of this paragraph. Up to a very recent period, many French journalists have been paid by the line, and it will be understood that a writer's object was to spread his ideas over as much space as possible; in other words, he studied how not to condense. When a man is engaged here there is a written contract, and upon this contract each party has an action at law, if needed. To illustrate by a striking example, as the temperance lecturer said when he exhibited his traveling companion in a state of inebriety, Charles Nodier was engaged to write a novel as the feuilleton of a certain journal. Nodier consented, and, being then a popular writer with the public, he had the stipulation put into the contract that each and every part of a line was to count as a full line. The contract was signed, and, as ever, attested before a notary public. On Saturday Nodier received his pay, but was credited with two lines less than his own count. "How is that?" he asked; "you are two lines short." "Oh!" said the clerk, "the proprietor does not pay for the signature every week, which, being in capitals, makes up your two lines." "Very good," replied Nodier, "for the future we will leave the signature out." As it was Nodier's name the journal wanted, and as his romance was not of the slightest importance without it, the two lines were credited in the account. Alexandre Dumas, when he published the Trois Mousquetaires as a feuilleton, not only made every sentence into a paragraph, so as to leave about every other line nearly blank, but he invented the dialouge, which runs half down the page, with one or two words on a line, as: When? Now. Ah! Yes! At present? Yes. Good, at present, etc., each word counting as a line, and being paid at a very high rate. Dumas was writing for money. The director of the journal, who knew how much these words, "Yes," "No," and "Ah!" cost him every day, declared that he would not pay for a line unless it was at least half full. "Very good," replied Dumas, "but I shall kill Grimaud." In fact, as the readers of this novel will see, he killed Grimaud the next day—a character who only spoke in monosyllables, and who was invented for the purpose of running up the author's bills.—Paris Letter.

Snipe on Toast.

A sojourner in a large city, who is at the mercy of restaurants where you are treated with a big bill of fare, and very little food on your plate, thus hits it off:

Snipe on toast would be almost too hearty food to feed people on who had been floating on a raft three weeks feeding on old boot-legs.

Says I to the waiter, "Give me snipe on toast."

By-and-by he came in and put down some toast, and I kept on reading about what a donkey Grant was, and what a ridiculous set every one is who is running for office; and I sat there for an hour. Then I rang the gong. The waiter entered, and says I, "Where in thunder is my meat?"

Says he, "They've been on the table an hour."

Says I, "I didn't order plain toast; I want a snipe on it."

Says he, "There is a snipe on it."

Then I drew close up to the table, and I saw a little black speck on the toast.

Says I, "You'll swear that's a snipe?"

Says he, "Yes."

Says I, "You'd make a good linen buyer, you would."

Says he, "It's a snipe on toast, anyhow."

Says I, "How did it get on?"

Says he, "That snipe is all right. It's a full-sized one, too."

Says, "I'm glad of it. I'm glad you told me that's a full-sized snipe; for do you know, young man, when I sat out there reading I saw a black speck on that toast, but I took it for a fly, and I'm glad to be informed it's a snipe—a full-sized snipe. Now you can take that snipe away and bring me a turkey on toast. I want a full-sized turkey, too."

I ain't hankering after snipe since that episode. I could have blown that snipe through a putty-blower without hurting the snipe or the putty-blower either. Snipe on toast may be game, but it's a mean game.

A Judicial Decision against Tight Shoes.

The several millions of tortured and corn-afflicted people in this country should read this paragraph and forever after bear the name of Humphreys in grateful recollection. Humphreys is a Judge at the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. Before him came as party plaintiff a shoemaker and asked judgment against a man for whom he had made a pair of shoes. Came also the defendant and made answer that the said shoes did not fit. As to the issue which was joined on the averment of the defendant, the shoes were the best witnesses, and they were brought into court and placed upon the feet of the defendant. That they would go on is a fact that would seem to have militated somewhat against the theory of the defense; but the defendant swore that, being on, the shoes made existence insufferable. Then it was that Humphreys uttered the great principle that should make his name immortal. He said, in substance, that tight shoes were a torture that no freeman should be required to endure; that when a shoemaker fails to consult the comfort of his patron the latter is under no obligations to pay for the work. Judgment for the defendant. And yet the President hesitates as to who should be made Chief Justice.

The Late Epidemic in St. Louis.—There were 1,653 deaths in this city during the past year from small-pox, and the expense incurred by the Board of Health on this account amounted to $49,284.16. According to the records, the death rate was one to every 262 inhabitants and one case to every 52. At the Grand Avenue Hospital 866 patients were treated, and there were 236 deaths, or 28 per cent. of the total number treated. The disease was most fatal among the negroes.—St. Louis Times.

[illegible] Small Zone.

Insignificant as is the spot we inhabit, the zone of life—the area which not only all that live and breathe [illegible] inhabit, but in which all vegetation is contained—is still more limited. From the submarine forest in the lowest depths of the sea to the highest altitude to which the condor soars, above the perpetual snow, is but twelve miles—six miles of air above us, six miles of water beneath—everything that has vitality is confined. If the salamander lives in the central fire, the exception is so small as scarcely to be worth mentioning. The air presses upon the earth with a force equal to thirty-three feet of water; and upon every average human body with a weight of fifteen tons, which only does not squash us flat as pancakes because the air surrounds us on all sides, including our insides, and thereby the weight is balanced. To most of us nature is one vast mirage, suggesting infinite delusions; and even to the learned many things still remain to be cleared up by slow-moving science in future ages. Who would imagine upon the face of the matter, for instance, that in an airless world not a sound could ever be heard? On the contrary, in still and silent space, one would conceive that we might hear a pin drop from the moon. Hawksby demonstrated the contrary of this fact in a memorable experiment before the Royal Society, 180 years ago. He placed a clock under the receiver of an air-pump, in such a way that the striking of the clapper would continue after the air had been exhausted; while the receiver was full of air the sound was quite audible; when it was empty all was silent. Again, when the air was introduced, there was a feeble sound, growing in intensity as the air grew denser.

At the top of Mont Blanc the report of a pistol is no louder than that of a common cracker let off at the level of the sea. "Above two miles," says Mr. Glaisher, who, as everybody knows, is an aeronaut of considerable experience, "all noise ceases. I never encountered a silence more complete and solemn than in the heights of the atmosphere—in these chilling solitudes to which no terrestrial sound reaches." On the other hand, clouds absolutely facilitate the transmission of sound. Above a great city, to a height of from 1,000 to 1,500 feet, there is always a noise, "immense, colossal and indescribable." The whistle of a steam engine is heard at 10,000 feet, the noise of a train at 8,200, says M. Flammarion; but Mr. Glaisher testified to having heard this latter when 22,000 feet up in the air; the barking of a dog and the report of a gun rise each to 6,000 feet; the shouts of a crowd of people, the crowing of a cock, the tolling of a bell to 5,000 feet, and the shout of a human being to 3,300 feet.—Chambers' Journal.

Golden Thought.

Nature will be reported. All things are engaged in writing their history. The planet, the pebble, goes attended by its shadow. The rolling rock leaves its track upon the mountain, the river its channel in the soil, the animal its bones in the stratum, the fern and the leaf its modest epitaph in the coal. The falling drop makes its sepulcher in the sand or stone; not a foot steps in the snow or along the ground, but prints in characters more or less lasting a map of its march; every act of the man inscribes itself in the memories of his fellows, and his own face. The air is full of sounds—the sky of tokens; the ground is all memoranda and signatures, and every object is covered over with hints, which speak to the intelligent.

Steam Plows in Europe.—In a report to a Farmers' Club in England the manufacturers of the Fowler plow say: We are making about 100 plows a year for the English market, and about 50 or 60 for foreign countries. They are principally of the double-engine class. About two-thirds of those sold in England are let out on hire, and one-third for private firms. Steam cultivation is very much retarded in this country, because little or nothing is done to assist it in the shape of roads, enlargement of fields, etc., so as to make the farms more suitable for the use of steam power. About 50 of our steam plows are working in the district of Madgeburg, Germany, in the cultivation of beetroot for sugar. The beet grown on steam-plowed land shows a gain of about 2 per cent. of sugar, and about 20 per cent. gain in the weight per acre. This has induced all the sugar cultivators to employ steam. They usually work to a depth of from 12 to 15 inches, but never less than 12 inches.

A Singular Accident.—While engaged in working a sewing machine, on Saturday, a lady living on Orange street had the needle run through and break off in the small finger of her left hand. The shock and pain caused her to faint away, but upon recovering she resumed work, and shortly afterward, while "gathering" the article she was sewing under the needle, her attention was attracted by some one speaking to her, when the needle pierced the finger next to the one before injured and pinioned it to the bed of the machine. The efforts of those in the room failed to release the hand, and Dr. Peters was called in. He succeeded in detaching some portions of the machine and relieving the unfortunate lady from her painful position.—Newark Register.

A writer in Science Gossip gives an account of the singular hardihood of the rat. "Having caught a bat in my bedroom, and being anxious to preserve it without injury, I got some spirits of wine and put it in a glass for about two hours, until I thought it was dead; I afterwards wrapped it up in a handkerchief and put it in a box in a drawer. Being called away from home the next day, and having remained away for three weeks, when I came back I went to the drawer, expecting to find the animal decayed, when, on opening the handkerchief, out flew the bat, as well as when I first caught it." This phenomena need to be explained.

From a Kentucky paper: "A business man of Covington bought a postal card yesterday, wrote a few lines on the back of it, and putting it in a stamped envelope, mailed it to a friend in Lexington. He says they are a great convenience."

The War Worn Veteran.

The St. Louis Democrat revives this little war story which loses no interest by lapse of time:

'Poor soldier!' exclaimed a lone widow in East Tennessee, as a battered ve eran in blue appeard at her door, and asked for a cup of cold water. 'Poor soldier! I know in reason that you are tired and thirsty and that you will be powerful glad to get a drink of water, not to speak of little suthin to mix with it.'

'Thank, you mum, but belong to the Daughters of Temperance, and can't drink unless its a little in the way of medicine, and I do feel a little weak, and I have marched more 'han forty miles to-day.'

'Forty miles! the laws have massy! How could you do it? Why it would kill my mule.'

'It is very hard but we get used to it. I wouldn't have minded it if I had anything to eat.'

'Sakes alive! Do come in and set down. Poor soldier!'

The good old lady brought out a black bottle, from which the battered veteran poured a teaspoonful into a glass of water, and took a vigerous pull at the bottle when her back was turned. Then she placed before him a substantial supper of ham and eggs and corn bread and coffee, upon which he advanced in gallant style.

And you are mighty young to be a soldeein', she said, looking at him benignantly over her spectacles.

Yes, mum, I am the only son of my widowed mother but my country is only second to my duty to my Creator.

She? Why you talk as peert as a minister.

I was steddying for the ministry when the was broke out.

I had a notion that the soldiers were all so wicked; bus I am glad to find out that they ain't.. 'You have seen a power fightin', I reckon?'

'A great deal, mum. It is hard for a christian to take life; but the enemies of our country must be punished.'

'Jess so. Have you ever been wounded?'

'Very often. I was once shot through the heart.'

'Through the heart! Lawful sakes! Didn't it kill you?'

'Not quite. The intercotal muscle was penetrated longitudinally aud extravasated with varicose veins; but the bullet ranged across the left lobe of the arachoid artery, producing a comminstuted fracture of the anterior process of the cerebellum, and causing a lesson of the spinal viscera and the hypephosphates of the fibula, and that delayed my recovery.'

'You don't to mean to say that you lived through all that?'

'I was spared, mum, to be an humble monument of the mercy of providence.'

'Should think so. What was that noise? It sounded like sombody in the cellar.'

'Nothing but rats. Don't be alarmed, madam. I am here to protect you. I once defended the house of a widow when it was attacked by a dozen guerrillas. I was obliged kill seven of them, and the rest ran away.'

'Doo tell! Should think you ought to be an officer.'

'The President has tried to persuade me to accept a commission as general, but I have believed that I can serve my country better in my present sphere. Thank you, I don't care if I do take a speonful of that. I must be going now with many thanks for your kindness. It is nearly time for our evening prayer meeting, and I must be there to open it. Have you such a thing as a pocket Bible to spare? Mine was destroyed in the last battle, by being struck by a bullet in my coat pocket. It was the last gift of my beloved mother, and it saved my life.'

'Lawful sakes! Which pocket?'

'The behind pocket, mum.'

'What a blessed thing it is to have a Bible! There is one that belonged to my Matilda Jane; but I know that you will make good use of it. I will remember you in my prayers, poor soldier!'

As the last rays os the setting sun lighted up the face of the battered veteran, they shown upon two big tears that slowly trickeled down either cheek, making minature canals through the dust that coated his epidermis. He walked up the road until he was joined by several more battered veterans, who came out from a corner of the fence. Two of them bore a keg, others carried tin buckets, others had heir armsfull of bottles

'Have you got it boys? Asked the veteran to whom the Bible had been presented.

'All right my covey. Ten gallons of peach brandy, a keg of apple-jack and ever so many bottles of of blackberry wine. The old gal was well fixed.'

'You made such a d——l of a noise that she would have smoked you if I hadn't been there to throw her off the track. Let's go and divide. I ought to have the biggest share, as I had the hardest part of the work.' It is thus that patriotism and virtue are rewarded.

At the Judicial election held in Illinois, last Monday, most of the candidates indorsed by the farmers movement were successful. The election was hotly contested in many of the districts but in only a few of them were former party ties considered. In Chicago all the old judges were re-elected and the same was generally the case throughout the State. The hardest fight was made against the re-election of Judge Lawrence to the Supreme Bench, but it is believed that he was the successful candidate.

VICTOR FITZER'S CONQUEST OF A FARM.

How to Begin.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, Nebraska, 1873.

St Piat, if we believe the legend, after he was beheaded, took up his head in his hand, and walked two leagues. Sceptics say that if they could only see him take the first step they could have faith in all the rest. But it is the first step that costs. They stumble there.

So, many a moneyless man is confident he could pay for a farm, if he only knew how to begin, yet sees all the doors of entrance to real estate shut, and without even keyholes. To encourage such despairing land-lovers, let me show them a beardless boy now doing what they might long ago have done—see St. Piat take his first step

The 1,774th purchaser of land from the Burlington & Missouri River Railroad Co., in Nebraska, was Victor Fitzer, on June 28th 1872. This purchase was 160 acres at $6 per acre, no part of the principle payable for two years, and thence forward one-ninth of it annually. The first year's interest$57.60 he paid on the day of purchase.

Victor Fitzer is a boy of sixteen Within the last two years he has earned enough chiefly by "breaking," that is, the first plowing of the prairie, not only for his first payment, but for buying a yoke of two year old steers. This yoke, a year hence, will sell for more than enough to make the payment then due. With the surplus thus obtained, the earnings for two years of a yoke of yearlings, which he can now buy for a trifle and the sale of the same when they become three-year oldr he will have sufficient in 1874 to pay the first installment of principal as soon as it becomes payable.

His purpose is to buy a yoke of yearlings every year till his land is paid for, selling them again whenever he can, at a profit. Doubtless, he will also, next season, plow some of his land sell a crop of sod-corn for enough to defray his personal expenses.

Should he be disapointed in these reasonable expectations, he has a father on a homestead within a mile, and a grandfather in Wisconsin, who, while proud to see him self-supporting will not fail to back him up. Besides in unlooked for reverses, he has, in the Railroad Company, a creditor who can afford to wait, and who will grant every indulgence to a boy who has begun so well.

What a beginning his it! It is such as insures a good ending—even as Bunker Hill so began the American Revolution that nobody could doubt how that can contest must end.

The name Victor benfits this farmer-hero—not yet mature, but matchless. It is alike descriptive of the past and prophetic of his future. It will prove a trumpet voice, stimulating a legion to follow in his footsteps.

You will find him in Saline county, as frontiersman say, in the thirteenth section of the sixth township, of the first range west of the sixth principal meridiau (13 s, 6 t, 1 r, w.) Post Office, Atlanta, Nebraska.

Since Victor's purchase the B. & M Railroad Company have made their terms still more generous. They now require no payment except six per cent. interest till the end of four years after purchase. Only at the beginning of the fifth year is one seventh of the principal payable, and the same proportion each year thereafter. This arrangement makes the shoe easy, just where it has oftenest been found to pinch, and doubtless the case with which a farmer can make a farm by its produce pay for itself. Sales by the Burlington & Missouri River railroad in Iowa and Nebraska up to January first, 1873, 478,988 acres to 4,525 purchasers.

Wm. Fleming has disposed of his interest in the Fort Wayne Sentinel to Messrs. G. W. H. Riley and John E. Neff, of Winchester who hereafter with Mr. Dumm, one of the old proprietors will condut that excelent journal. Mr. Fleming in his valedictory does not speak very flattering of the Democracy of Judge Lowry, and O. Bird. The latter, he says, is ocupying an official position obtained through the perjury and perfidy of Jason B. Brown & Co. Judge Lowry, he claims, has turned his back on the Democratic party. The Sentinel bids fair to maintain its prominence in Democratic journalism of the State. We wish it the success in the future that has marked its past career.—Ex.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucons membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

There are two of them, Messrs. Wise and Donaldson, who will cross the Atlantic in their balloons on the Fourth of July. They will travel on the "air current, basis, but as they have every reasonable expectation of being drowned. By the way, if they should take along Sergeant Bates to carry the flag, and O'Kelly to write the trip up, they would deserve well of their country.

Capt. Jack, as people have long since discovered, is not a fool. He is evidently getting ready to prove an Alibi in the case of Canby. He already denies that assassination, and so distinguished an American citizen as Schonchin vouches for the truth of Capt. Jack's statements. In view of the East, we may scarcely be surprised if Capt. Jack escapes punishment.

We were mislead last week in saying that the court of appeals had refused to grant the murderer a new trial. After examination the court has granted a new trial, and the dandy murderer is in high glee, and declares it to be his intention to "go to Europe this summer and have a d——d good time." if he does the gallows will be cheated out a victim.

A fellow by the name Fore, at St. Louis, recently attempted to kill his wife with a hatchet, and would have succeeded in his murderous purposes but for the amount of false hair she wore on the back of her head. The blow was directed at that part where false hair is most abundant, but the hair, acting as a cushion, caromed the hatched. We advise all ladies with murderously-inclined husbands to pile on pack hair, especially if he has a preference for a hatchet.

A Hint for the Grand Army.

At Mobile, the other day—Decoration Day—the soldier friends of the Northern dead were holding remeconies over their graves. During the services, an exquisite wreath of blue and gray flowers was sent to the officer in charge, with this simple comment:

"The Mobile Cadets of the Confederate Army honor the memory of those who, though their enemies in war were men and brave enough to do their duty." Then the leader of the Federal decorations said felicitously:

"It is a graceful offering of peace and good will, and I proudly embrace the opportunity of the speechless dead around us, and in behalf of their surviving comrades, to grasp the hand that brought it, in like token of our good will and friendship. It is the olive branch carried on an errand of peace Let it be excepted in a suitable spirit. Let the gallant cadets who hear this receive our homage for their during Let their fallen comrades sleep the sweet sleep of the heroic. 'Thorough enemies in war,' let the manhood and courage led them to defend a cause they believed just, be appropriately remembered and honored. Finally may this happy, touching, delicate and peacful episode in our ceremonies mark an era of better and kinder feeling among us and indicate the day and occasion when we mutually agreed that the passions and animosities born of the war should be consigned to the chambers of forgetfulness."

Let the grand army take a lesson from this episode.—Sentinel.

The philosopher and satirist of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, Bro. Dumm, gets off the following at the expense of the Chicago Inter-Ocean?

"What's got into the Inter-Ocean? It has at last perpetrated a joke—a joke to at the risk of loyalty. We have read that double-width blanket for months, and with some little admiration have esteemed it a choice source from which to select short extracts for funeral occasions. Generally a funny man can read it and become sad, and the sad and desponding only seek its columns to lie down and die. The frequent suicides in Chicago have been caused by men in good health trying to read a journal that parts its name in the middle. But there is hope for the Inter-Ocean, since Jerusalem Young Scammon has been to Connecticut and slept with the Danbury lunatic. Here is the result of one nights lodging: "There is a another surrender of Modocs. This time the capitulating army numbers six—one warrior, four children and a squaw. As Capt. Jack's legions are now reduced to about fifteen men, it is hoped that the general commanding the army in the field will direct a forward movement of our forces. Every general should be at his post, and the brigade, divisions, and corps commanders should adopt every precaution against surprise. By activity and vigilance we can repel any attack of Capt. Jack, and perhaps compel a surrender of his entire party. The Union expects every man to do his duty."

THE PLATFORM OF THE FUTURE

Under this heading the New York Sun of a late date contained an article so full of good points that we reproduce it in our columns.

In fighting the political battery in which the whole country is about to be engaged, it is well for the Opposition to look around and see what should be the leading issues of the contest. The old controversies which srang directly or indirectly out of negro slavery have had their day. New evils have become potent, and among she most malignant and dangerous of them or Corruption and Centralization. The abatement of these is the most imperative duty of the times.

We live in an area of corruption. It is one of the natural results of a great war, in which money was expended on a scale with out a precedent. Desiring to become suddenly rich, corupt men purchase offices under the national State, and municipal governments with the intent to give their votes, dispense their patronage, and wield their influence for the benefit of these who will pay the most. These offices in many cases are bought outright with money paid to the power that can bestow them. In other cases they are obtained by fraudulent elections which are carried through with money.

The investigations and exposures of the past two years, though barely skimming the surface, have shown that all branches of public service reek with rottenness and rascality. Indeed, this corroding evil has struck so deep and has so palsied the public conscience that a large body of the eager politicians of the nation are more likely to sneer at than applaud an office-holders or Government contractor. The gangrene approaches to the heart of the republic; and the question is, can the nation survive and be restored to health and vigor?

For a third of a century the standard by which political parties and public men were measured was fidelity to negro slavery or hostility against it. But the controversies concerning slavery and negroes have been closed by the results of the war, by the ratification of the three amendments to the constitution, and finally by the adoption of the Cincinnati platform and the nomination of Horace Greeley for President by the Democratic National Convention of 18 2. It is only the ghost of these dead controversies that can be conjured up and marshaled in the field hereafter. Nevertheless, it would seem to be upon these phantoms that the Grant Republicans are going to put their main reliance in the coming contest.

"The other great evil which now presses upon the public consideration in the administration of national affairs is the gradual absorption into itself, by the central power at Washington, of the rights of the States. We do not mean those rights as claimed by the Calhoun type of politicians, ner even by the more maderate school whereof Madison was the head. We refer to there old-fashioned doctrines in regard to the powers respectively of the State and Federal Governments which were held by such junists and Statesmen as John Marshall, DeWits Clinton, and Henry Clay, and which, in trying crises, received the support of Democrats like Jackson, Benton and VanBurun

'The present administration has etterly lost sight of these time-honored land marks. During the late war the Constitution, from the necessities of the case, was not infrequently laid upon the shelf for the obvious reason that its provisions did not contemplate a rebellion wherein nearly half the States of the Union would seecde and set up an independent Government. To meet this unforeseen emergency the Administration of Lincoln laid hold upon weapons to save the Union wherever they could find them. The like was to some extent the case during the reconstruction era, for the reason that the files, as Edmund Burke said, afforded no precedents for mastering such an unanticipated exigency

All this was, to use a moderate phrase excusable amid the trying events which occurred from 1861 to 1867. But there has been no excuse for disregarding the just rights of the States since Grant became President. Nevertheless, his Administration and a Republican Congress have treated the late insurgent State as if all their rights had been absorbed by the national Government. In pursuance of this centralizing policy powers never dreamed of by the ultra Federalists of the days of the elder Adams.

It is by these steathy approaches toward centralization that the Government of our fathers is gradually lapsing from a republic into oliarchy. It has been said by a philosophic stateman that a people may lose their liberties in a year, but not find it out for a decade. So with us—we may run on till the close of the present century under the forms of Republicanism, and then learn from the terrible teaching of some ambitious chieftain that the substance had departed long before.

By far the worst of the two evils we have mentioned is the corruption of the present hour; for, if not checked, it will grow from what it feeds upon till every department of the public service becomes so hopelessly demoralized that the government will fall an easy prey to some daring usurper.

Is not here a platform broad enough for the honest, the sagacious, the courageous men of all parties to rally upon, and fight the great battle against the two most alarming evils of our times, corruption and centralization? Will independent Republicans and liberal Democrats think of these things?"

Is There a God.

How eloquently does Chateaubriand reply to this inquiry, There is a God! The herbs of the valley, the cedars of the mountains bless him; the insect sports in His beams; the elephant salutes him with the rising orb of the day; the birds sing to Him in the foliage; the thunders proclaims him in the heavens; the ocean declares His immensity; man alone has said, "There is no God!" Unite in thought at the same instant the most beautiful objects in nature, suppose that you see at once all the hours of the day and all the seasons of the year; a morning of spring and a morning of autumn; a night bespangeled with stars and a night covered with clouds; meadows covered with flowers, and forests heavy with snow; fields gilded by tints of autumn; then alone you will have a just conception of the universe. While you are gazing on the sun which is plunging under the vault of the west, another observer admires him emerging from the gilded gates of the east. But what inconceivable magic does that aged star, which is sinking fatigned and burning in the shade of the evening, reappear at the same time fresh and humid with the rosy dews of morning? At every instant of the glorious orb is at once rising, resplendent at noonday, and setting in the west; or at rather our senses deceive us, and there is, properly speaking, no east, west, north or south in the world. Everything reduces itself into a single point, from whence the king of day sends forth at once a triple light in one substance. The bright splendor is perhaps that which nature can present that is most beautiful; for while it gives us an idea of the perpetual magnificence and resistless power of God, it exhibits at the same time a shining image of the glorious trinity.

Inventors concerned in patent rights at Washington are informed that it is necessary to renew a caveat which has been filed at the expiration of one year. The patent office has decided that unless that is done, the invention is open to public inspection. Whether this is another expedient to bleed the applicants in the interest of patent right lawyers, does not certainly appear. It looks suspicious. A terribly rotten sewer might be opened up through the Patent Office system, if any one felt disposed to encounter the stench.

Edmund Munger in speaking of the time when he was a boy, says it was the custom of school chidren if you passed a school-house to make a bow, but in these latter days, as you pass a school-house, you must keep your eye peeled, or you will get a brickbat at the side of your head.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

JUDGE FANCHER, of New York, has granted to Pauline Lucca a decree of absolute divorce from her husband, Baron von Rhaden, who is shown to have been guilty of marital infidelity in Berlin.

THE counsel for young Walworth will set up the plea of self-defense, the insanity dodge being regarded by his shrewd lawyers as about played out in New York....The remains of the late Hon. James L. Orr, former Minister to Russia, were buried last week at New York with every mark of respect. President Grant was in attendance, acting officially as chief mourner.

A GREAT row was recently created among the Chinese employed in the Beaver Falls (Pa.) cutlery works, by the attempt on the part of their employers to suppress gambling and opium-eating among the Celestials. They quit work and marched through the streets, armed with knives and hatchets, and for a time serious results were apprehended. They were finally pacified, but many of them will go back to California, where opium and gambling can be indulged to their hearts' content....At Hudson, W. H. H. Jewett, a rejected suitor, shot Ella Wood, attempted to kill her father, and then fatally shot himself....The new Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church (New York) is to cost a million and a quarter dollars.

FIVE persons were recently drowned in a pond at Calais, Vt., by the capsizing of a boat....A horrid tragedy was lately enacted in the town of Thorndike, near Belfast, Me. Almon Gordon and his wife and child were found murdered in bed, and suspicion points to a brother of Gordon as the author of the foul deed. A dispute about a piece of property is said to have led to the murder.

A NEW YORK paper makes the startling statement that there are between 7,000 and 8,000 children who have been kidnapped from Italy and are held in slavery in the large cities of the United States, New York being the great central entrepot. These children are sold daily, at private auction, at prices varying from $100 to $400 for boys, and from $100 to $500 for girls. Where the girls are exceptionally pretty, the prices rule higher.

THE trial of Susan B. Anthony for illegal voting has just been concluded at Canandaigua, N. Y., and resulted in a verdict of guilty. ....Vice-President Wilson is rapidly recovering his health. He is rusticating in the suburbs of Boston.

The West.

THE Pitt River Indians have turned over to Gen. Davis eleven Modoc refugees. It is said there are now but three or four of the tribe at large....If Gen. Davis had been let alone Capt. Jack and his confederates would have been hanged two or three weeks ago. Ropes and scaffolding were ready, and the murderers had been formally warned that they were to expiate their crimes on the morrow, when on the very eve of the execution a Government courier arrived with instructions from Washington to hold the Modocs until further orders. Gen. Davis explains, in a very straightforward way, his reasons for the prompt justice he meant to deal to these assassins. To try them by a military commission would have consumed fully six months, to say nothing of trouble and expense. It did not seem advisable to turn them over to the civil authorities. The Modocs were prisoners of war; the murders with which they were charged were committed while they were in arms against the United States, and took place both in Oregon and California, raising troublesome questions of jurisdiction between the courts of those States....The most remarkable games of billiards ever contested in the United States was played in Chicago, last week, between Mons. Ubassy, the French expert, and a local player named Bessunger. The game was the French or three ball, and Ubassy scored 800 points to Bessunger's 370, and made an average of nearly eighteen, the largest on record.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL railroad stock has fallen since April from 120 to 111½. This decline the Wall street operators declare to be occasioned by the farmers' movement. There is a rumor that the stock of the road is to be increased by an addition of $5,000,000, making its total stock $35,000,000....John F. Tracy has resigned the Presidency of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad....Modoc items: Judge Steele and a number of civilians visited Gen. Davis' camp, a few days ago, and had a talk with Capt. Jack and his companions. Jack, the account states, "had an ugly, sullen look, and was apparently displeased at being brought forth for a talk. The dark lines about his eyes, which are bright and glittering, indicate confinement, and it is evident that the restriction of liberty has a greater effect on him than the suspense concerning his future fate." He said that "his Indian heart was dead, and his body bold." Jack's friends are terribly incensed against those Indians that betrayed him, and vow they will kill them, or have them killed, if it takes years to accomplish the job. Gen. Davis has sent a body of men to hunt up and arrest the persons guilty of the massacre of the Modoc captives. Photographs have been taken of Capt. Jack and the whole band of warriors....Mrs. Nancy E. Clem, the alleged murderer of Jacob Young, of Indianapolis, has been granted a new trial by the Indiana Supreme Court....Advices from the troops moving into the Sioux country indicate a general engagement with large forces of Northern tribes of Indians at an early day.

MRS. A. W. DRAKE, of Macon county, Ill., died last week, from the effects of a dose of poison which she had prepared for her own son, and took by mistake. Before dying she made this horrible confession that she had, at different times in the last eight years, poisoned her husband, one of her daughters, two of her grandchildren, and two other relatives, all of whom had died suddenly....Prof. Watson, of Ann Arbor, announces that he has discovered another new planet, of the eleventh magnitude. ....Near Springfield, Ill., the other day, a negro named Taylor shot and killed his neighbor, Monroe Brown, also colored. When the officers attempted to arrest the murderer, he shot himself, inflicting a wound from which he died in a few hours....The total number of Modocs captured, including men, women and children, is 156.....Further accounts are at hand of the torrent which deluged Blackwood Valley in Nebraska last month. Without a moment's warning the Blackwood river became a flood, and submerged the whole valley, which is 45 miles long and a mile and a half wide, under seven feet of water. A camp of United States soldiers was swept away, and those of the soldiers who escaped saved their lives by clinging to the branches of trees into which they were carried. The settlers in the valley lost horses, cattle, and all their accumulations. Six of the soldiers and twenty-six horses were drowned.

A DESPERATE fight occurred in the streets of Chicago, a few days ago, between three policemen and three desperate thieves whom they were attempting to arrest. The desperadoes were all severely wounded by pistol shots and clubbing, the officers escaping unharmed. ....The Chicago Times prints crop reports from various sections of Illinois, which presage a good yield of wheat and oats. The corn prospect is reported as discouraging....Two children of William Lewis, aged respectively 8 years and 8 months, met their deaths at Jacksonville, Ill., the other day, by the explosion of kerosene while the elder was engaged in kindling a fire with the fluid. At the time of the accident the mother was insensible from liquor, and could not realize the situation. The father was absent at the time, but, when informed of the accident, was in a like condi-

TWO HUNDRED Mormons from England have arrived at Salt Lake....The Apaches in Arizona are leaving their reservations for the war path, and that great Indian civilizer, Gen. Crook, is preparing to follow them....The cholera has made its appearance in Cincinnati and Indianapolis.

THE Northern Pacific surveying party was recently attacked near Fort Abraham Lincoln by about 150 Sioux Indians. In the fight that ensued four Indians were killed....The Iowa Lutheran Synod has resolved to exclude from its church all members of the Orders of Masons, Odd Fellows, Red Men, etc....While the Modocs were being removed from the peninsula, Tule Lake, to Fort Klamath, one of the Indians known as Curly-headed Jack shot himself, and has since died.

The South.

A TERRIBLE domestic tragedy was recently enacted in Gallatin county, N. C. John Holcombe, impelled by the green-eyed monster, shot and killed his young and beautiful wife, firing three bullets into her body. The murderer then shot himself through the heart, falling on the dead body of his wife....Maj Henry Ewing, the principal proprietor of the St. Louis Times, died last week, at the age of 31....W. H. Day, a young son of F. O. Day, one of the wealthiest citizens of St. Louis, has been arrested for stealing a pair of bracelets from a young lady. He is considered a confirmed kleptomaniac, having been in the same kind of trouble several times before....Joe Duncan, colored, was hanged at Paris, Ky., the other day. The account states that "the drop was sprung at 1 o'clock, and he fell, but the rope proved too long. He was taken upon the scaffold, and the rope being shortened, he was hung again, this time successfully."

NAVASOTA, Texas, was recently visited by a $200,000 fire....A youth in Alexandria, Va., has declared his intention to start from Bunker Hill on a tour through the Northern States, carrying with him the Confederate flag.

THERE were thirty-five deaths from cholera in Nashville on the 17th inst. The disease is carrying its ravages into the neighboring towns of Tennessee....Three negro murderers of New Iberia, La., were taken from the officers by a mob of 1,000 citizens and hanged to a tree, a few days ago....A contest for the Governorship of Arkansas is going on in the courts of Little Rock—Joseph Brooks against Elisha Baxter....It is said Andy Johnson will enter the field for Governor of Tennessee at the next election....A regiment of volunteers is to be raised in Texas for the purpose of resisting and punishing the cattle-stealers who infest the border....A meeting of a joint committee of native blacks and whites was held in New Orleans, a few days ago, which adopted a strong series of resolutions, pledging their efforts to the preservation of the reciprocal rights of the two races, and the maintenance of peace and good will between them.

Washington.

GEN. SHERMAN stated to a correspondent, the other day, that "there would be no difficulty about disposing of the Modocs who are under arrest. Those found guilty of murder will be hanged or shot, and if it is proved that there was an agreement for a general uprising among the tribes others will receive some punishment as a warning to Indians. He remarked, however, that it was a pity that the guilty Modocs were not shot at first, and then all this commission business and expense would have been avoided....The Navy Department will shortly dispatch a vessel in search of the missing Polaris....Senator Sumner's condition has greatly improved of late, and he is now on the high road to health.... A Washington dispatch says: The appropriation for Government printing has been exhausted, and, there being no fund from which to draw, the business of the Government printing office has come to a standstill, and most of the employes have been furloughed until the 1st of July.

THE important discovery has just been made that all the secret archives of the War Department, pertaining to what is known as the confidential history of the late war, have been stolen. By whom or when they were taken is not known. Most of the documents were filed and put away in boxes in 1865 and 1866, and have not been referred to till recently, when they could not be found. The Buell court-martial records, it will be remembered, disappeared in the same mysterious way several years ago....The commissioners appointed by our Government to investigate the depredations on the Rio Grande have finished their labors, which have included the hearing of 400 witnesses and the collection of 1,300 affidavits. The commissioners represent the amount of damages, direct and consequential, to those who have suffered by these raids, at between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000.

WITH regard to Col. Mackenzie's raid into Mexico while in pursuit of the Kickapoos, Gen. Sheridan, in forwarding that officer's report of the affair to the War Department, says he does not believe that any boundary exists when such merciless banditti are being pursued. Both the United States and Mexico should be glad to throw open their territory to each other's troops for the punishment of these savages....Brisbane's so-called pneumatic tube has proved a failure. The appropriation of $15,000 voted by Congress has been expended, and there is nothing to show for it....It is rumored that Secretary of the Treasury Richardson will resign shortly.... Thus far, 46 Senators and Representatives have declined to accept the back pay. The total amount thus returned to the Treasury is $192,017....The Postmaster-General has ordered the establishment of free delivery in Columbus, O., Evansville, Ind., and Covington, Ky.

THERE is no truth in the report that Secretary Richardson is about to resign....Arrangements are being made at the Navy Department to send out an expedition to several points on the southern coasts of the Eastern Hemisphere to make observations on the transit of Venus next year, one of the most important astronomical events of the century.

Foreign.

THE new Spanish Ministry is in sympathy with the Federal Republican sentiment. Their policy has been announced in the Cortes to be in favor of the immediate separation of the country into Federal States. The army is to be reduced to order, the Carlists are to be promptly suppressed, and slavery is to be abolished....The French Governmet has decided to transport Henri Rochefort to the penal colony of New Caledonia....A horrible murder was committed in Toronto, Canada, a few days ago. A brute named Tim Murphy gagged his wife so as to stifle her cries, and then kicked and beat her brains out. Nailing up the door of her room, he quietly went to his work, and displayed the utmost indifference when arrested.

SPANISH items: Nicolas Salmeron has been elected President of the Cortes. The Government has announced that a separation of Church and State is a part of its programme. ....A loan of 300,000,000 reals will be immediately negotiated....A Carlist victory is reported from Biscay....It is said that ex-Queen Isabella is about to consult the Pope regarding the prospects of the Bourbon family in Spain ....Castelar has prepared a political map of Spain dividing the country into thirteen States, in accordance with the policy of the Margall Ministry, who mean to establish a Federal Republic. A special commission of twenty-five is to be appointed to draft the Constitution for this Republic, and its exchequer is to be supplied by a loan of about $40,000,000..... The death is announced of John Leander Hotten, the London publisher. He will be somewhat unpleasantly remembered as the literary pirate who has enriched himself by the larcenous re-publication of American books, without the slightest compensation to the authors....The Pope has completely recovered from his late indisposition....The limited number of strangers in Vienna has compelled a reduction in the high price of living.... Two-thirds of the town of Maxwell, Ontario, was recently destroyed by fire.

THE steamship Great Eastern has commenced the laying of the new Atlantic cable from Valentia Bay, Ireland, to Sydney, Cape Breton....A Havana dispatch states that a detachment of ninety soldiers was surprised by the insurgents, under Sanguili, near [illegible], and forty killed, including the commanding officer.

VALPARAISO, in Chili, was recently visited by an earthquake. Several people were killed, a large number wounded, and many buildings seriously injured....The Italian Parliament has passed, by a vote of 66 to 20, the bill for the suppression of religious corporations....It was recently stated that President MacMahon had demanded of the French Assembly that one of its members, a Communist named Ranc, be delivered up for trial. The matter was referred to a committee, and the committee have voted almost unanimously that the demand be acceded to.

STUDENTS of Biblical geography have long been in doubt as to the exact locality of Mount Calvary, where Christ was crucified. The Oriental Topographical Corps, sent out from England to study the topography of Bible lands, think they have at last found the spot so hallowed to Christians, in the hill outside of Damascus gate, near the north wall of Jerusalem. The profile of this hill is skull-shaped, and this peculiarity strengthens the supposition that it is really the scene of the crucifixion, which is described in the Bible as a "place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull"....The Shah of Persia arrived at London on the 18th of May, and was welcomed with great display and abundant enthusiasm. ....News has been received at Petersburg that the Orenburg division of the Russian army had encountered the Khivans in two battles, defeating them in both engagements. At last accounts Gen. Kauffman, commanding the advance column, was within twenty-five miles of the Khivan capital.

Settling a Duelist.

The Compte de B——, a Colonel in the line, distinguished for his gallantry in the field, as well as for the length of his service, was ordered to Martinique with his regiment in the year 1798. At that period the rage for dueling was everywhere prevalent, but in no place more so than in the West India Islands, where the civilian and the military man alike endeavored to establish his reputation by the questionable test of "an affair." Among the officers quartered in the garrison of St. Pierre was one, a Capt. G——, whose delight consisted in fighting or fomenting duels, and who measured every man's character by the number he had fought. He was a man of brusque manners and arrogant bearing, but of undoubted, though misapplied, courage.

It happened one day that conversing with Compte de B——, the subject of dueling came on the tapis, when the Colonel observed, that although he had seen much and various service, it had never been his chance to be engaged in a single affair. The words appeared to act like wildfire on the mind of his inflammable companion. "What!" he exclaimed—"What! you never had a cause for a quarrel?" "Never!" replied the Colonel, calmly. "Eh bien done," cried Capt. G——, "viola une!" and raising his hand, while his eyes gleamed with ferocious pleasure, he struck M. de B—— a violent blow on the cheek. The latter eyed him for a moment, nor attempted to return the blow, then pointing significantly to his sword, he left the spot.

The consequence was inevitable—the preliminaries were arranged, and the same evening the parties met. It was decided to fight with small swords—indeed, dueling with pistols was rarely, if ever, practiced in the French service. The Compte de B—— came on the ground, wearing upon his cheek a patch of black taffeta, as if to conceal the place where he had received the injurious blow. They were both expert swordsmen, but the Colonel, though no duelist, was a perfect master of his weapon. His antagonist was soon at his mercy, but he contented himself with inflicting a severe wound in his sword-arm, and having disabled him for the time, he took out a pair of scissors, and, clipping off a corner of the patch, very coolly observed, "C'est un peu mieux!" (It is a little better.) As soon as Capt. G—— recovered from his wound, he received a second message from from M. de B——, and a second meeting was the consequence, attended by a similar result. Again they met, and again, on every occasion, the Colonel wounded his adversary and clipped off a corner from the taffeta on his cheek, accompanying the act with the same observation. For the fifth time the Compte de B—— invited his enemy to the field, and, with a stern determination equal to the perseverance which dogged him, Capt. G—— obeyed the summons. Their swords crossed again, but the Colonel's aspect was changed. After a few passes he saw his advantage, availed himself of it in a moment, and in the next his sword had pierced Capt. G——'s heart, who fell dead to the ground. The Colonel sheathed his weapon, turned around to his friend and pulled off the remainder of the patch. Then, glancing at the dead body at his feet, he quietly observed, "Now it is cured."

The Grain Supply.

Chicago warehouses contained last week 445,000 bushels of wheat, 4,026,-485 bushels of corn, 1,618,263 bushels of oats, 232,174 bushels of rye, and 57,232 bushels of barley, making a total of 6,380,519 bushels of grain. The stock of grain in Milwaukee was 375,548 bushels of wheat, 509,286 bushels of oats, 73,646 bushels of corn, 104,800 bushels of rye, and 13,993 bushels of barley. The amount of grain in New York city was 136,361 bushels of wheat, 531,895 bushels of corn, 162,024 bushels of oats, 42,073 bushels of rye, and 38,097 bushels of barley. The amonnt of wheat in Buffalo was 95,000 bushels, of corn 140,000 bushels, and of oats 120,000 bushels. The visible supply of grain in the States and Canada, May 31, 1873, was 17,970,034 bushels, embracing 4,998,761 bushels of wheat, 9,347,757 bushels of corn, 3,422,467 bushels of oats, and 201,049 bushels of barley.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—The State Department has promulgated, for the information of all concerned, the act of Congress to prevent cruelty to animals while transported by railroads, or other means of transportation, in the United States. The act does not take effect until Oct 1, after which railroad companies are prohibited from keeping animals in continuous confinement for more than twenty-eight hours without unloading for five hours, and properly feeding and being watered. If they are supplied on the cars with food and water, this provision does not apply. United States courts have jurisdiction in case of a violation of the law, and fines not exceeding $500 are provided for each case.

A Texas Bender--Four Men Killed While Asleep.

On Friday last a most fiendish murder occurred on Elm fork of Trinity river, near the village of Head of Elm, in Cook county. One of the numerous herds of cattle being driven over the Kansas trail had been corralled for the night, and after supper those that were not on duty as guards, soon rolled themselves in their blankets, to get what little rest a "cow boy" can have.

About 10 o'clock a Mexican, who was one of the hands employed, and who was acting as cook, stealthily procured an ax and commenced in cold blood to murder the unconscious sleepers. He succeeded in killing four, when, just as he was in the act of dispatching the fifth one, the sleeper suddenly awoke, and, discovering his danger, gave the alarm and he with the remaining ones escaped.

One of the murdered men had his head completely severed from his body, while the others were mangled in the most ghastly and almost unrecognizable manner. The Mexican was not looked upon as being dangerous, and no cause was given for this fearful deed. The only object was to secure the money and stock belonging to the party, which the fiend was only prevented from doing by the alarm which was given, during the excitement of which he precipitately fled.—Dallas (Texas) Herald.

HOE, EVERY HEN THAT SCRATCHETH. —An ingenious West Bridgewater man has utilized the destructive, and bent the scratching, power of hens to the aid of agriculture. He places a hen with chickens in a long, narrow cage, just wide enough to fit in between two rows of potatoes, wherein she scratches to her heart's content. The cage is moved along the space between the rows until the ground has been thoroughly scratched over, and the potatoes nicely hoed, and all the bugs eaten.

A Danbury Man's Adventure.

A Danbury man started for Greenwich, Friday, to see an iron fence. What he wanted to see an iron fence for we don't know, and it really makes no difference. He went. He wanted to go off on the 9:50 train, so he hurried home to get ready. His wife and a vicious outside woman were cleaning house, and it was some little time before he could get his society suit ready. In the meantime he opened fire on the largest half of a custard pie, holding it in his hand, and dancing around and yelling for his things. When she brought his overcoat, he set the pie in a chair, to put on the coat, but in his nervousness stepped on the end of a long-handled whitewash brush which was balanced across a pail, and the other end flew up and discharged about a pint of the awful mixture over the sofa, wall-paper, and his panting, indignant wife. She made a remark and he contradicted it. Then he sat down in the chair where the pie was, and got up with a howl that would have melted the stoutest heart. She wanted him to wait while she scraped off the surplus, but he was too mad to converse in words of more than one syllable, and started for the depot, and boarded the train, and in the seclusion of the baggage-car removed the offensive lunch.

He got to Greenwich all right, and looked at the fence. We hope he admired it. Then he started for home but missed the train, and as the next was an express and didn't stop at Greenwich, he was obliged to walk to the draw-bridge at Cos Cob or stay in Greenwich all night. So he walked up there in the rain, but didn't mind it much, as he had an umbrella and the pie was pretty well dried in. When he got to Cos Cob he stood up on a fence to look at the scenery, and swear, when a sharp gust of wind took off his hat and carried it across a bog lot. Then he stepped down on the other side, too amazed to express himself, and another gust of wind came along, and turned the umbrella inside out. A brief conversation here ensued between himself and the umbrella, which he still held, and he again started for the hat. When he got it, he kicked it around several times and then jammed it down on his head, and started once more through the bogs as the train drew up at the bridge. It was a terrible struggle, as the bogs were uncertain, but he strained, and coughed, and spit, and howled, and swore, and it did seem as if he would catch it after all. What he thought as he stood on that fence and watched the train sail across the bridge, no human being can tell.

An hour later he appeared in Stamford, wet through to the skin, splashed with mud, and with an expression on his face that would have scared a hydrant. Backing himself against the depot he stood there until near midnight, and then went up on the owl train to Norwalk, falling asleep in the meantime, and narrowly escaping being carried by the depot. Here he took the freight for Danbury, arriving at home just before daylight. His wife was abed but not sleeping. She lay there torn by forebodings and harassed by suspense. Perhaps he was dead and lying on the cold ground in the rain. Then she thought of his lifeless body, and groaned; and thought of the pie and groaned again. She knew his knock the moment it sounded, and, rushing down-stairs in the costume appropriate to that hour, she threw herself into his hair and hysterically shouted, "Oh, you old rascal! Come in here."—Danbury News.

Are Crows Useless?

It would be well for every farmer to endeavor to answer this question to his own satisfaction. We all know how provoking it is, in the spring time, when the corn and other grains are planted, and work drives hard, to see an army of crows encamped upon our fields, rapidly destroying the newly planted crop; and we cannot wonder much if the farmer's temper does rise and impel him to shoulder the musket or rifle, and deal death to the marauders.

Farmers are apt to regard crows as their natural enemies.

What about cut-worms and white grubs? Are not they the pests of the cornfields, and are not they the natural food of the crow?

To be sure his appetite prompts him also to taste your corn, and pull up the young wheat and tear open the husks of the ears of corn. Should he not take a little toll as well as the miller?

Destroy every crow, and your corn and wheat will not be taken in the kernel perhaps, but they will stand a chance of being cut down when they are two or three inches high, and force you to plant them over, when it will put your crop back at least two weeks for that season.

Crows are undoubtedly useful birds in destroying the myriads of vermin which attack our crops; and so I feel inclined to speak a good word for them, although few of your readers may incline to do so when they are suffering from their depredations, and daily seeing them pulling up hill after hill of corn.

I think that one might find a remedy in plantling thickly—putting ten grains of corn or wheat where four are needed, and allowing Mr. and Mrs. Crow to dine on the other six, while they also devour the cut-worms, etc. But if war must be waged against them, commence it by setting a steel in a tuft of grass, and bait it with a blown egg-shell, or a bit of fresh meat.

If you succeed in catching one crow, its cries will teach all the other crows that danger is there, and it is thought to be a safeguard for the whole field.

Crows are, as we all know, exceedingly wary birds, and smell danger from afar; so if one dead crow is hung up in a field, it is the most effectual scarecrow that can be furnished.

Poisoned corn will soon rid the farmer of the nuisance of crows. Yet I think it a very mean resort, and feel assured that he who undertakes it will have his crops blasted by cut-worms and other vermin, and will pray for a return of his black enemies.—Country Gentleman.

Dental Art Among the Japanese.

Dr. W. St. George Elliott, formerly of Troy, N. Y., now at Yokohama, Japan, sends to the Dental Cosmos an interesting account of Japanese habits in regard to teeth, and of the state of dentistry in that empire. He says that the teeth of the daughters of Japan are objects of envy, and it is remarkable that a people who place so much value upon their teeth should keep up the custom of blacking them after marriage. As a race the Japanese have got good teeth, and it is rare to find an old person with any at all. Their tooth-brushes consist of tough wood, pounded at one end to loosen the fibers. They resemble paint-brushes, and owing to their shape it is impossible to get one behind the teeth. As might be expected, there is an accumulation of tartar which frequently draws the teeth of old people. The greatest accumulation of tartar is behind the lower orals, and those are frequently cemented together by a dense, dark-brown deposit a quarter of an inch in thickness. Their process of manufacturing false teeth is very crude. The plates are made of wood, and the teeth consist of tacks driven up from under the side. A piece of wax is heated and pressed into the roof of the mouth. It is then taken out and hardened by putting it into cold water. Another piece of heated wax is applied to the impression, and after being pressed into shape, is hardened. A piece of wood is then roughly cut into the desired form, and the model, having been smeared with red paint, is applied to it. Where they touch each other a mark is left by the paint. This is cut away till they touch evenly all over. Sharks' teeth, bits of ivory, or stone, for teeth, are set into the wood and retained in position by being strung on a thread which is secured on each end by a peg driven into the hole where the thread, makes its exit from the base. Iron or copper tacks are driven into the ridge for masticating purposes, the unequal wear of the wood and metal keeping up the desired roughness. Their full sets answer admirably for the mastication of food, but, as they do not improve the looks, they are worn but little for ornament. The ordinary service of a set of teeth is about five years, but they frequently last much longer. All full upper sets are retained by atmospheric pressure. This principle is coeqnal with art. In Japan, dentistry exists only as a mechanical trade, and the status of those who practice it is not very high. It is, in fact, graded with carpenters—their word hadyikfsan meaning tooth-carpenter.

The Autumn of Life.

It is the solemn thought connected with middle life, that life's last business is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that a man begins to marvel that he let the days of youth go by so half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling, it is the sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is passed, and every day that follows is shorter, and the light fainter, and the feebler shadows tell that Nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the first gray hairs become visible, when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that a man is no longer going up hill, but down, and that the sun is always westering, he looks back on things behind. When we were children we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood, with its earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, and home. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than his first, if he will look on, and not look back.

Paddle Your Own Canoe.

Judge S. gave his son a thousand dollars, telling him to go to college and graduate. The son returned at the end of the Freshman year without a dollar and with several ugly habits. About the close of the vacation the Judge said to his son:

"Well, William, are you going to college this year?"

"Have no money, father."

"But I gave you a thousand dollars to graduate on!"

"That's all gone, father."

"Very well, my son; it was all I could give you; you can't stay here; you must now pay your own way in the world."

A new light broke in upon the vision of the astonished young man. He accommodated himself to the situation; he left home, made his way through college, and graduated at the head of his class—studied law, became Governor of the State of New York, entered the Cabinet of the President of the United States, and has made a record for himself that will not soon die, being none other than William H. Seward.

MANUFACTURE OF HAIR CLOTH.—Hair cloth is made from the hair of horses' tails, which is brought, some of it from South America, but more from Russia. In the latter country, it is collected at the great fairs of Nizni, Novogorod, and Isbilt. It is of all shades of color, and for use is died black. The poorest quality sells for about fifty cents a pound; the best for $4, the price rapidly increasing as the length exceeds twenty-four inches. In the fabrication of hair cloth, the hair is wet with water, and, when well soaked, is put in the loom to be woven with a cotton wrap. The weaving mechanism is so perfect in its operation that if one of the hairs forming the weft is missed, the device acting upon it continues to work until it has grasped it, all the other parts of the machine standing still.

THE BROOKLYN BRIDGE.—The Brooklyn bridge project, intended to connect New York and Brooklyn, seems likely to be brought to a stop. In the way of swindling contracts the managers of the Brooklyn Bridge Company have rivalled the renowned Tammany chieftain. The caissons of the bridge stand as reminders to the Brooklyn and New York taxpayers.

GEN. MEACHAM thinks Capt. Jack the best of the Modocs, after all. He says he was the first and most persistent advocate of peace, but whenever he talked in its favor some of the tribe would throw a shawl over his shoulders, or put a woman's bonnet on his head, signifying that he was a coward; and to their taunts and jeers he at last yielded.

AVARICIOUS AUSTRIANS.

Devices for Obtaining Money at the Vienna Exposition.

[Vienna Cor. of the New York Tribune.]

The devices of the exhibition management to lighten the pockets of visitors provoke much sharp criticism and satire in the Vienna p[illegible] resented by th[illegible] expresses their opinion unmistakably. The open air concert by Strauss' orchestra was broken up, the other day, by the indignant audience, who found, when they arrived on the ground, that all the space within ear-shot [illegible] was occupied by chairs, for which a gulden each was demanded. Somebody had got a "concession" to monopolize the space in this way, so that the concert, which was advertised as free to all who visited the exhibition, could only be heard by paying an extra half dollar. Music is almost as free as air in Vienna. There are dozens of beer gardens and restaurants where one can hear really excellent orche[illegible] that a glass of beer costs; and the best of military band music can be enjoyed any pleasant day in the parks for nothing. The people who went to hear Strauss were, therefore, naturally indignant at the trick, and refused to pay their guldens. Finally the clamor became so great that Strauss and his pipers and fiddlers marched off without playing at all. Another [illegible] and annoying device of the management is to [illegible] change money at the gates where entrance tickets are sold. Somebody has a concession for keeping an exchange office near each entrance, where the visitor must submit to a shave to have his money changed. Last Sunday, when the admission price was half a gulden, the cashier refused to take a gulden for two tickets, and gentlemen accompanied by ladies had to go to the money-changer's and return with the exact sum of 50 kreutzers for each ticket wanted. The carriage regulations are also devised to bleed the public. You leave your carriage at one of the entrance doors, but when you come out you don't find it. An official in uniform politely informs you that it has gone to the Standplatz. But where is the Standplatz? A quarter of a mile at least. You must send a telegram from an office close by the gate, which costs you 10 kreutzers, and after you have waited fifteen minutes, in the rain, perhaps, the vehicle appears. But this is not the only imposition you must submit to. A fellow with a red band around his cap, and numerous brass buttons on his coat, opens the carriage door for you, whether you want him to or not, and of course must be paid for his superfluous service. Another catchpenny device is the placing of chairs in various parts of the buildings and grounds, with no notice upon them that their use is not free. The verdant visitor, tired of tramping about and gazing at the "universal unreadiness" o[illegible], sinks into one of these seats with a disposition to be grateful for the thoughtfulness of the management in providing a rest for the weary, when a smart girl, with a leather bag strapped [illegible] upon him, th[illegible] his hand and demands 10 kreutzers for the use of the chair. Some individual or company has the concession of the right to rent chairs, it appears. There is a sharp bon mot [illegible] schemes to capture the gulden[illegible] kreutzers of the unwary, which cuts more ways than one. The roof of the industrial palace leaks in the rotunda and at other places. The Figaro, noticing this fact, says that Baron Schwartz has rented these interesting points for 100,000 guldens to an American, who will charge visitors 25 kreutzers a minute for cooling themselves off under these shower baths.

How the Kickapoos Were Surprised.

A San Antonio, Texas, letter says: Col. McKenzie's raid over the border upon the cattle-stealing Kickapoos was carried out with 120 men of the Tenth Cavalry. Each man was armed with a Spencer rifle and a pair of cavalry revolvers. No sabers were taken by the men. On the night of May 17, at about ten o'clock, the command crossed the Rio Grande en route for Santa Rosa, distant about sixty miles from the river, and situated in the district where the Kickapoo and Lipan Indians, with their Mexican accomplices, reside. Cautiously proceeding, the party reached Santa Rosa at an early hour on the morning of the 19th. The detachment rushed at full speed through the old Mexican town, arousing the sleepers, and passed on to the other side, where, about a mile off, they fell upon the Kickapoo camp. There were probably a couple of dozen Indians stirring in the camp as the cavalry came up, but the surprise, fortunately for the soldiers, was so complete that the redoubtable warriors, who had not awakened, were unable to make more than a feeble resistance. The fight, such as it was, lasted about ten or fifteen minutes. In that time two of the attacking party were killed and two mortally wounded. Of the Kickapoos twenty-eight were killed and forty-two were captured, among them women and children. Many of the Indians escaped to the mountain[illegible], and the cavalry [illegible] their prisoners with them. The Kickapoos were in war-paint and feathers. One of the warriors shot was a man of gigantic stature, measuring seven feet high. Heavy silver ornaments were a noticeable feature of his attire.

Circumnavigation.—After a voyage of 52,000 miles, taking [illegible] days' sailing, the British ship [illegible] has just returned to England. She was dispatched in 1865, by way of the Straits of Magellan, for the Pacific, to become the flag-ship of the squadron. She is believed to be the largest ship that ever passed through the intricate straits, and in passing ran upon a rock off the Land of Fuego. After being relieved from duty in the Pacific, she proceeded homeward by way of the Cape of Good Hope. It is stated that the Captain is to publish a history of the round voyage, which ought to make an interesting book.

Advice to France—Put not your faith in princes.

A Wild Huntress—A Strange, but True Story.

The [illegible] tells the following story on the authority of John Messenger, of Winbridge, Green county, Pa., for whose veracity it vouches: [illegible] living near Winbridge, Green county, Pa., had born to him five children, four girls and one boy. His name is Daniel Lewis. When quite young the boy and second daughter, named Lucinda Lewis, developed quite a fondness for hunting, and were out nearly [illegible] the [illegible] season [illegible] seemed to delight in nothing so much as the free life of a hunter, and would be gone from home for weeks at a time. After some four or five years the boy quit it and entered on the more industrious pursuits of life, but the girl continued in the chase. Drawing herself more from human intercourse and restraint, she has become a wild woman, fleeing from the approach her kind with the speed of a deer.

During the early years of her solitary life she used to approach her father's house and entice the dogs to follow her, learning almost any breed of dogs to become good hunters. In the hope of bringing her back to her home and to civilization, her brother followed her and shot the dog she had taken away, using every inducement to get her to go back with him, but all in vain.

For eighteen years, since she was twelve years of age, she has lived this wild life, sleeping in the centers of straw stacks during the night and hiding in them during the summer. She is now thirty years old, and is as wild as the most untamed denizen of the forest.

Mr. Messenger says he at one time, while out hunting, met her in the woods. Her long black hair, covering her face and eyes, was matted with burs and leaves, and her black, flashing eyes made her a startling picture. She remained perfectly still until he got within twenty feet of her, when she turned and fled with a swiftness no man could hope to rival.

A few days since she was seen again, and then had in her hand three pheasants and four rabbits, but although these encumbered her, she eluded every attempt to capture her. She has been so long in the woods that she has become perfectly wild. Her dress is made of the skins of wild animals and a blanket that she has taken somewhere during one of her nocturnal predatory tours.

A Western Farmer.

The farmers of New England who blast holes in the ground to plant a few acres of beans and corn-hops, doubtless have imperfect notions of the area of some of our Western farms. Here, in Vermilion county, a single individual owns and manages seven thousand acres, while other farms of still greater magnitude may be found in adjoining counties. Mr. John Slidell, of the township bearing his name, has a domain of seven thousand acres. The tract is six miles long, and varies from one to two miles in width. Running through its entire length is the Little Vermilion river, skirted for two miles with beautiful groves and clusters of thickets. Three thousand acres are in meadow, and as much more in blue grass and pasture, and the remaining thousand is devoted [illegible]. Roaming over the great pasture are fifteen hundred cattle, a thousand of which will shortly be shipped to New York city. Mr. Slidell has also about a thousand hogs on his place. The corn he raises, together with thousands of bushels that he buys annually, is consumed on his farm. He employs about forty teams and fifty men, and has nine comfortable tenement houses upon the plantation. There are no public roads through his premises, but Mr. Slidell says that it is a highway of itself. Wagon roads run through the pasture from one end of the domain to the other, with gates at the fence crossings. The farm abounds in springs, and is well drained throughout. The proprietor of this miniature dominion dwells in a brick mansion of size and surroundings corresponding with the magnitude of his comprehensive undertaking.

Mr. Slidell has thirty miles of hedge, and he expects to plant much more. His business involves more capital than is employed by any mining company, banking house, or mercantile establishment in Vermilion county, and its successful management demands capacity and energy of the first grade.—Danville (Ill.) Times.

An Enormous Engine.

Pittsburgh claims to have in process of construction a pair of engines which will be the most powerful in the world. Reducing the capacity of some of the largest pumping engines to a uniform lift of one foot in twenty-four hours, it is found that the one at the Lehigh zinc mines will lift 3,456,000,000 million gallons; the pair at the Chicago water works, 4,500,000,000 gallons; the pair at Haarlem, Holland, 10,000,000,000, while the new Pittsburgh engines will lift 14,240,000,000 gallons. The pair will weigh 1,500 tons, and will cost $423,550. The following dimensions will serve to give some idea of its magnitude: Cranks, nine tons; shaft, twenty-four tons; four sections of the two valve chambers, one hundred and twenty tons; fly-wheel, seventy tons. The four plungers will weigh upward of four hundred tons. Cylinder, sixty-four inches diameter; stroke, fourteen feet. Plungers forty inches diameter; eleven foot stroke. This ponderous piece of machinery will be used to raise water into the Highland avenue reservoir in Pittsburgh, a height of three hundred and fifty-six feet. It is estimated it will raise seventy million pounds of water for each hundred pounds of coal consumed, the cost being at the rate of one cent for every 3,070 gallons.

An Unbalanced Sheep.—William Giaspel, of Dutch Neck, N. J., owns a sheep which seems to possess greater propelling power in its hind parts than before. In runing, the hinder part invariably outruns the fore part of the animal, which makes it necessary for it to turn around every few feet, when running rapidly. The sheep has never been injured in any way, but from its birth the tail of the animal has manifested a determination to keep at least even with the head when on a run.

Light and the Complexion.

The action of the light on the human skin is manifest; it browns and tans the teguments by calling out the productions of the coloring matter they contain. The parts of the body usually bare, as the skin of the face and hands, are darker than others. In the same region, country people are more tanned than down town residents. In latitudes not far apart the inhabitants of the same country vary in complexion in a measure perceptibly related to the intensity of solar light. In Europe, three varieties of color in the skin are distinctly marked: olive brown with black hair, beard, and eyes; chestnut, with tawny beard and bluish eyes; blonde, with fair beard and sky-blue eyes. White skins show more readily alterations occasioned by light and heat; but, though less striking, facts of variation in color are observable in others. The Scytho-Arabic race has but half its representatives in Europe and Central Asia, while the remainder passes down to the Indian ocean, continuing to show the gradual raising of climate by deepening brown complexions. The Himalayan Hindoos are almost white; those of the Deccan, of Coromandel, Malabar, and Ceylon, are darker than some negro tribes. The Arabs, olive and almost fair in Armenia and Syria, are deep brown in Yaman and Muscat.

The Egyptians, as we go from the mouth of the Nile up stream toward its source, present an ascending chromatic scale, from white to black, and the same is true of the Tuariks, on the southern side of the Atlas, who are only light olive, while their brethren in the interior of Africa are black. The ancient monuments of Egypt show us a fact equally significant. The men are always depicted of a reddish brown—they live in the open air, while the women, kept shut up, have a pale yellow complexion. Barrow asserts that the Mantchoo Tartars have grown whiter during their abode in China. Remusat, Pallas and Gutzlaff speak of the Chinese women as remarkable for a European fairness. The Jewesses of Cairo or Syria, always hidden under veils in their houses, have a pallid color. In the yellow races of the Sumatra Sound and the Maldives, the women, always covered up, are pale like wax. We know, too, that the Esquimaux bleach during their long winter. These phenomena, no doubt, are the results of several influences arising at once, and light does not play the sole part in them. Heat and other conditions of the medium probably have a share in these operations of color. Still, the peculiar and powerful effect of luminous radiation as a part of them is beyond dispute.—Popular Science Monthly.

Extraordinary Attempt at Suicide.

Though it is but a step from the sublime to the ridiculous, it is surprising how few can take it, well-directed as their efforts would seem to be. An unhappy Frenchman has lately made a very creditable attempt. This gentleman, who is described as having "a finely-sprung poetic sentiment," being unfortunate in some literary ventures, and in a certain affaire de cœur, determined to destroy himself. He had already made during his short life four unsuccessful attempts. Resolving to succeed at last, he provided himself with a revolver, a rope, a stake, a bottle of poison, and a box of lucifer matches, and proceeded to a cliff which overhung the sea. He there drove the stake into the ground, fastened one end of the rope to it, deliberately adjusted the other end around his neck, took the revolver into his hand, set fire to his clothes, swallowed the poison, and, swinging himself gently off—he was sensitive to pain—pulled the trigger. The instrument exploded, but the ball, only grazing his ear, cut the rope, and the baffled suicide was precipitated into the sea. The salt water, combined with the violent shock, not unnaturally destroyed the effects of the poison, and he was ignominiously saved from drowning by a passing fishing-smack. He concluded that Providence had intended him for something great, but died three days after from inflammation of the lungs contracted from the exposure to cold and damp. That this "fine poetic character" should have miscalculated the designs of Providence is not so surprising, perhaps, as the fact that he could not manage in some way to live for effect when he had tried so hard to die for it.—London Globe.

How to Prevent Grasshopper Plagues.

Entomologists are familiar with the fact that grasshoppers deposit their eggs in a very limited space—seldom more than an area of two or three acres. An expert has no difficulty in a proper season to discover the hatching bed, and ascertain when the young insect is likely to emerge from the egg. It is not many years since Russia was infested by the grasshopper plague, and its broad wheat land devastated year after year as completely as Utah has been devastated by them during late years. The Russian Government has enlisted science to aid in carrying on the war of extermination against the grasshopper, and has succeeded so well that the armies formerly hatched in the plains have totally disappeared, and but few of those incubated on the great steppes of the Ural mountains ever reach the valleys. The mode of warfare is as simple as it is effective, the insect being captured before leaving the hatching grounds by small boys with fly-nets. Experienced entomologists are employed to ascertain the locality where the grasshoppers' eggs are deposited, and the time when incubation will take place. If by these simple means the grasshopper plague can be expelled from the land, it would certainly seem desirable that the experiment should be tried. It would be a yearly saving of millions of dollars' worth of produce which is now devoured by this ravaging insect.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A Fool for a Client.—Mr. Rees, an English barrister, illustrates the old saw that "the lawyer who manages his own case has a fool for a client." Before he died he wrote his will, covering a [illegible] of long-drawn foolscap sheets. In searching his papers two pages numbered "four" were found, seeming to be parts of his ultimate testament, and now the Probate Court is puzzled to decide which is which, and who are who among the legatees named in the questionable pages. Justly enough, it has ruled that the estate pay the costs of the contest.

Colored Dresses—An Important Invention.

The Scientific American says it is not often that we find scientific items of any considerable degree of interest to the [illegible] of the fair sex who may, perchance, glance over our pages; but now we believe we have got one which is simply absorbing. Probably, Madame or Miss, you are the possessor of a summer dress, made from some white diaphanous material; and it may also be imagined that during your shopping you have inspected goods of similar nature, only of varying colors, from which you have purchased sufficient materials to construct a number of those bewildering garments in comparison with the intricacies of which the most elaborate works of modern engineering furnish no parallel. Now, a learned German professor has invented a plan whereby your single white dress may be changed as often as you desire to any color you may fancy, and this in your own laundry, so that hereafter the money which you would devote to several robes of varying hues may be entirely saved, while you may appear daily, if you choose, in toilets of totally different complexion. The process is very simple, and consists in merely coloring the starch used in the "doing up." Suppose a white dress is to be tinted a beautiful crimson: Three parts of fuchsin, an analine color which any chemist can readily procure for you, are dissolved in twenty parts of glycerine, and mixed in a mortar with a little water. Then ordinary starch, finely pulverized, is stirred in, and the thick mass obtained is poured out and dried on blotting paper. The powder thus obtained is used just the same as common starch, and so applied to the fabric. When the latter is dry it is slightly sprinkled and pressed with a moderately warm iron. By means of other coloring materials, mixed as above described, any desired tint may be obtained. We should counsel, however, an avoidance of damp localities, and strongly deprecate going out in the rain, as we doubt the "fastness" of the dye, and would not be at all surprised to behold the garment shortly assume a rather streaked and zebra-like appearance.

Postal Regulations—Changes After June 30.

1. Franking privilege abolished.
2. Postmasters supplied with official stamps.
3. Official stamps must not be used except for official business.
4. Stamps of one department cannot be used for the correspondence of another.
5. No matter can pass through the mails free.
6. Postage must be collected on newspapers published in the county where delivered.
7. Exchanges not free. Publishers must pay postage on each exchange received.
8. Postal cards uncalled for are not sent to the dead-letter office.
9. Postal cards cannot be sent a second time.
10. Ordinary cards can be transmitted through mails by affixing a 1-cent stamp, provided the entire message is printed. The address may be printed.

POSTAGE.

Letters.—Three cents for each half ounce, or fraction thereof.

Drop Letters.—Where delivered by carriers two cents for each half ounce, or fraction thereof. At other offices, one cent for each half ounce, or fraction thereof.

Printed Matter.—One cent for each two ounces, or fraction thereof. Seeds, bulbs, cuttings, roots, scions, chromos, and engravings are classed with printed matter.

Merchandise.—Two cents for each two ounces or fraction thereof, limited to twelve ounces. When any of the above matter is mailed wholly unpaid, and, by inadvertence, reaches its destination, double rates should be charged and collected.

A Monster in Crime.

A fearful story is told of the Indian chief and robber of Tepic, Mexico, Lozada, which has but recently been brought before the public, and which, for cruelty, cannot find a parallel. In the small village of San Luis, near Tepic, there has been discovered a subterranean apartment, constructed especially for the prosecution of horrible crimes, and in this was found, not long since, a man who for fourteen years had not seen the light of day. Unshaven, unwashed, almost doubled by feebleness, and withal bereft of sense, when discovered he is said to have had more the appearance of a wild animal than of humanity. From motives of revenge Lozada had him incarcerated in the sepulcher, and formerly would seem to have taken especial pleasure in witnessing the tortures of this unhappy man, visiting him daily for that purpose, taunting him and mocking him in his helpless misery. The wretched man was placed in charge of a physician, who is obliged to use the utmost prudence in bringing him forth from his living tomb to enjoy once more the liberties of life, and, even with the greatest care, it is thought his enfeebled system will not sustain the shock such a change may bring.

Interesting Legal Decision.

An important decision was rendered recently in the Council Bluffs (Iowa) District Court, which will be of interest to the order of Odd Fellows. The case was substantially as follows: Margaret Holloway and R. Holloway, her husband, were members of the Odd Fellows' Protective Association of Council Bluffs. In April last the wife died. One Kipple, of Keokuk, held a judgment against both husband and wife, and garnisheed the Association to which they belonged. The Association made answer that it was indebted to Holloway in the sum of $1,000, but moved to discharge the garnishee on the ground that it was a life insurance company, and, therefore, that it came within the statute exempting policies of life insurance from liability for the debts of the insured. The suit was finally carried up to the District Court, and the Court sustained this view of the case. In the language of the decision, "A wife dying whose life was insured, the creditor of the husband, if the policy was in favor of the husband, could not reach the proceeds of the policy." The case will be carried to the Supreme Court of the State.

A Year Without a Summer.

[illegible] terrible dark year in the earlier part of the present century, which old New England farmers refer to as "eighteen hundred and starved to death." A contributor gives the following information:

While every one is speaking of the present season as being remarkable in its characteristics, I have gathered for your readers some reliable facts of the year 1816, known as "the year without a summer." Few persons now living can recollect it; but it was the coldest ever known throughout Europe and America. The following is a brief abstract of the weather during the year:

January was mild, so much so as to render fires almost needless in parlors. December previous was very cold.

February was not very cold; with the exception of a few days it was mild, like its predecessor.

March was cold and boisterous during the first part of it; the remainder was mild. A great freshet on the Ohio and Kentucky rivers caused great loss of property.

April began warm, but grew colder as the month advanced, and ended in snow and ice, with a temperature more like winter than spring.

May was more remarkable for frowns than smiles. Buds and flowers were frozen, ice formed half an inch thick, corn was killed, and the fields were again and again planted until deemed too late.

June was the coldest ever known in this latitude. Frost, ice and snow were common. Almost every green thing was killed. Fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, seven in Maine and three in Central New York, and also in Massachusetts. Considerable damage was done at New Orleans in consequence of the rapid rise in the river; the suburbs were covered with water, and the roads were passable in boats only.

July was accompanied by frost and ice. On the 5th ice was formed of the thickness of common window glass throughout New England, New York, and some parts of Pennsylvania. Indian corn was nearly all destroyed; some favorably situated fields escaped. This was true of some of the hill farms of Massachusetts.

August was more cheerless, if possible, than the summer months already passed. Ice was formed half an inch thick. Indian corn was so frozen that the greater part was cut down and dried for fodder. Almost every green thing was destroyed, both in this country and Europe. Papers received from England stated that it would be remembered by the present generation that the year 1816 was a year in which there was no summer. Very little corn ripened in New England and the Middle States. Farmers supplied themselves from the corn produced in 1815 for the seed of the spring of 1817. It sold at from $4 to $5 per bushel.

September furnished about two weeks of the mildest weather of the season. Soon after the middle it became very cold and frosty, and ice formed a quarter of an inch thick.

October produced more than its share of cold weather; frost and ice particularly.

November was cold and blustering. Enough snow fell to make good sleighing.

December was quite mild and comfortable.

The above is a brief summary of "the cold summer of 1816," as it was called in order to distinguish it from the cold season. The winter was mild. Frost and ice were common in every month of the year. Very little vegetation matured in the Eastern or Middle States. The sun's rays seemed to be destitute of heat through the summer; all nature seemed to be clad in a sable hue, and men exhibited no little anxiety concerning the future of this life.

The average wholesale price of flour during that year in the Philadelphia market was thirteen dollars per barrel. The average price of wheat in England was ninety-seven shillings per quarter.—Farmers' Cabinet.

To Prevent Hens from Eating Their Eggs.

The Country Gentleman suggests a way to prevent hens from eating their eggs. It is to fill an egg with a solution of pepper, and put the egg back in the nest. A Danbury man has tried this and says it works like a charm. He put a pretty good dose of pepper in the egg, and placed it in the nest of the criminal. Pretty soon the hen came round and took hold. It was a brindle animal, with long legs and somewhat conceited. It dipped in its bill and inhaled the delicacy. Then it came out doors. It didn't gallop, we don't mean, but it came out—came out to look at the scenery, and see if it was going to rain. Its mouth was wide open, and the feathers on the top of its head stood straight up. Then it commenced to go around the yard like a circus horse. Once in a while it would stop and push out one leg in a tone of astonishment, and then holler "fire," and start on again. The other hen came out to look on. Soon the hens from the neighbors came over the fence and took up a position of observation. It was evident the performance was something entirely new and unique to them. There is a good deal of human nature in hens. When they saw this hen dance around and have all the fun to itself and heard it shout "fire," and couldn't see the conflagration themselves, they filled up with wrath, and with one accord sprang upon it, and before the Danbury man could interfere, the brindle hen with the long legs was among the things that were. He says the recipe is effectual.—Danbury News.

A Novel Proposition.—The latest freak of French political eccentricity is a proposition made by the Paris Figaro to divide France into four separate territories, each of which is to have a separate ruler. France proper is to have the Count of Chambord for King, with Versailles as his capital. Aquitane is to be given to the Count of Paris, with Toulouse for his capital. The Duke d'Aumale is to have Burgundy, with his capital at Avignon; and the Prince Imperial Corsica and Algiers, with his capital at Algiers. As this would dispose of all four claimants to the throne, and give each of them a kingdom of his own, there is a good deal of sense in the levity of the Figaro.

Relative Size of Countries and Seas.

The Country Gentleman gave lately the comparative latitude of some prominent places on the globe. It may be well now to furnish some comparative sizes, in round numbers.

The Red Sea would reach from Washington to Colorado, and it is three times as wide as Lake Ontario.

Madagascar is as large as New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina, all put together.

Palestine is one-fourth the size of New York.

Hindostan is more than a hundred times as large as Palestine.

Great Britain is two-thirds the size of Japan, one-twelfth the size of Hindostan, one-twentieth of China, and one twenty-fifth of the United States.

Greece is about the size of Vermont.

The English Channel is nearly as large as Lake Superior, and Lake Huron as large as the sea of Azof.

The Great Desert of Africa has nearly the present dimensions of the United States.

The Caspian Sea would reach from New York to St. Augustine, and is as wide as from New York to Rochester.

The following bodies of water are nearly equal in size: German Ocean, Black Sea, Yellow Sea; Hudson bay is rather lager; the Baltic, Adriatic, Persian Gulf, and Eagean Sea are about as large, and somewhat larger than Lake Superior.

The Mediterranean, if placed across North America, would make sea navigation from San Diego to Baltimore.

The Gulf of Mexico is about ten times as large as Lake Superior, and about as large as the sea of Kamschatka, Bay of Bengal, China Sea, Okothsk Sea, or Japan Sea. Lake Ontario would go into either of them more than fifty times.

Great Britain and Ireland are about as large as New Mexico, but not as large as Nebraska or Iowa. They are less than New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Wisdom of Billings.

Take all the pride out of this world, and mankind would be like a bob-tailed peacock, anxious to hide under somebody's barn.

All fights, tew produce enny moral advantage, should end in victory tew one side or the other. You will alwus see dorgs renew a drawn battle every time they meet.

If a man is full ov himself, don't tap him, but rather plug him up, and let him choke tew death or bust.

I don't think that Fortune has got enny favorites; she was born blind, and I notis them who win the oftenest go it blind too.

It iz a safer thing enny time tew follow a man's advice than his example.

I konsider a weak man more dangerous than a malishious one. Malishous men have sum karacter, but weak ones don't have enny.

I hav notised one thing, that the most virtuous and diskrete folks we have among us are thoze who hav either no pashuns at all, or very tame ones—it is a great deal eazier tew be a good dove than a decent serpent.

It iz a fakt—known to us dokters—that you can katch the small pox of a man before it breaks out easier than you kan after it has broke out. 'Tis thus with wickedness; the openly so are less dangerous than those who have it under the skin.

Gen. Jackson on Railroads.

While Gen. Jackson was President of the United States, from 1829 to 1837, he was accustomed to travel in his private carriage from Washington to his home at the Hermitage in Tennessee. At all the stopping places on the route the people of the vicinity assembled to greet him and hold friendly intercourse with him. In the summer of 1836, while passing through the valley of Virginia, he stopped to pass the night in a small village in Rockbridge county. As was his custom, he had a friendly chat with those who called to see him. Railroads at that day were few, and the public were talking and speculating upon their success and usefulness. General Jackson told his hearers that they would succeed and become very popular, and turning to several young men present, he said: "Young gentlemen, you will live to see the time when these roads will become great monopolies, controlling the State Legislatures, and even Congress itself; in fact, they will be worse than the United States Bank." One of the young men who heard President Jackson make the above prediction thinks he has lived to see all that "Old Hickory" then predicted.—Charlottesville Jeffersonian.

A Little Sum in Arithmetic.

The Hebrew Educational Society School of New Orleans has been the scene of a very rare, if not wholly unexampled, performance in arithmetic. The problem was to multiply 9 by 9, and 81 by 81, and so, using each succeeding product as its own multiplier until the the operation should be performed nine times. How stupendous and discouraging the work becomes after a few steps are taken in the process, any one will find who makes the trial. For several years a handsome premium had been offered the patron of the school just named for the pupil who should first succeed in accomplishing this feat of multiplication. At last the task was completed, and the prize, a splendid silk dress, won by Miss Sallie R. Solomon, sister of Mrs. A. Dalsheimer, after a patient labor of three months. The work comprises 263 numeral compounds and 90,000 figures, and the whole covers four or five square yards of paper. It is deserving of remark, in this connection, that boys have made less progress and shown less perseverance in working at this problem than the girls.

Imitation of Meerschaum.—Most smokers like meerschaum pipes so well that they would also like to have them a little cheaper. Chemistry now undertakes to supply this desideratum, and to make meerschaums out of potatoes "peeled, soaked for about thirty-six hours in water to which eight per cent of sulphuric acid has been added, dried in hot sand for several days on plates of chalk or plaster of Paris, and compressed at the same time. They can then be carved, and will be an excellent imitation of the meerschaum."

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, June 26th, 1873

The cholera is still raging in Nashville and Memphis. The former city reports twenty deaths yesterday, and the latter fifteen. The American type of cholera is almost as severe as the Asiatic.

Horace F. Clark, President of the Lake Shore and Union Pacific Railroads, and son-in-law of Commodore Vanderbilt, died in New York last Thursday, of rheumatism of the heart in the fifty-eighth year of his age.

Why does President Grant keep Gen. Schenck in office as American Minister in London? Did the little Emma people at the right time put a proper quantity of their stock where it would do the most good?

The Indianapolis Journal publishes a brief note from Mayor Medill, in response to a letter of inquiry from the editor of the Journal, stating he didn't know Grant was drunk while in this city. For the benefit of strangers it may be well to state that the mayor is very deaf.—Chicago Times.

At a farmers' club in Missouri, the audience grew wild with applause over the following sentiment from one of its speakers: "Every dollar that is taken from the people's pockets, except for the revenues of the Government, is simply public robbery, and those who assist in it or share its gains are public robbers and should be treated as such."

One more of the motley crew of Indiana Bourbons that couldn't support Greely has found it convenient to drop into a well feathered republican This time it is James Gerry Smith, of Wells county, who had just assumed the editorship of the Bluffton Chronicle the accredited organ of the Grantites and salary grabbers of that county. It is really surprising how easy these intensely democratic chaps find their way into the Republican rank.

A disrespectful journal says that John A. Bingham, the Credit Mobiliereist and back-pay grabbist, has one qualification for the Japanese mission namely, blatherskite. This does injustice to Grant's latest choice. Bingham has other qualifications, and among them is to drink more Bourbon whiskey with out getting absolutely drunk than other citizen, not exceeding Gen. Grant himself. Let us be just to all our foreign ministers.

Mr. Grant seems to be in full sympathy with three eminent ex-rebels—Mosby, Wise and Stephens—and the last appears to have influence over the President which is somewhat remarkable. For some time the President has been wooing the men with fat appointments for ex-confederates, not to mention other velvety propitiations. Mosby has guerrilaed one campaign through for Grant; Wise has decided to support the Administration, and even Stephens is playing fast and loose in a way to show that he is sharp after something. Mr. Grant will soon have all the scalawag ex-rebels on his side to bring up the forces for a third term.

My vote did not make it a law. His signature did it."—Garfield on Grant's connection with the salary steal bill."

We honor Mr. Garfield for saying this. It has the effect to show the people what we have often said, that Gen. Grant could have put his quietus on this whole matter, if he had felt so disposed. Now, when such prominent administration men as Garfield, say "my vote did not make it a law," we think the people will see that we have a man at the head of the government, who is not in sympathy with them and does not show by his acts that he favors a reduction of the taxes. "His signature did it."

The editor of the Northern Indian has recently had a talk with Wm. Williams, our Republican Congressman-at-large, on the salary grab and tells his readers that Mr. Williams "defends his action and his vote on the salary bill; says that it was right in every respect, was just and proper. He is severe in his denunciation of the country press, and says that had it not been for them, no fault would have been found, and the matter forgotten by the people before this time." He further volunteers the emphatic statement that "there is not an editor in his district who is capable of writing a sensible article." It is quite apparent that said editors have sufficient ability to make it quite uncomfortable for the hon. (?) William Williams, and they also have the honesty to work in the interests of the people and expose such arrant knaves as this man Williams.—Argus.

The Hon. William S. Holman comes triumphantly from the back pay ordeal. He clinches a jibe in the Cincinnati Commercial thus pointly:

"I did not, in any proper sense of the word, return the back pay, for I did not, in any shape or form, receive it. I had uniformly opposed the increase of salaries, and especially the back pay feature. I had never at any time received or proposed to receive the back pay, and had long since so informed the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and requested him to have it covered into the Treasury, and a month ago General Spinner informed me by letter this had been done. The citizens of my district were long since informed of my action in regard to this back pay, and I think were generally aware that I had declined to receive it.

This is the way that pillar of loyalty the reverend Harlan, is spoken of by that other friend of the President, Colonel Forney, in the Washington Sunday Chronicle; It is monstrous that after a career stained with infamy and rascality, the ex-preacher who received $10,000 from Dr. Durant, President of the Union Pacific Railroad, to elect him to the Senate, because as Secretary of the Interior he had corruptly served the purpose of that great swindling corporation, should, after his people in Iowa have repudiated him, determine to remain here at the seat of government and use the medium of a newspaper to demoralize our people and render the Government still worse than it is. There appears to be no means of shaking off such political leeches. They cling to the last vestage of power and influence like a drowning man to a straw. Harlan, instead of going to some remote corner of distant Iowa or the lava beds, as he should, to hide the shame of his career and repent of his misdeeds, has the hardihood to buy a newspaper here at the Capitol, and hopes by its means, and button-holing official acquaintances, to be still permitted to gather up crumbs from the table of which he once guzzled so many full meals. Why does he not realize his situation as Oakes Ames and Brooks did, and follow their example? The country is tired of the Credit Mobilier gang, and wants no more to hear from them.

How Secor Robeson Uses the Navy.

The steamer Juniata of the United States navy was recently thoroughbly fitted out at considerable expense and put in to commission to make deep sea sounding. Subsequently her orders for this duty were revoked, the outfit for deep sea sounding was landed, another vessel assigned to perform that service and the Juniata was ordered to be put in readiness to take Senator Conklin and his family on an indefinite cruise Under these orders furniture, china, and linen for the cabin to a considerable amount were purchased and put on board, and the ship was generally put in readiness to receive her distinguished passengers. Now it understood that this cruise has been abandoned though no reason is given for it, and there being no other service required for which the Juniata is suited, she is to be sent off in search of the missing Polaris.

This whole business has a mysterious look. It savors of Secor Robesonism. We remember very well the influential service rendered by Senator Conklin in defending the gross corruptions that have characterized the present adminstration of the Navy Department, and can understand the jolly Secretary's desire to reward his advocate by treating him to an extensive junketing tour at the nation's expense. But we can hardly understand Robeson's stupidity in going so far in making preparations to reward the Senator without first consulting that gentleman on the subject. We might have known that such a Senator would certainly be chary of accepting so publicly and at public expense, a reward for defending official plunderers.

A Fort Wayne correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives the following intelligence respecting the prosecution of work on that Road:

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company are pushing forward their extension of the road between Tiffin and two hundred and fifty miles westward with great vigor, and all the grading of the road is expected to be finished at about the same time Alma, a point on the Dayton & Michigan Railroad, is proposed as the place for the commencement of laying iron, ballasting and iron bridging, which will be done both east and west of that place at one time. Some trouble has been experienced by contractors' men a few miles east of the state line, owing to a misunderstanding regarding the right of way, owners of land driving them off for trespass, claiming no arrangement had yet been agreed upon. This is but a temporary stoppage, and work will be resumed in a day or two.

Coffee.

The great talk is, "Coffee is higher—gone up 5 cents." This is not the case with us. We purchase large lots before the advance, and will continue to sell at old prices. Got 200 bags on hand.

Best Golden Rio 25 cents. Good Rio 22 cents. Best Roasted 27 cents. Old Government Java 28 cents.

Teas.

So with Teas. There has been a great effort to force up prices, but it has not succeeded. We still hold on to our reduction of 15c per lb, and will continue to do so. Our tea trade is the wonder of this part of the country. We now sell as many chests a day as other houses do pounds. Our only secret is we purchase 200 and 300 chests at a time, direct of the importer, and retail it direct to the consumer, thereby savieg the profit of the jobber, speculator and wholesale merchant, which is at least 10 to 15 cents.

Young Hyson 30, 60, 80, $1, best 1 10. Gunpowder 50, 60 best 1 00. Imperial 50, 80, best 1 10. Oolong 40, 60, best 95. Japan 40' 60, best 95. English Breakfast 60, 80, best 95.

Local and Miscellaneous.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Those of our county subscribers who do not want to pay postage on their paper will please let us know. We have a little post office of our own at the Courier office, and those desiring to get their papers there can do so. Our subscribers in town will be supplied by a carier boy.

Prepare for harvest.

Wool is coming in in small lots.

Cherries are begining to color up.

Hamlin's Wizard Oil cures rheumatism.

The foundation for the Shaffer building is completed.

All druggists sell Wizard Oil.

The sprinkling wagon is doing a good work on our streets.

The street sprinkler is again on its rounds doing good service.

Wizard oil sore throat, diphtheria and sore mouth.

It looks a little like rain this Tuesday and how refreshing it would be.

Wizard Oil cures neuralgia, headache, tooth ache and ear ache.

The Auburn Cornet Band have not as yet decided when to have their hop.

Corn and hay is receiving the atten'ion of our farmers.

Wizarl Oil cures lame back, pain in the side or breast instantly.

Potatoes bugs don't seem to be so numerous this year.

Hamlin's Cough Balsam and tooth powder sold by all druggist.

Each member should be present at the club to-night, as a good time is anticipated.

Work on the foundation of the Ensly block has at last commenced.

Go and get some ice-cream. Tomy has some good to-day, and wants to wait on you.

A new time card went into effect on the Saginaw road last monday but we have not received a copy yet.

The bridge east of town is still almost impassible. It is simply a shame to allow it to remain in this condition. Let it be fixed [illegible]

The fellow who voted for his own girl being the best looking, at the festival, wants his half dollar back and says it was a swindle.

Abraham Hartman residing north west of this place, died suddenly last Friday, from what was generally conceded to be the rupture of a blood vessel.

Rain to the north of us, rain to the east of us, rain all around us, but none right in our midst we wait impatiently for a good shower.

Butler and Newvill are making every arrangement for a good time on the 4th. As yet we have not heard of any arrangement at Waterloo except that a race will take place at the Fair Grounds.

The Hamlin Wizard Oil men gave our town a visit last Monda.y They did not speak very flattering of their trade at Waterloo. Their music is splendid, while their oil—let everybody judge for themselves.

The Buckeye Broadaxe favored our people with several interesting lectures. He stated that at Waterloo he was charged a dollar a night for the use of the church We fear our temperance friends, there are becoming indifferent in the cause.

COLLIDED.—A train became detached coming into the Junction last Monday night. The engineer was signaled to stop which he did when the two parts of the train came together with a crash demolishing three flats and four freights in a twinkling. Nobody hurt.

At a game of base ball last Saturday at Ca[illegible] the C[illegible] boys scooped the [illegible] lads, the first getting 12 while our boys were only permitted to get 4. Considering the weather we think they were justified in curbing the ambition of our boys to not run it any longer.

WOOL CARDING.—The carding machines under the management of Mr. Rose in Butler are now in excellent running order, and those having wool to car will make a note of this. The grist mill under the superintendence of that popular miller J. S. Shaffer, is turning out splendid flour, and those having wheat to grind will make a note of this.

Work has commenced on the board fence around the Court Yard, thanks to the liberality of our county dads. This action of the Board was highly necessary in order to protect that beautiful edifice known as the county jail. There will be a harmonious blending of the two, and this is the greatest object to be secured. Of course the Court House is ignored in the effort to beautify the other building

HORSES STOLEN.—Last Friday night two horses with harness were stolen from Mr. Frantz near Waterloo. The thieves then went to the house of J. W. Miser and hitched to his wagon and lit out for Michigan. Gus Lenz and Lieb and several others started in pursuit, and were close on to the fellows when they were arrested near Kalamazoo, by another party. It is expected that pursued and pursuers will here to-day. DeKalb county is getting to be rather hot for horse thieves.

Several of the Rotary Harrows Manufactured at Kendallville were introduced here during the spring, and several of our farmers have tested them with great success. By a simple weight on one side they are forced to revolve as the horses move forward, the beam to which the doubletrees are attached being afasted to the center of the harrow. They grind and pulverize the ground perfectly and are far superior to all others made. D. D Snyder is agent, warerooms on Main street.

Platt McDonald has severed his connection with the Plymouth Democrat and Ed. VanValkenburg now "goes it alone."

This may be all right but we are not exactly satisfied to have Platt McDonald quit a business which he seems to be so well calculated to honor. It does not suit us to see such men shake off the editorial harness for the country needs just such writers. However, we wish Mc a big, fat success, wherever he may go.—The paper is left in good hands and Van will conduct it with ability.—Argus.

PERSONAL.—Dr. E. T. Martin, of Liberty Center, has located in Auburn, Ind., where he and his father will engage in the drug and medicine business. Dr. Martin has been a successful practitioner and is a regular graduate from the Ann Arbor, Mich., College. Both the Dr. and his father have been residents of this county for a number of years until within the last two or three years, and both are honest and reliable business men, well qualified for the business in which they expect to engage. They are both gentlemen deserving public patronage wherever they may go.—Napoleon Northwest.

Warsaw and vicinity has been having a full chapter of accidents:

First a man at a saw mill south of that place was cut nearly in to, and died. Another had a leg mutilated. Next came the death of two men in a well by falling therein. Next occurred the death of a young man by the name of Benham who while on the cars stepped to the side door of the baggage car, and while in the act of handing a letter to some one on the ground, was struck in the back of the head by a post, standing too near the track and instantly killed. The force of the blow knocked him out of the car, and falling under the wheels his legs were crushed by the train.

Our young Democratic Prosecutor, Wm B. McConnell, Esq., is, by his thoroughness and pluck, gaining laurels which the older heads would gladly wear. We are glad indeed of his success, and trust that he may continue to reap until his sheaf is full. In a recent case tried in Noble county in which the prosecution was directed against one Nancy Mains, for keeping and maintaining a nuisance in the city of Kendallville, the Prosecutor appeared alone for the State, and Judge Clapp, F. Pricket and A. A. Chapin for the defendent—all men of ability. The Albion New Era say, in commenting upon the case, that "Not more gallantly did little David 'go for' Goliah of old with his sling than did the youthful prosecutor encounter the three Golliahs in this arena.' Billy won the case for the state, and the defendant was fined five dollars and costs —Angola Times.

Many of our friends think that we have a fat grab in the county printing, but the fact is we get a very small bite. A great deal of the printing for the county is done abroad, a good deal of it at Republican offices. By an arrangement with the Commissioners the Auditor controls this patronage, a custom not usual in our neighboring counties by any means. We have labored faithfully and unceasingly to establish a good paper in this county, but it is not from an excessive amount of patronage from the county that we have been able to do this. We believe that work is given to offices abroad that can be done as well and about as cheap at home. It is usual at other places to stand by the county printer, but in this county it seems to be an exception.—Auburn Courier.

We sympathize with you, Bro. Mays. But, then, you know, there are once in a while some queer people elected to office who are very nice and clever to the 'printer' before the election, but quickly forget those little courtesies after they are once in. In their opinion a 'printer' is useful and valuable only so long as he lends himself to a promotion of their own interests, but when that is done he may look elsewhere for the patronage he had every reason to expect from that source. Take consolation, Tom, in the fact that you do not stand isolated and alone—Ligonier Banner.

There are among us suffering from derangment of the Liver and Bowels. Fever and Ague. Billious Fevers and diseases, arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver To all such we would recommend the use of "Liver Stimulant and Cathartic," which is advertised in our columns. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these disease prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in the place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggist and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph.

Commencement Exercises at Butler.

EDITOR COURIER,

Dear Sir:—Perhaps your readers would be interested in hearing of the closing exercises of our school. Our spring term closed on Friday, June 20th. The afternoon was set apart for general exercises such as singing, speaking, etc., in which the entire school took a part, and did themselves and teachers much credit. At the close short speeches were made by J. A. Campbell, W. H. McIntosh and J. A. Barns. Also some very appropriate farewell remarks by the principal, Mr. James Burrier. All passed off very pleasantly, and it is conceded by all that the present corps of teachers cannot be praised too highly for the good work they have done in brining up the school out of the disorder into which it had fallen. In the evening, the commencement exercises were held in the Lutheran church. A class of three, the first of the school, graduated in the graded school course. The church was crowded at an early hour. Students and teachers having met on the campus, marched to the church. After prayer, followed by music, the Salutatory was delivered by L. W. Knisely. Next were the orations by the graduating class. First by Mr. James Boyle, subject "The Young Man," followed by Mr. Orris Hubbell, subject, "Progress." Speeches were then made by Mr. McIntosh and Mr. Barns, after which the valedictory was delivered by Mr. Sumner Otis. The diplomas were then presented by Mr. Burrier in a very appropriate speech, after which exercises closed. Much interest was manifested by all present, especially in the orations of the young men, which were fine efforts and well delivered. Mr. Burrier has indeed done a good work and is to be rewarded in every proper manner by having his salary raised, and his services engaged for another year.

THE FESTIVAL.

A grand result was achieved last Friday evening, at the Odd Fellows Festival. Nearly $200 was gathered by the liberal donations of our citizens. The entire building was used and then there was a jam. An immense throng of people came to enjoy themselves, and did not go away disappointed. Everything went off so pleasantly that nothing but smiles and good nature prevailed. Not a jar even in the building which was well tried for the first time. A few thought it was not safe, but this night demonstrated that it was as staunch and solid as a rock.

The first floor was used mainly for refreshments a table being placed in the center the entire length of the building, 80 feet. Though an abundant supply of berries, ice-cream, cake, etc., it was thought, had been prepared yet there was nothing left the next morning to tell the tale.

The first and second floors were beautifully decorated with evergreen boughs, flowers, wreaths, mottoes, etc., and presented a picturesque appearance. The second floor contained many attractive features and was the grand promenade of the evening.

Here booths were constructed gaily decorated and made attractive by the amusing manner in which they were conducted. The postoffice, fishing pond, fortune telling and lemonade, together with the handsome bower of cornucopias and vocal music all combined to make up a scene of the most enjoyable character.—The third story was visited by many for a social chat or a promenade and so attractive was it with its clean new floor, that many of our folks insisted on an indulgence the light fantastic, but the Committee objected, and you know these Committees are so arbitrary. The cornet band discoursed sweet music from the balcony and taken all in all, it was an affair the like of which we may never see again. Thanks are due our band for their services, and also to a large number of our citizens who contributed so largely to its success outside of the order. We assure them that their good deeds are highly appreciated by every member.

The handsome cane to be voted to the ugliest man in town was captured by Squire W. Griswold, but we think there was some ballot box stuffing, and that the merits of the case were not considered.

The beautiful bracelet to be voted to the handsomest lady, was carried off by Miss Frank Stahl, and honestly we think. The Squire on the presentation of the cane made one of his most happy speeches, which was loudly applauded.

So interested was everybody that it was nearly twelve o'clock before there was a cessation of festivities.

Notice to Bridge Builders.

The Board of Commissioners of DeKalb county Indiana, will, on Friday the 11th day of July, 1873 at the Auditor's office in said county, receive sealed proposals for the construction of a bridge across the St. Joseph River at Spencerville in said county on either of the following plans: First, for an open bridge 16 feet wide, of two spans of about 85 feet each. Second, for an open bridge 16 feet wide of one span of 170 feet. Third, for a covered bridge of about 170 feet in length.

Said bridge to rest on oak spiles. The Board reserve the right to reject any and all bids offered.

A GOOD HOUSE.—Elsewhere appears the advertisement of the firm of D. H. Baldwin & Co., 158 West 4th street, Cincinnati, Ohio. We take pleasure in calling our readers' attention to this advertisement, as it is one of the most reliable houses in the west, both as to the prompt and honorable manner of doing business, and the quality of instruments kept. The celebrated Decker Brothers Piano is well known to be unequaled for power, purity, sonority and brilliancy of tone, while the Valley Gem has a reputation of which many manufactories might well feel proud The Cincinnati Trade List, a paper devoted to the Manufacturing interests of the west, says: "For quality, clearness of articulation and symetry of action, these Pianos are unexcelled."

The Hamilton Organs possesses a power, sweetness and varity of tone, that make them specially desirable for church parlor or library. The Six Octave Organ having extra range of key board, permitting the playing of piano music, and well adapted to the parlor and are becoming great favorites.

Messrs. Baldwin & Co. furnish us a list of the amounts per month to be paid on the renting plan, which we give below.—It is certainly a good chance to get a good instrument on easy terms, and will no doubt be embraced by many whose limited means prevent them from securing a desirable acquisition to the household.

We hope Messrs Baldwin & Co. will secure a good trade from our county, and assure all who patronize them that they will receive just as good instruments as if present to select them for themselves.

Satisfaction is guaranteed, and aside from this it will be well for purchasers to deal with a house whose long and successful business career is above a guarantee for the integrity of the Instrument. 1

How to Secure a Good Instrument.

The introduction of the renting plan in our own city and vicinity has proved a wonderful success, demonstrating its usefullness in providing families with instruments.

We can refer to hundreds who would have never had an organ or piano in their house but for this plan. It recommends itself to the mechanic, clerk, school teacher, laborer and others who have a stated salary, part of which they can devote to the payment of an instrument. It has also been found convenient to merchants who have all their capital actively employed, and do not wish to draw the full price of instrument from their business at one time. The success of this plan leads us to extend the limits to which the plan has been confined, and we are now prepared to furnish instruments to all who want one, on the best terms we possibly can. For the purpose of giving information we annex some of the usual terms for for an instrument on this plan.

Two Letters that Mean Something.

Markley & Shrader maintain such marked success that many seem to marvel at the sight. Men say Markley & Shrader mean soon to monopolize the sale of merchandise, such as Men's shoes Misses' Shoes, and even Old Maids' shoes Mr. Markley manifestly means to make the merchandise manufactured by their own men meritorious. Sir Shrader stands by his side and says: Since we started our stock has been second to none, and we shall Still Strive to Sell Such Splendid Shoes, etc., that Several Salesmen can Scarcely tend the Sales.

A visit to the handsome store of this enterprising firm, in Keystone Block, will convince our readers that it is one of the most desirable places in our city at which to purchase anything in the line of boots and shoes, for ladies, gents, misses, boys or children. The stock at this time especially, is replete with every thing seasonable and nice. The selection of a choice stock in this line is by no means an easy matter, but Messrs. Markley and Shrader seem to have exhibited rare skill in choosing their goods. We notice many attractive novelties this spring that will be of interest to all who have the good taste to know that a neatly dressed foot is one of the most pleasing of sights.

We can heartily endorse the above as we know it to be a fact. The above firm have a larger stock than any other house in Fort Wayne, and sell at prices defying competition. When you purchase goods there you know they are reliable for that I the character of the house.

MORE CRUEL THAN WAR.

[A correspondent of the Kansas City Times recites a striking poem, of which this is the history: A Southern prisoner of war at Camp Chase, in Ohio, after dying of sickness in the hospital of that station [illegible] fellow-captive, Col. W. S. Hawkins, of Tennessee, that he was heavy [illegible] betrothed bride in Nashville [illegible] just before the arrival of a letter in which the lady curtly broke the engagement. Col. Hawkins had been requested [illegible] any epistle which should come for him, and upon reading the letter in question, [illegible] The lines [illegible] imperfectly [illegible] by the Southern press [illegible] deserve revival, if only for the sake of the corrections requisite to do justice to their sentiment and win for them a wider appreciation :—New York World.]

MY FRIEND.

Your letter, lady, came too late,
For heaven had claimed its own;
Ah, sudden change—from prison bars
Unto the great, white throne!
And yet I think he would have stayed
To live for his disdain,
Could he have read the careless words
Which you have sent in vain.

So full of patience did he wait,
Through many a weary hour,
That o'er his simple soldier-faith
Not even death had power;
And you—did others whisper low
Their homage in your ear,
As though among their shallow throng
His spirit had a peer?

I would that you were by me now,
To draw the sheet aside,
And see how pure that look he wore
The moment when he died.
The sorrow that you gave to him
Had left its weary trace,
As 'twere the shadow of the cross
Upon his pallid face.

"Her love," he said, "could change for me
The winter's cold to spring;"
Ah, trust of fickle maiden's love,
Thou art a bitter thing!
For when these valleys, bright in May,
Once more with blossoms wave,
The northern violets shall blow
Above his humble grave.

Your dole of scanty words had been
But one more pang to bear,
For him who kissed unto the last
Your tress of golden hair.
I did not put it where he said,
For, when the angels come,
I would not have them find the sign
Of falsehood in the tomb.

I've read your letter, and I know
The wiles that you had wrought
To win that noble heart of his,
And gained it—cruel thought!
What lavish wealth men sometimes give
For what is worthless all!
What manly bosoms beat for truth
In folly's falsest thrall!

You shall not pity him, for now
His sorrow has an end;
Yet would that you could stand with me
Beside my fallen friend;
And I forgive you for his sake,
As he—if it be given—
May e'en be pleading grace for you
Before the court of heaven!

To-night the cold winds whistle by,
As I my vigil keep
Within the prison dead-house, where
Few mourners come to weep.
A rude plank coffin holds his form!
Yet death exalts his face,
And I would rather see him thus
Than clasped in your embrace.

To-night your home may shine with lights,
And ring with merry song,
And you be smiling, as your soul
Had done no deadly wrong;
Your hand so fair that none would think
It penned these words of pain;
Your skin so white—would God your heart
Were half as free from stain.

I'd rather be my comrade dead
Than you in life supreme;
For yours the sinner's waking dread,
And his the martyr's dream.
Whom serve we in this life, we serve
In that which is to come;
He chose his way; you yours; let God
Pronounce the fitting doom.

THE CHAINED HOST.

The potato famine in Ireland was no where felt more severely than in that part of the country where the following story is told as a true tale.

In a small village in one of the most barren districts in the west of Ireland, there lived a very poor widow, whose sole inheritance from her husband were two healthy children, girls, of the respective ages of three and five. Painfully and by the utmost effort she had contrived to pass two years of her sorrowful widowhood. Bad and scanty food, obtained only by labor too great for her delicate frame, had at last thrown her upon a sick bed, and death, in pity, removed her in a few days and without great suffering from her earthly troubles. The poverty of the whole parish was so great that nothing could be done for the poor orphans. All the neighbors, with the utmost desire to help, were too famine-stricken, and heard their own children too often cry in vain for bread, to assist others.

"If the children could only be got to Kilburn"—a village some miles south—said one of the neighbors, after the poor mother had been buried, "a brother of their father lives there, and could not possibly refuse to take care of them."

"But matters are as bad there as here," replied another, and "I fear they will be no better off there."

"It cannot possibly be worse than here, for nothing but starvation stares them in the face. If we send them to their relations we have done our duty. We cannot possibly keep them here."

So a carrier, who was going near to Kilburn, as an act of charity, took the two girls—Lizzie was seven now, and Mary was five—in his cart with him. The timid children kept very quiet and close together, and the carrier hardly looked at them. Toward noon they reached the spot where the cart would turn off. The man lifted them out, showed them the road to the left, and bade them go straight forward, and if they did not turn from the high-road they would in about two hours come to the place. He then drove off. The children sobbed out "good-by," and looked after him as long as they could see the last speck of the cart, and then they both began to cry.

Lizzie ceased her crying first; she took hold of her little sister's hand, who had seated herself on the grass, and said: "Get up, Mary, we must not stay here if we wish to get to Kilburn. We cannot stop here on the road."

"I'm so hungry," sobbed Mary. "We have had nothing to eat all day." And again they both began to cry; for Lizzie was equally hungry.

The children were very weak, and could only drag themselves slowly along. Hand in hand they tottered on. At last Lizzie fancied she saw a house, and pointed toward the spot. But it took them more than a quarter of an hour before they reached the farm-house, for such it proved to be. With hesitating steps they entered the yard, for they had never begged before, in spite of their former misery. But at this moment they could think of nothing else than their terrible hunger. When a few steps from the house, they heard the farmer violently scolding one of his men. Then he went into the house, fiercely closed the door after him, so as to make the windows rattle, continuing his abuse all the time. The children, terrified, stood still at the door until the voice ceased. Then Lizzie opened the door and both children entered. The farmer sat in an arm-chair by the [illegible]

"Well, what do you want?" he harshly asked the children, who were too frightened to utter a word and to tell their errand. "Can't you speak?" he asked more roughly.

Lizzie at last took courage, and said gently, "Oh, if you would be so good as to give us the least little bit to eat—a small piece of bread or a few potatoes."

"I thought so," shouted the farmer; "I was sure you were nothing but beggars, although you do not seem to belong to this neighborhood. We have plenty of those here, and we do not want them to come from other parts. We have not bread for ourselves in these hard times. You will get nothing here. Be off, this moment!"

The children, both terribly frightened, began to cry bitterly.

"That will not do you any good," continued the man; "that kind of whining is nothing new to me, and won't move me. Let your parents feed you; but they, no doubt, prefer idling rather than get their living by honest labor."

"Our parents are both dead," said Lizzie.

"I thought so," replied the farmer. "Whenever children are sent out to beg, their father and mother are always dead, or, at least, their father. This is a mere excuse for begging. Be off this minute!"

"We have not eaten a morsel of bread the whole day," pleaded Lizzie. "We are so tired that we cannot move a step. If you would but give us the least bit to eat, we are so hungry."

"I have told you I would not. Beggars get nothing here."

The farmer got up with a threatening look. Lizzie quickly opened the door and drew her sister with her. The children again stood in the farm-yard, but knew not what to do. Suddenly little Mary drew her hand from her sister's clasp and went off to the other side of the yard; there was a fierce dog chained; his dinner stood before him in a wooden basin. Mary put her hand into the basin and began to eat with the dog. Lizzie went nearer, and saw that in the basin there was some liquor in which a few pieces of bread and a few potatoes were floating. She, likewise, could not resist; she had but one feeling—that of the most gnawing hunger; she took some bread and potatoes and ate them greedily.

The dog, not accustomed to such guests, looked at the children full of astonishment; he drew back, and then left them at his dinner, of which he had eaten but very little. At this moment the farmer stepped into the yard; he wished to see whether the children had really left, and then he saw this singular scene. The dog was noted for his fierceness, and feared alike by old and young. He was obliged to be constantly chained, and no one dared to come near him except his master. Even the servant put his food before him in the most cautious manner. In the first moment the man thought of nothing but the fearful danger in which the children were, and walking quickly toward them, he exclaimed:

"Don't you see the dog? He will tear you to pieces!"

But suddenly he stopped as if rooted to the ground; the dog had got up again and gone near the children; then he looked at his master and wagged his tail. It seemed as if he wished to say:

"Don't drive my guests away!"

At that sight a great change came over the man; the spectacle before him acted like an electric shock, and feelings such as he never had before seemed to stir within him.

The children had risen, terrified at the call of the man, fearful of punishment for having eaten, with downcast eyes. At last, after several minute's silence, the farmer said:

"Are you really so fearfully hungry that you do not even despise the dog's food? Come in, then, you shall have something to eat, and as much as you like." And then taking them by the hand he led them into the house, calling out to the servant, "Biddy, get some hot bread and milk, and be quick, for these children."

The dog had shamed his master—the brute had shamed the man. Touched by what he had seen, the farmer was anxious to make amends for what his conscience showed him to be a great sin. He seated the children at the table, sat down by them, and kindly asked their names.

"My name is Lizzie, said the eldest, and my sister is called Mary."

"Have your parents been dead long?"

"Our father has been dead two years, but our mother only died last week."

At the thought of their recent loss both children began to weep.

"Don't cry, children," said the farmer kindly. "God will in one way or another take care of you. But tell me now, where did you come from?"

"From Loughrea, replied the child.

"From Loughrea?" asked the man, "from Loughrea? That is strange!"

He began to suspect the truth, and asked, hesitatingly:

"What was your father's name?"

"Martin Sullivan," replied Lizzie.

"What—Martin—Martin Sullivan?" he exclaimed, jumping up at the same time, and casting a piercing look at the children, thoroughly frightening them.

His face grew red, then tears came into his eyes; at last he sobbed aloud. He took the youngest child into his arms, pressed her to his heart and kissed her. The child struggled and called to her sister for help; she could not think what the man meant. Then he put down the little one and did the same to Lizzie, who took it more quietly, as she had seen that the man did not hurt her sister. At last, becoming more composed, he dried his tears and said:

"Do you know my name, children?"

"No," replied Lizzie.

"How happened it, then, that you have come to me?" he asked. "Has any one sent you to me?"

"Nobody has sent us," replied Lizzie. "We were to go to Kilburn, where a brother of our father lives, and they said he would gladly receive us. But I do not believe it, for our mother always said that he is a hard-hearted man, who does not care for his relations."

"Your mother was quite right when she said so," said the farmer. "But what will you do if this hard-hearted man does not receive you?"

"Then we shall have to starve," answered Lizzie.

"No, no!" exclaimed the man quickly. "Dry your tears. The merciful God has had pity on your helplessness, and has made use of a fierce brute to soften the heart of your uncle, and therefore he will never forsake you—never."

The children looked at the man in utter bewilderment; they did not understand what he said—his words and his behavior were alike strange to them. This he soon perceived, for he added: "You are going to Kilburn to Patrick Sullivan; you are already there! I am your uncle, and now that I know you are the children of my brother Martin, I make you welcome."

The children's tears quickly changed into smiles, and the meal which Biddy just then put on the table for them made them forget their grief. Patrick Sullivan had taken his farm about a year before. A kind Providence had directed the children's steps to him; but if the dog had not taught him a lesson of kindness who knows what might after all have become of the poor orphans. But He who is the Father of the fatherless would surely not have forsaken them.

Capt. Jack in His Own Defense.

In his interview with Gen. Davis, Capt. Jack entered into a long and minute statement of his conduct during the recent troubles, and defended himself from the charge of having killed Gen. Canby, laying the blame all on Allen David, the Chief of the Klamath Indians. Among other things, he said: "Allen David was always pushing me up. The Klamath chiefs said the same. They talked as though Allen David was a big chief. He said we must not think the Klamaths were women. They were not going to lay down their arms to the whites. I had all the trouble, and did all the fighting. He did the looking on, and, though they tried to get me into the scrape, I want you to know why I commenced this war last winter on Lost river. Applegate and Brown came and said the Big Chief was coming to talk, and we must go to the reservation. The soldiers came and surrounded us before day. They held no council. I did not expect that. I was asleep. I told them not to shoot when my boys got their guns. The soldiers fired the first gun. I did not think they wanted to talk. After the soldiers began to fire on my people, some of my boys fired back. I did not. I took my things and ran as fast as I could go away to Old Schonchin's reservation, who said he had nothing to say for himself. He only brought message from Allen David."

As to Gen. Canby's things he had on, he said: "I can't say anything about it. I went away. The boys who killed Gen. Canby got the things. I was there but went off as soon as I found I could not stop them. Jack, on being questioned, said that Bogus Charley and Schack-Nasty Jim killed Gen. Canby. Allen David advised us to kill Canby, so he did it. I am telling the truth. I did not kill him. I had it done, but did not do it.

He added in conclusion: "I don't lie. Bring them in that saw. I want to face them. If I had my chains off I would tell on all the men who did these things."

Schonchin says he did shoot at Meacham, but all the Modocs knew he was a poor shot, and could not hit anything.

Jack's answers are of course a tissues of lies, but many agree that Old Schonchin from the reservation was the messenger, and took the money given him by Capt. Jack to charge Allen David, Klamath Chief, with urging them to make war and kill Canby.

The Conqueror of the Apaches—Something of His History.

Maj. Gen. George Crook was born near Dayton, Ohio, graduated at West Point in the class with Sheridan, Lieut. Derby ("John Phœnix") and other notables. Crook was sent direct from West Point to the Pitt River and Modoc Indian country in 1851. Instead of idling away his time on dress-parade tactics, he set about learning the haunts and habits of the savages, and fighting them on every occasion, frequently whipping them by the hundreds with his half company, armed with old-fashioned weapons. He would do his own scouting on foot, and often alone.

He is one of the best shots with a rifle in the world; is very fond of hunting, fishing, and all out-door exercise; is personally as brave as any man can be, yet cool under excitement. In his battles with Indians he will take as full a hand almost invariably as any soldier he may direct, and has made many an Indian bite the dust. He fought in the different Indian wars of the Northwest, until the rebellion, when, through more than a hundred battles, he worked his way up to a Major-Generalship. After the great war he was singled out by Grant to conduct the war against the savages of Southern Idaho and Oregon and Northern Nevada and California. He concluded a peace round that great circle after the manner of his late arrangement in Arizona.

Crook will capture a "hostile," and, with the offer of good food, clothes, guns, horses, etc., in addition to authority, will buy him into turning against his own household. His heart is in the right place—a man disposed by nature to do exact justice, regardless of race or condition. He is tender-hearted as a child, as fond of fun, and in every way the life of the camp. He likes to have young, lively, witty men around him, and generally arranges his staff accordingly.

Physically he is as tough as a mule, and can wear out half the young men of twenty-five. Crook is scarcely forty-five years of age; married, but has no children. His wife keeps on his trail pretty closely. In complexion, Crook is light-haired—almost white; nose and mouth indicating strength of character, purpose, etc.—Denver News.

THE Mayor of San Francisco has vetoed the celebrated "pig-tail ordinance," recently passed by the Board of Supervisors, requiring the heads of the Chinese prisoners in the county jail to be shaved. The ordinance was vetoed on the ground that the punishment was infamous, as it made unjust distinctions; also on the ground that it was contrary to the treaty with China, and to the laws of the United States.

How the Russian Empress Travels.

In the matter of "putting on style" the royal family of Russia outshines any royal family in the world. The Empress, or Czarina, has for some time been sojourning at Naples. A foreign paper gives the following account of the way she traveled thither from St. Petersburg: The train consisted of fifteen carriages, eight of which form a suit of apartments. The imperial family occupied three of them as bed-rooms, another served for the suit, and three more for the store-rooms and servants' rooms. The saloon carriage is splendid, all lined with crimson satin, and painted outside with the Russian arms. The imperial carriages are connected by means of air-tight passages, and the springs are formed of steel and India rubber, so as to render all shocks insensible. The temperature of each carriage can be regulated by touching pegs communicating with a calorific apparatus. In the grand saloon there is combined the furniture of a drawing-room and a dining-room, besides six work-tables, one for the Empress, one for her daughter, and the other four for her ladies of honor. Two locomotives draw the train, and a third machine sends heated tubes to the carriages. In the matter of sending letters the Empress does not correspond with the Emperor by the postoffice. A service of couriers has been established between Sorrento and St. Petersburg, composed of eighteen persons, who are continually en route between the two places. The immediate friends of her Majesty write to Russia like other people, that is to say, through the oblging and economic medium of the Commander Barbavara. But no letter of the Czarina is ever thrown into the box, or sent to the Russian Legation; every time the Empress writes, as she does nearly every day, a courier starts with a packet, which he is instructed to deliver into the hands of the Czar himself.

A New Kind of Evidence.

"Through the looking glass" is, says the Hour, a delightful world of fancy, where vice versa reigns supreme, to which both young and old have some time been introduced, but it is not at first sight a promising source of evidence upon which to convict a thief. Such, however, seems to have been the case at the Devon session last week, when Alfred Mayne was put on trial for embezzling some £30 from a well-known firm of florists near Exeter. The prisoner was employed by them to receive money from their customers, and he received the sum in question in payment of an account for it. He was supplied with forms of receipts having counterfoils, and the receipt in his hand-writing was produced in court, but no counterfoil to correspond was discoverable in the book. At the back, however, of the counterfoil of the receipt, which would come next in date, appeared certain letters, which were evidently produced by the counterfoil which had been next to it, pressing upon it when wet with ink. It was suggested that these letters formed the name of the clergyman to whom the receipt was given. The chairman of the bench, Sir Stafford Northcote, ordered a looking glass to be brought into court, and, surely enough, when the writing was held up to the glass the name was clearly legible, by the same process as that employed by Alice to read the story of the "Jabberwock." The looking glass was then handed round to the jury. The foreman of the jury, we are told, being naturally rather puzzled at this new instrument for the detection of crime, made some ineffectual attempts to carry the invention into effect, by presenting the back of the book to the glass, and then gazing intently at the book itself; but finally, he and his fellows were convinced that the impression reproduced the name required, so that the prisoner was convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment, with hard labor.

The Rothschilds.

The rise of the great house of Rothschild belongs to the eighteenth century. Meyer Anselm, a Jew, was born in 1743, and was established as a money-lender, etc., in Frankfort, in 1772. From his poor shop, bearing the sign of the red shield, he acquired the name Rothschild. He found a good friend in William Landgrave, of Hesse; and when the Landgrave, in 1806, had to flee from Napoleon, he intrusted the banker with about £250,000 to take care of. The careful Jew traded with this; so that, in 1812, when he died, he left about a million sterling to six sons, Anselm, Solomon, Nathan, Meyer, Charles and James. Knowing the truth of the old motto, "Union is strength," he charged his sons that they should conduct their financial operations together. The third son, Nathan, was the cleverest of the family, and had settled in England, coming to Manchester in 1797, and London in 1803. Twelve years after we see him at Waterloo, watching the battle, and posting to England as soon as he knew the issue, and spreading everywhere the defeat of the English. The clever but unscrupulous speculator thus depressed the funds, and his agents were enabled to buy at a cheap rate; and it is said that he made a million by this transaction. He died in 1836; but the real amount of his wealth never transpired. It has been said: "Nothing seems too gigantic for his grasp, nothing too minute for his notice. His mind was as capable of contracting a loan for millions as of calculating the lowest possible amount on which a clerk could exist."

The Polaris Expedition.

Prof. Baird, of the Smithsonian Institute, who has been aiding in the examination of the Polaris survivors, expresses the opinion that the results to science already secured fully justify the expedition, even if the records of the Polaris have not been preserved. The advances in geographical knowledge and other questions of interest pertaining to arctic matters are far more valuable than those of the other expeditions which have been exulted over as remarkable successes. Esquimaux Joe has brought back the official records made by Capt. Hall of his sledge journey, and though Mr. Myer's papers were lost, he is able from memoranda to construct a correct map of the new discoveries. The story that Hall was poisoned, and that Buddington purposely abandoned the party on the ice, are both utterly discredited, and are sensational.

Profanity.

The Danbury News man, who is traveling, thus describes a profane scene at a Mississippi landing: All was bustle at the dock when I got there. The boat was taking on its freight, and about 30 lively negroes and one very excited and awfully profane white man were doing the business. The white man was a study. He was the mate of the vessel, and what he didn't know about rhetoric could be held on the point of a knife-blade by a nervous man. The thirty negroes had all they could well attend to to keep up with his new oaths and roll on the casks. Without cessation they bobbed from the boat to the shore, and from the shore back to the boat, and all the while that Mississippi elocutionist danced around and swore. When I got on the boat I sat down on my baggage and watched that man. Being a resident of New England I thought I knew something of wickedness, but I was mistaken. The negroes were uniformly dressed in pants, shirt and hat. Some of the hats were ornamented with different colored ribbons; others again contained but a simple brass plate—the trade-mark of a retired fruit can. Beauty unadorned is adorned the most. They were driven like sheep, first to the shore, then back to the boat. The least hesitation, the slightest misstep, was noted by the orator and promptly incorporated into his discourse. He couldn't have been more familiar were they his own fathers, which it is not likely they were. After getting through at the dock the boat moved up to the coal yard. The coal was brought on in boxes with handles at each end. Each box contained two and a half bushels, and was carried by two men. Six hundred bushels were thus taken on. The same amount of bustle and vehemence occurred in this transaction. The men sweat like April, and appeared to be ready to drop at every trip, but the mate hurled tonics at them and kept them up. When his throat got tired he used his boot, and used it in that whole-soled way peculiar to the Mississippi boatmen. The negroes receive $1 a day and their victuals. I should think they would go to some city and get into a store.

Beauty of Chinese Bridges.

Some of the bridges in China are of extraordinary beauty and magnificence. There is one near Pekin built entirely of white marble, elaborately ornamented. Others are found over the canals of still greater magnificence and with a grand triumphal arch at each end; and some, instead of being built with arches, are flat from one side of the canal to the other, marble flags of great length being laid on piers so narrow and airy that the bridge looks as if it were suspended in the air. From the amazing facilities afforded by the numerous canals for transportation of goods by water, these bridges do not require to be built of great strength, for only foot passengers use them, which is the reason they are of such an elegant and fanciful construction. These bridges are built with a number of arches, the central arch being about forty feet wide, and high enough for vessels to pass without striking their masts. The great elevation of these bridges renders steps necessary. They resemble, in this respect, the old bridges of Venice, on which you ascend by steps on one side, and descend on the other in the same way. Chain bridges were not made in this country for more than eighteen centuries after they were known in China.

Go West

The Cincinnati Gazette prints a tabular and practical statement showing the advantages of living, so far as cheapness is concerned, in the West instead of the East, which will commend itself to the careful attention of mechanics and laboring men generally. One or two instances will suffice: In Cincinnati, last month, beef, rib roast, per pound, was 12½@15c.; sirloin steak, 15@20c.; corned beef, 9@10c. At Boston the prices of the same articles were as follows; Beef, roast rib, 18@25c.; sirloin steak, 28@33c.; corned beef, 7@12c., and other articles in proportion. In the matter of clothing there is a slight advantage in favor of the East. All things considered, wages being higher, and the demand for labor greater, the advantages of the West to men of moderate means cannot be overestimated.

A $10,000 Cow.

It has often been said that cows, especially milch cows, never sell for as much as they are really worth, but A. J. Alexander, of Woodburn, Woodford county, sold on Thursday, the 29th of May, a two-year-old heifer, known as "The Duchess of Airdrie XV.," to go to England, for $10,000, which may be regarded as a sum not very far below her real value. She is said to be "a beautiful specimen of a beautiful race," and it appears that the English breeders, having heretofore parted with all their finest cattle, are now determined to have some of them back at any price.—*Frankfort (Ky.) A DOMESTIC VIEW OF SMOKING.—A lady writes to the New York Herald: "I happen to be the wife of an inveterate smoker, and do boldly avow that I love the perfume of his cigar better than all the perfumes of Arabia. I think there is nothing more delightful, and I am never more happy than when my husband is by my side, with slippers on, and a fragrant Havana between his lips—a picture of home comfort which many a poor married man has never seen, who is driven from home by a cross, selfish wife, who would rather send her husband to the 'club,' or worse places, so as to be rid of his after-dinner smoke."

A TOUGH YARN.—We do our very best to believe all the queer stories that we find, for we could not conscientiously present them to our readers unless we believed them to be true, but here is one that, we caution the public, seems to us a little doubtful. We will not say it is a lie, but it is improbable. A horse in St. Paul, Minn., drank beer till he was in a beastly state of intoxication. His owner, knowing that his previous habits were exemplary, thought he was dead, and skinned him. Next morning a ghastly steed, without hide or hair, was found grazing on the public common, and a skillful veterinary surgeon is engaged in planting his superficies with hair from a neighboring tannery.

A Strange Story from Rome.

The New York Graphic publishes an extract from a private letter, dated Rome, May 15, which tells a rumor, prevalent in that city, that Pius IX. died some days previous, and that his place is filled by an old and astute priest name Abbate Minati. His story goes that when the news of the Pope's fatal illness was published, cardinals hastened to the Vatican to take counsel together upon the condition of affairs. They found the situation an exceedingly critical one for the Church. It seemed to them that nothing could have been more inopportune than the death of the Pope, and the election of his successor at this moment. They determined upon a stroke of the most daring and astonishing character. There was a priest of the order of Benedictines, Abbate Minati, who bore a striking resemblance to Pius IX. Accordingly, they determined that Father Minati, in the event of the Pope's death, should enact the part of Peter's successor. The Pope died, but instead of their announcing this fact to the people by bulletins from the Vatican, they began to inform the outside world that the Holy Father was getting better, and finally that he was quite well again, the fact being that the remains of Pius IX. were hidden away in some of the secret recesses of the Vatican cellars, and that Abbate Minati quietly stepped into his place. To-day the Head of the Church is, in plain terms, a dummy, wearing the form and keeping up the traditions of Pius IX., even to the extent of taking a pinch of snuff during mass, which the amiable old man, now dead, always did. Of course great care will be taken that this pontiff exercises none of the functions of real infallibility. He will receive deputations, smile affably, utter compliments in Latin, take a walk now and then in the Vatican gardens, and perform such of the sacred ceremonies as are indispensable, but anything beyond that he will not do. We shall not have any more bulls, fulminations, definitions, enclyclicals, or syllabuses, for the present.

How a Horse Reasons.

A correspondent of Our Dumb Animals writes: "For the last two years I have driven my mare nearly every day over the same road. About one mile from my house are two roads—one leading to the church, the other leading to the depot. Now six days in the week I drive to the cars, and on Sunday to church. At the point where the roads separate I give my mare her head, leaving her free to make her choice; and on week days she will go straight to the depot; on Sunday she goes, of her own free will, to the church. I never knew her to fail me yet. It puzzled me for a long time to learn how she should know any difference in days; and I have come to the conclusion that she reasons by facts—facts connected with every-day life. On weeks days I start from my stable in a two-wheel carriage; on Sundays I start from my house in a carry-all, thus making an entire change both in time, place and carriage; and from these facts she must be guided in her choice of roads.

Five Steps.

A man had committed murder, was tried, found guilty, and condemned to be hanged. A few days before his execution he drew upon the walls of his prison a gallows, with five steps leading up to it.

On the first step he wrote, "Disobedience to parents."

On the second step, "Sabbath-breaking."

On the third step, "Gambling and drunkenness."

On the fourth step, "Murder."

The fifth step was the platform on which the gallows stood.

This poor fellow doubtless wrote the history of many a wasted and lost life.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Sawdust for Stables.

A correspondent of the London Field says: I litter the horses on it to a depth of nine inches, raking off the damp and soiled surface every morning, and spreading evenly a little fresh, removing the whole four or five times a year. Its advantages appear to be many, of which I will state a few which give it, in my estimation, its greatest superiority over straw. It is much cleaner, and more easily arranged, and, of course, much cheaper at first cost, making, in the end, excellent manure. It is peculiarly beneficial to the feet, affording them a cool, porous stuffing, a substitute for the soil of the earth we always find in the hoofs of a horse at grass, and presents the nearest resemblance to a horse's natural footing, the earth. We never had a diseased foot since the introduction of sawdust in the stable, now some years since. Horses bedded in sawdust are freer from dust and stains than when in ordinary litter, simply because sawdust is a better absorbent, perhaps, and testify their approval of it by frequently lying down for hours in the day. It has also the recommendation of being uneatable, an advantage which all in charge of horses with the habit of eating their litter will admit.

Bark Lice.

It is very easy to destroy bark lice. The little oyster-like scal was last year the living insect—a white louse so small as to be almostmicroscopic, with just enough vitality to move a little from its parent nest, and there fix itself, growing eight or ten times larger, by means of a viscous fluid exuding from its body, and finally hardening into the scale now covering from one to two dozen eggs, looking like white dust. A little watching, with the aid of a pocket magnifier, which every farmer ought to own and carry with him, will enable the observer to tell when they are hatched out and moving, which is about tne 20th of June. At any time after this, and before they are fixed to the bark, or are too much grown and hardened, nothing more expensive than soap suds from a Monday's washing is needed for their complete destruction. In my own experience, one thorough washing with soft-soap suds has always sufficed to kill them all, and restore a tree to vigor.

Plowing Out Potatoes.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman writes: In the absence of a good potato digger, the idea of plowing them out is not a bad one. I have tried it with good success. Where land is passably clean, and the potatoes lie in the center of the hill, like the Early Rose, Peerless and Excelsior, take a common double moldboard shovel plow. hitch on two horses and plow out every other row. Have the potatoes picked up, and plow the alternate rows. When they are all plowed out, and those that can be seen picked up, run over the ground with a common harrow (Thomas' Smoothing harrow would undoubtedly be much better), and the potatoes will be out as clean as though dug by hand, and in less than half the time the same help would do the work by hand digging. In two pieces where I dug them in that way, I think there were less potatoes left in the ground than would be left by hand diggers. The first piece I dug in this manner I plowed immediately for rye, and I was surprised to find so few potatoes left.

Oats as a Manure.

A Kentucky farmer writes: I have seen frequent inquiries how to reclaim old and worn lands. A quick and cheap plan is to sow the land in oats as early as you can in the spring; as soon as ripe, plow under, keep off the stock, and you will have a tremendous fall growth of oats. Plow them under in October, or, if South, the first of November, then sow rye, graze in the spring and feed down; when ripe plow under, and you will see one of the finest rye fields you ever saw; or, if you wish, sow clover on the rye the first spring; it is very effectual and cheap. I saw the above tried in Tennessee when I was a boy; the land was so worn that the oats did not exceed knee-high; they were plowed under when ripe, and again in November. The land was planted in corn the next year and made a large yield; it was before the days of clover. I have tried it repeatedly since with good success.

Potato Experiment.

James Welles, of Chicopee, Mass., plowed deep and harrowed a piece of green sward, designed for a garden; dug deep holes three feet apart each way, put sods in the bottom, grass side down, and on them cow stable manure, about two quarts in each hill; cover this lightly with soil; cut one bushel of Early Rose potatoes so as to have but one in a piece, and put two pieces in a hill, six to twelve inches apart. The ground was kept free from weeds, and the hills made high and large. The product was 51 bushels of potatoes, 48 of which were of suitable size for the table. The ground measured 4,380 square feet, or a fraction less than one-tenth of an acre; and therefore the crop was at the rate of over 500 bushels to the acre.

Corns and Bunions.

Burn with caustic, after bathing; repeat if necessary. Another remedy: Apply the pulp of lemon until the hard pulp can be removed. Cotton greased with linseed oil of turpentine is very good, as it softens the corn.

Value of Lime.

A writer in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society describing the permanence of the action of lime, says he knows a piece of land containing 166 acres which formerly grew nothing but heath. A good dressing of lime was applied on the surface of the sward which has nearly doubled its value. This was several years ago, and totally eradicated the heath. The lime this day appears in full condition, as its effects usually testify, from the richness and sweetness of the herbage, the texture of which has been entirely changed by the application of lime.

Care of Horses.

All horses must not be fed in the same proportions, without having regard to their ages, their constitutions, and their work; the impropriety of such a practice is self-evident. Yet it is constantly done, and is the basis of disease of every kind.

Never use bad hay on account of its cheapness, because there is no proper nourishment in it.

Damaged corn is exceedingly injurious, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases.

How to Prevent Rust.

Melt with a pound of fresh lard three ounces of rosin, and cover iron and steel utensils with this mixture, and they cannot oxidize. This is good for stoves that are put away during the summer.

Does the Clearing of Land Diminish the Rainfall?

Prof. Daniel Draper, Director of the Central Park Meteorological Observatory, takes occasion, in his annual report, to correct a false impression very generally entertained by the public—that the clearing of land diminishes the fall of rain. Comparing the reports of rainfalls from the year 1835 to 1872, it appears that, while during this period the average rainfull was 47.62 inches, the average for the last three years of this period was 47.06 inches. The results appear fully to justify Prof. Draper's conclusion that "the wide-spread public impression that the clearing of land diminishes the volume of rain is not founded on fact." He adds, furthermore, that, although in the last thirty-six years great changes have been made in all those portions of the United States intervening between the Mississippi and the Atlantic Ocean, large surfaces having been cleared of forests, and their physical aspect essentially altered, no corresponding diminution in the mean amount of water that has fallen can be traced. This opinion seems also in accord with that of European meteorologists, who assert that the mean rainfall on the western portion of that continent varies little, if at all, when periods of many years are considered. These opinions seem deserving of especial consideration, owing to the fact that the records upon which they are based extend back to the year 1677, in England; 1741 in Scotland; and 1791 in Ireland; while in Paris the annual rainfall was not found to have altered in one hundred and thirty years.

Just Taken his Bitters.—We heard a seedy-looking individual with an alarmingly red nose remark to a brother soaker that he had "just had his bitters, but he did not mind taking another nip." His remark suggested a train of reflection. How was it, we asked ourselves, that the word "bitters" had grown to be a synonym for gin, whisky, rum, and other alcoholic stimulants, to which it was applied indiscriminately. Bitters, we reasoned, suggested the idea of a healthful tonic, not of a poisonous stimulant; something invigorating to the system, not an alcoholic irritant, full of fusel oil, producing present intoxication and ultimate insanity, idiocy, or premature death. Moreover, our idea of bitters was totally irreconcilable with "gin cocktails," "rum punches," and "brandy smashes," which, we are informed, are sweetened with sugar, and rendered doubly injurious with essences colored by means of mineral poison. This was bitter-sweet with a vengeance. We mentioned this problem to a friend. He solved it by exclaiming: "Why, don't you know that most of these bitters advertised as remedies are only dramc in disguise. Topers know it, if you do not. I must make one exception, however," he added, "and that's Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters; there isn't a particle of alcohol or fermented liquor in it, and it is the best vegetable tonic and alterative in America."—[Com.

The press everywhere clamors for Life Insurance at low rates. The National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America offers it at three-fourths the rates of Mutual companies. It guarantees their sufficiency by their million dollars capital, and has two dollars assets for every dollar of liability. It wants an agent in every locality not now supplied, and will give liberal commissions for reliable service. E. A. Rollins is President, and Jay Cooke is Chairman of the Finance Committee. Persons seeking insurance or employment cannot do better than to write to the Branch Office of the Company at Philadelphia.—[Com.

It frequently happens that a farm will not divide well among children; there is trouble in making an equitable distribution of the property. In such instances it is well to consider the subject of life insurance. For a small sum paid annually, a large amount of ready money may be left to the widow or daughter at the period of one's death; and they will be just as independent as the sons who divide and keep the farm. This suggestion is well worth heeding by thousands who are interested, and we commend them to the old New York Life Insurance Co., at 346 and 348 Broadway, New York. Full particulars mailed free on application.—[Com.

Prof. Anderson's Dermador Good for Man.—My son was taken with a swelling on his leg, just above the ankle joint. I paid our family physician $20 for attending to it, with no benefit. Some time after I was advised by a friend to use "Anderson's Dermador." I used one bottle on the swelling and effected a permanent cure.

There is scarcely any disease in which purgative medicines are not more or less required, and much sickness and suffering might be prevented were they more generally used. No person can feel well while a costive habit of body prevails; besides, it soon generates serious and often fatal diseases, which might have been avoided by a timely and judicious use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, or Tasteless, Coated, Concentrated Root and Herbal Juice, Anti-Bilious Granules—25 cents by Druggists. 644

Summer Dangers.

The summer sunshine that clothes the earth with luxuriant vegetation evaporates a vast amount of crude, unwholesome moisture from its surface, which, mingling with the air in the form of mephitic gases, produces a variety of febrile and other diseases. The body being debilitated by the warmth of the season, and the pores being wide open, gaping as it were for the seeds of sickness, any infectious principle that may exist in the atmosphere is readily received into the system, when it bears baneful fruit in the shape o malarious fever, biliousness, diarrhea, dysentery, colic, sickness at the stomach, headache, or nervous prostration. In order to prevent these visitations, put the system in a condition to resist all morbid influences. Brace the inner man with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest invigorant and the most invincible antagonist of all causes of disease, whether present in the air we breathe the water we drink, or connected with our manna of life or the nature of our pursuits, that science has yet given to the world. The experience o twenty-five years has taught an observant people that this unexceptional and agreeable tonic and alterative possesses preventive and remedial virtues that are shared by no other medicine of the present age. It has taught them also that while it is infinitely more efficient than any of the poisonous alkaloids prescribed as tonics, it is absolutely and entirely harmless.

A REMARKABLE PROGRESS.

[From the Hartford Daily Times.]

We have already alluded to the prosperous condition of the Phœnix Life Insurance Company, located in this city, of which Edson Fessenden is the President and James F. Burns Secretary. A more careful investigation of its last annual statement, just published, warrants us in submitting to the readers of the Times some further remarks upon its rapid progress to popular favor and its remarkably prosperous condition at the present time.

Let us compare its condition ten years ago with what it is at the present time. In the years 1862 and 1863 it issued 1,717 policies; its income was $125,672; dividends, $1,244; losses by death, $56,600; assets, $437,933. Here was the business of two years.

In 1872 it issued 10,527 policies; its income was $3,413,752.45; dividends, $943,441.71; losses by death, $831,116.32; net assets, $8,209,325.07.

This increase of business and assets in the short period of ten years is worthy of special notice. An income in 1872 of near $3,500,000 against $125,672 in 1862 and 1863; it is near thirty to one. Over ten thousand policies last year against seventeen hundred in two years, only ten years ago. Its net assets amount to over eight millions now; then less than half a million—more than sixteen to one. This wonderful increase is not the result of a single jump. It comes of regular yearly advances; showing the solidity and permanency of this signal prosperity. For instance, the net assets of the company at the opening of the year 1872 amounted to $7,510,614.05; at the commencement of 1873 they were $8,207,325.07—an increase during the year 1872 of $696,611.02.

The Phœnix has now 33,020 policies in force, covering $71,910,267. Valued by the New York standard these policies are worth $6,776,117, and other liabilities carry its obligations up to $7,009,493.57. Deducting this from the net assets and the company has a surplus of $1,199,831.50.

The officers lay these facts before the public with the assurance that they cannot be equaled in comparative strength by the statement of any company in New England, if, indeed, by any in the country, though a few others have a larger aggregate of assets. No company in this city equaled it last year in the number of policies issued. Only one came within 2,000 of it, and the others were from 5,000 to 9,000 below it.

In this sterling condition of its finances, in its great and increasing prosperity, and in the firm hold it has upon public confidence, the Phœnix may, with a due degree of pride and satisfaction, publish the details of its business and its solid condition.

Chills and Fever can only be cured by a removal of the cause. Shallenberger's Pills do this instantly, and vigorous health is sure to follow.

Headache, Languor and Melancholly generally spring from a Disordered Stomach, Costiveness, or a Torpid Liver. Each may be readily removed by Dr. D. Jayne's Sanative Pills, a few doses of which will be found to stimulate the Liver and Stomach to healthy action, removing all Biliousness, and producing regular evacuations of the bowels.

EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Neuralgia, Rheumatism,
Cold Chills, Ague Chills.
The application of the READY RELIEF to the part or parts where the pain or difficulty exists will afford ease and comfort.
Twenty drops in half a tumbler of water will in a few moments cure Cramps, Spasms, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Colic, Wind in the Bowels, and all Internal Pains.
Travelers should always carry a bottle of RADWAY'S READY RELIEF with them. A few drops in water will prevent sickness or pains from change of water. It is better than French Brandy or Bitters as a stimulant.
FEVER AND AGUE.
FEVER AND AGUE cured for fifty cents. There is not a remedial agent in this world that will cure Fever and Ague, and all other Malarious, Bilious, Scarlet, Typhoid, Yellow, and other Fevers (aided by RADWAY'S PILLS) so quick as RADWAY'S READY RELIEF.
Fifty Cents per Bottle.

HEALTH. BEAUTY.
STRONG AND PURE RICH BLOOD—INCREASE OF FLESH AND WEIGHT—CLEAR SKIN AND BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION SECURED TO ALL.
DR. RADWAY'S
SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT
Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.
Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.
If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.
Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for Kidney and Bladder Complaints,
Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.
Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by RADWAY'S RESOLVENT.
PRICE $1.00 PER BOTTLE.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.
WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil
Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.
Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.
Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.
Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by Babes in the Woods—A Wonderful Escape.

From the New York Sun.

During one of of the warm afternoons of the first part of last weak, three little children of Mr. John Foley living near Hillsdale Columbia county, went into the field to play. They were bareheaded and barefooted. An hour or so afterwards their mother went out to look for them, but they were no where to be found. She searched about in the fields and woods calling them, but got no tidings of them. Becoming alarmed, as it was growing dark, Mrs. Foley took the dinner horn and sounded it a long time at different points in hope that her children might hear it, and be guided home by the sound. The horn had the effect of summoning the neighbors to the Foley farm, but nothing was heard of the children. The parents were now nearly frantic.

The section in which they live is a wild one, and infested by beasts of prey. Only last week Mr. Charles Jones, of Hillsdale, while passing through the woods near Foley's, was attacked by a large, hungry wildcat, with which he had a severe struggle. In the latter part of the winter a large she bear and two cubs were killed not far from the same spot. The parents of the Foley children, failing to get any trace of them, feared that they had wandered into the woods and fallen a prey to some of these animals. It was now dark, and began to rain. A party of farmes were organized to scour the woods in search of the lost children. They went in different directions, bearing lanterns, and calling the chilrden loudiy by name. The oldest one was a little child six years of age, and the youngest a mere babe. The rain fell in torrents but the search was kept up all night. Not the slightest trace of the little ones was found, although the country had been scoured for miles.

The scoutings parties retured to the parents early in the morning with the sad news. The belief that the children had been destroyed by wildcats was now general, and great excitement prevailed. The news spread to the village, and business was almost entirely suspended.

In the afternoon a boy named Ingersoll came running to Foley's and said that he had either heard children crying or the cry of a wildcat, about a mile in the woods, where he was looking for a cow.

Mr. and Mrs. Foley and some others started at once for the spot, guided by young Ingersoll. They come upon the children lying at the foot of a tree covered with leaves and drenched with rain. They were crying when they saw their father and mother they were almost wild with joy. The meeting between them and their parents was most affecting. The children were carried back to the house, and the rejoicing was immense.

The oldest child said she heard the dinner horn and the hallooing of the hunters, but was afraid to steal away. She answered the call but was not heard. The youngest childcried itself to sleep and slept all night, lying between the others.

Rotation of Crops.

An old French aggiculturist gave the folowing seven rules as the fundamental principle of rotation:

1. However well a soil may be prepared, it cannot long nourish crops of the same kind in succession without becoming exhauted.

1. Every crop impoverishes a soil more or less, according as more or less is restored to the soil by the plant culivated.

3. Perpendiculer rooting plants, and such as root horizontally ought to succeen each other.

4. Plants of the same kind should not return too frequently in rotation.

5. The plants favorable to the growth of weeds outh not to succeed each other.

6. Such plants as eminenlly exhaust the soil, as the grains and oil plants, should only be sown when the land is in good heart.

7. In proportion as a soil, is found to exhaust itself by successive crops, plants which are least exhausting ought to be cultivated.

Samuel J. Randall, a Democratie politician of Pennsylvania, and a back salary grabber of the last Congress, has issued an address to his constituent defending his vote to the retractive salary bill. Mr. Randall will find the salary grab retractive in more senses than one, and will prove just the club that is to lay out all Congressmen who voted for the bill and pocketed the "swag."

The massacre of captured Modocs by Oregon volunteers was an inhuman butchery that would put to blush Capt. Jack himself. The governmet should investigate the matter, and meet out just punishment to the perpearators of this horrible deed.

The Bowen-Beecher-Tiltyn business promises to furnish scandal enough for the whole summer. Mr. Beecher is determined on being investigated at last, and relies on the whitewashing skill of his deacons to see him safely out of the wilderness.

The Japanese Minister at Washington is in disgrace at home, having been charged with defrauding the government and other unbecoming practices. He evidently is aquiring American habits, and has shown himself an apt scholar.

Up to a recent date only twelve Senators and thirty-two Rrepresentatives have returned their back pay. Two of these are known to be from Indiana viz: Senator Pratt and Representative Holman. Both these gentlemen voted against the back pay bill, and both refused the pitch.

It is a puzzling question to the Government what to do with the Modoc chief, Capt. Jack. Attorney General Williams decides that he comes within the military jurisdiction, and must be tried by a court-martial. This certainly would be the speedest ending of the unpleasant subject.

It is a remarkable fact that one who loves his mother, who honors that mothers memory, is never a bad man, she is never a bad woman. WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q.C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

HARD TIMES.

There is much grumbling about hard times. The times are hard enough, no doubt; but after all there is no cause for discourgagement. Hard times are not an unmitigated evil. They teach anew the value of money, and the need of thrift and industry. They make people careful about their expeditures, and so beget a habit of economy. When times are hard, more men live within their income than when they are prosperous. A flush time is a time of danger to trade, and often to morals. What extravagance we run into when money is plenty! It is not well that every man should have all the money he can spend; few men know how to spend it judicously. During long periods of money making society grows corrupt; unceasing prosperity might work the moral ruin of the nation. So it is well the times should be a little hard occasionally. Hard times cannot last always. They come periodically, but they are always succeeded by a season of activity. Trade cannot always stand still; the world must move on and the wheels will soon start again. And they will move all the brisker for having rested awhile. This great and growing country has great wants which must be supplied, and the demand for the necessaries of life will always give the industrious a living, and make money.

The position taken by the counsel for Miss Susan B. Anthony before the United States Court, at Canandaigua New York, as a defense for illegal voting at the late election, was that she was not entitled to vote, but believed that she was and voted in good faith in that belief, that therefore it was not a criminal act. This is a strong point and well taken. But does Judge Selden, who is a leading Republican, not see that this would be a good excuse also for Jefferson Davis and all the other ex-confederates, if they had been put upon trial. They believed that under the Constitution a State had the right to secede, and they acted upon that belief. Our civil war grew out of two different constructions of the Constitution, upon each side of which there were eminet names in the past. In regard to the reception of Miss Anthony's vote the fault should rest upon the Judge of election. He saw that she was a woman and took her vote. If a man who is not a voter states his case to the election inspector and that official receive his note the voter is not culpable. A woman is certainly entitled to the same privilege. The Judge saw and understood the case when he looked at the person (Miss Anthony), saw she was a woman and received her vote. The law through its agencies recognized her claim.

Waiting for a Chance.

It is now some time now since the sight seeing public have been favored with the exhibiton of a lion tamer devoured by the beasts he has tamed, but it seem probable that we shall not have to wait long for a pleasing catasorophe of this nature, which unless it occasionly occurred, would make the exhibition even tamer than the lions. The Bramer correspondent of the Advertiser mentions that a fews days ago a menagerie was exhibited at that place. During the last performance of the evening "Lambetti, the lion tamer," was in the cage with the male lion putting the animal through the usual exciting exercise, when he slipped on the floor and fell just as the "King of beasts" was bouning past him. He almost immediately regained his footing, and evidently not a moment too soon, for the fierce brute gave an enraged roar, and seemed ready to spring upon him. By accidental contact with the lion's paw is trowsers were tore and his le halightly scrached. His coolness was remarkable. Motioning to the assistant, who rushed with a sliding partition to the cage, to keep back, he slowly moved to wicket, and before leaving, thanked the audience for their attendance. The affair, it is stated, produced a painful sensation, which was not lessened by the apparent rage of the lion when he saw that his victim had escaped. In the fall the performer lost a revolver, with which he was armed, the weapon being subsequently found among the straw. Altogether there must have been quite enough excitement to render the exhibition well worthy the patronage of the inhabitants of Braemer, but M. Lambetti will it is to be hoped, so arranged matters as not to be devoured in an obscure Scotch villiage when thousands of educated persons in the "the centers of civilization" will esteem it a privilege to witness has consumption by the "King of beasts."—Pall Mall Gazette.

There has been considerable effort made to find out which of the Modocs, did the shooting, as well as which ones are in possession of various pieces of property, of the party who were killed by them, when they met Gen. Canby ostensibly to have a "peace talk" with him. Each lays the blame on the other, except so far as "Bogus Charlie" is concerned. They all exonerate him, and, notwithstanding his name of "bogus," it seems that he is the only "genuine" article among the whole party.

The printer is called a laborer, and the office he performs is toil. Oh, it is not work, but a sublime rite he is performing when he thus "sights" the engine that is to fling a worded truth in grander curves than missiles e'er before described—flings it into the bosom of an age unborn. He throws off his coat indeed; we but wonder, rather, that he does not put his shoes from off his feet, for the place he stands on is holy ground.

A little song was uttered somewhere long ago; it wandered through the twilight feebler than a star; it died upon the ear. But the printer takes it up when it was lying there in silence like a wounded bird, and he equips anew with wings, and sends it forth from the Ark, that had preserved, and it flies on into the future with the branch of peace; and around the world with melody, like the dawning of a spring morning.—B. F. Taylor.

What must the people in Europe and in the continents think of the civilization and the regard for law and order which prevails in the United States of America! We will suppose that they took up a copy of a daily papers published here on the 18th of June 1873. Under the telegraphic head of "Crimes" of the day previous is the account af the hanging of Joseph D. Howard by a mob in Franklin County Missouri. He was presumed to be a horse-thief. Then follows the hanging of three negroes in New Iberia, Louisiana, by a mob they being suspected of two murders. After that comes the cheerful intelligence of a father and son being shot and killed at Edgefield, South Carolina by a man with whom one of them had some words. The father, some thirty years before, had killed, in an affray, the uncle of the murderer. The next paragraph is the account of a desperate fight in Memphis between two negroes, in which one shot and fatally wounded the other. From Bellaire, Ohio, is the narration, on the same day, of a man being wilfully pushed off a ferry-boat at Wheeling, West Va., into the Ohio River. His son remonstrating, he was struck on the head with a stone, which crushed in his skull, killing him instantly. This, even, does not complete the beautiful record. On the Fort Wayne and Wabash train a passenger having an altercation with a brakeman, shot him in the head, the ball entering near the ear and coming out at the back of the neck, making a severe but not mortal wound. His defense is that he did not intend to hit the brakeman, but aimed at the conductor, who was endeavoring to put him off the train. We doubt whether in all Europe, with its 300,000,000 of people, for a month previous there has been such a sanguinary list of crime as we have had in one day with our 40,000,000. We know that there was no lynching, for that, except in times of insurrection and civil war, is never resorted to on the old continent. We certainly with such a daily record, cannot consider it strange if we are looked upon as a race of semi-barbarians, whose only law is the pistol and the bowie-knife.

A Poughkeepsie clerk loves the very ground a Highland widow walks upon. It is worth $200 an acre.

The Cincinnati Gazette, which seldom falls into truth or fair dealing, is compelled, while ignoring the position of its idol, Morton, to make this amend to the Hon. W. S. Holman, who, the Gazette, common with other disreputable papers of its partisan class, has persisted in maligning.

RISING SUN Ind. June 18, 1873.
Editor of the Cincinnati Gazette:

Having heard several confflicting reports in regard to the action taken by the Hon. Wm. S. Holman, M. C. from this district, I concluded to write the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in regard to it, which I did, and to-day received the reply, a correct copy of which I herewith inclose. You are at liberty to use it as you see fit.
Very truly, etc. T. S. Pate.

[Copy.

WASHINGTON D. C., June 6 '73.

Sir: Respectfully referring to yours of the 12th instant, I have to inform you that on the 16th ult., the Hon. W. S. Holman made a deposit in the Treasury of the United States of $4,460 on account of back pay, etc., due him under the recent act of Congress.

Resepctfully, Frederick Sawyer.
Assistant Treasurer.

T. S. Pate, Esq., box 51, Rising Sun, Ind.

Then the Gazette graciously adds:

Mr Holman is a Democrat, but that is no reason why Republican should attempt to do him injustice. It is to be regretted therefore that any Republican newspaper should attempt to place Mr. Holman in a false light before the public. The fact is Mr Holman opposed the salary grab, and when it passed he did not touch a dollar of the money, but covered it into the Treasury, where it it is safe The conduct of Mr. Holman is commendable, and it affords us pleasure to be able to say this of a political opyonent, and it would afford us still greater pleasure if we could say it of all the members of Congress—Democrats and Repuplican. It also safe to say that Mr. Holman will use his influence to obtain the repeal of the law increasing pay of Congressmen. An effort will be made in the next session of Congress to repeal the law, and the test will enable the people to pass judgment.

The Undeveloped West.

The "Far West" is the land of promise to ten million young Americans; but to all those those who go West, nine out of ten go just far enough to form an erroneous idea of all beyond. They visit eastern Kansas and Nebraska, and traverse the fertile strip which extends from one to two hundred miles west of the Missouri—the only part of the entire West which answers to the rosy views of the expectant pilgrim. There they find the rich bottom lands, the green rolling prairies and fertile vales of political romance; and it is that region, perhaps two hundred by twelve hundred miles in extent, intermediate between the Missouri line and the high plains, which is taken as the basis of comparison by the hopeful visitor, who imagines that with the exception of a few mountains chains it is much the same all the way to the Pacific. It is difficult to convince such that in the West are regions of utter desert so vast that a New England State might be hidden in them, and only pass for a respectable oasis.

To come at once to the point, I felt no anxiety about "John Chinaman," either as a political problem, a disturbing social power, or a source of injury to the laboring classes. The talk about his doing this, that and the other terrible thing on the Pacific coast is three-fourths, pure nonsense. Nor, on the other hand, can I find in him that industry and ingenuity with which his apologists have credited him. Such ideas are but the natural reaction of a generous mind, enthusiastic to defend an oppressed race against a cowardly and brutal class, who maltreat them for some fancied injury.

"No California gentleman or lady ever abuses a Chinaman." "Twain" neyer spoke a truer word. But there is in California, as elsewhere, a considerable class, many of whom have themselves but lately sought an asylum in America, whose worst instincts are excited against a race differing so widely from themseleves; and demagogues stoop to pander to this feeling.

TO MY WIFE.

BY [illegible]

Past twenty-one and Love's of age,
Has lost his wings and gained his eyes,
Looks down on life's unended page,
Looks up and sees the azure skies.
He's safe to stay while we abide,
His time for flight forever past,
'Twill be we three whate'er betide,
While roses blow and lilacs last.
No bankrupt firm is this of ours,
But rich as June in suns and showers.

Bring out the ledger! Every thing
That men call gains shall be for sale—
Ay, let them go for what they'll bring,
We'll keep our losses till we fail!
Of old when Judah's children wed,
They pledged their faith in crimson wine,
Then broke the crystal as they said—
"No lips shall touch its brims but mine!
This shall no meaner love profane!"
The shattered symbol fell like rain.

None stopped to pick the fragments up—
All knew the thing the token meant;
Behold, one love had crowned the cup,
No matter where the goblet went!
And so, my wife, in Judah's way
We've drank life's golden draught of wine,
And strewn the vase's glittering clay—
See where the sculptured fragments shine!
The ledger now! Let it be known
How rich and grand this Firm has grown.

The flock of clouds we always keep
Are marked with rainbows every one.
We know our own celestial sheep
That throng the blue and graze the sun;
'Tis fine to see them trooping home,
Their fleeces tangled thick with stars;
'Tis fine to watch them as they come
And wait at Evening's golden bars;
Their shadows fall upon our way,
As if old Night had walked by day

And left her foot-prints as she went;
Some look like graves of friends that died,
Whose sunken mounds the sward indent,
Of babe and gallant bridegroom's bride,
Of golden tress and silver hair,—
And some like hopes our hearts have shed,
That fell as leaves in autumn air,
And crush beneath our thoughtful tread.
Dear Wife, we have no clouds to sell—
They make the sunshine show so well!

An angel troop this Firm commands,
A score and one they stand in line,
And swing aloft in radiant hands
A score and one of Eves divine!
Of Christmas Eves and Christmas bells
And Christmas gifts with blessing twice,
That bring us all, by mystic spells,
In kissing range of Paradise!
My Wife, we would not give them up
To mend again the shattered cup!

A score and one of kindling Junes,
The warm and blushing brides of Time,
Are ranged along like notes in tunes,
And keep our hearts in rythmic rhyme.
We own a score of belfried towers
Where bird-like Wishes, bred and born,
Are singing songs—those birds are ours—
We count our twentieth New Year's Morn!
No birds to sell, nor songs nor chimes,
We'll keep them all till harder times!

We have some castles gray and grand
That cloudless suns do shine upon;
Along their halls retainers stand
And speak Castilian every one.
Nobody dies who dwelleth there,
They have a clime where tempests swoon,
No graves to make, no empty chair
And Christmas in the month of June!
I'll make the deeds—you'll sign them sure,
And castles twelve we'll give the poor!

We've had a wealth of dreams as rife
As corn along the bladed West,
We have them still in breider'd life,
Like flowers upon a wedding vest.
There comes a little sounder sleep,
There comes a richer flush of dawn,
Till then we'll keep our flocks of sheep,
No castle, cloud or angel gone.
Down flag of red! We'll make no sale,
But hold our losses till we fail!

To make all sure my Will behold:
"To Her who kept this Firm alive
I now bequeath my clouds of gold,
My angel choir, my castles five,
My score of belfries, all my sheep,
The fragments of the sculptured vase,
To have and hold and ever keep!"
And yet I've done no act of grace,
They all are yours, but whose are you?
I freely give and keep them too.

THE DREAMING BEECH.

More than a hundred years have passed since it was struck by lightning and split from top to bottom, and the plow has well furrowed the place where it grew. Before that time the mighty old beech tree stood, some hundred yards from the first houses of the village, on a grassy mound, a tree such as one never sees in these days, because animals, plants, trees, and men are becoming small and mean.

The peasants said the tree dated from the early Christian era, and that a holy apostle had been massacred beneath it by the false heathen; that the roots of the tree had drunk up the apostle's blood, which, rising through the trunk and branches, had made them so large and strong. Who knows if the legend be true? Anyhow, there was certainly one curious fact concerning the tree, and everybody in the village knew about it, small and great. Whoever fell asleep under the tree and dreamt a dream, that dream would surely come true. So, from time immemorial, it was called the Dreaming Beech, and no one knew it by any other name. There was, however, a peculiar condition attached to the dreaming, and if anybody lay down under the beech with the idea of dreaming of some one particular thing, then the dream was sure to be nothing but confusion and rubbish and nonsense of all sorts, of which no one could make either head or tail. Now this was assuredly rather a difficult stipulation, because most people are so very likely to think of what lies nearest the heart; consequently, at the time this story commences not a man or woman had ever tried the plan with success. Still, for all that, it was not to be denied but that the tradition of the Dreaming Beech was true.

One hot summer's day, when not a breath of air stirred, a poor journeyman came wandering along the road. Things had gone very badly with him for many years in foreign parts. When he reached the village he turned his pockets inside out for the last time, but, alas! they were empty.

"What am I to do?" he thought to himself. "I am tired to death, but no one will take me in for nothing, and it is hard to beg." Just then his eyes fell upon the noble beech tree, on the green grassy slope; and as it stood only a few yards from the road, he laid himself down under it to rest. A gentle breeze sprung up and rustled among the branches, whilst here and there a gleam of glittering sunshine fell as the leaves were moved, disclosing glimpses of the deep blue sky beyond. Then the tired wanderer closed his eyes and slept. Whilst he was thus soundly sleeping, a branch dropped from the beech tree, with three leaves on it, which fell just on his breast. He dreamt that he sat at a table, in a most cozy room; and the table was his own, and the room, and indeed the whole house. At the table, leaning on it with both hands, stood a young woman, looking lovingly at him; and that was his wife. On his knees sat a child, whom he was feeding with soup, and because the soup was too hot, he blew upon the spoon to cool it. Then his wife cried out, laughingly, "What a capital nurse you make!" Jumping about the room was another child, a fat, rosy-cheeked urchin, dragging about a large carrot, to which he had tied a string, and shouting out "Tally ho!" as if it were the finest fox. And both children were his own.

This was his dream; and it must have been a very pleasant dream, for his whole face beamed, in his sleep, with happiness.

When he awoke it was almost evening, and before him stood a shepherd, smoking. He sprang up from the ground much refreshed; stretched himself, and yawned, saying:

"Heavens! if it were only true! but, at all events, it was pleasant to know how it would all feel!"

Then the shepherd came up and asked him whence he came and whither he was going, and whether he ever heard of the wonderful beech?

Having learnt he was as innocent about it as a new-born babe, he exclaimed:

"Well, you're a lucky dog! For any one could read in your face you were dreaming something pleasant. I was looking at you for a long time, as you lay there." And he told him the peculiar virtue of the tree. "It's sure to come true," he added; "as certain as that this is a sheep and that a lamb. Ask the people in the village if it is not so. Now just tell me what who dreamt."

"Old fellow," answered the young man, grinning, "that's the way, is it, you question strangers in these parts? I mean to keep my beautiful dream to myself, and you can't be surprised at that. But for all that nothing will come of it;" and he really believed what he was saying, for as he walked toward the village, he murmured to himself, "Stuff and nonsense! old wives' tales! I should like to know how a tree could come by such power!"

As he came into the village he saw stuck out from the roof of the third house a long pole with a golden crown dangling from it. And below, at the door, stood the landlord of the Crown Inn. He happened just then to be in good humor, for he had a very good supper, and was feeling, in consequence, quite happy and genial. So the young laborer pulled off his cap, and asked for a night's shelter. The landlord of the Crown looked at the smart lad, in his dusty, ragged clothes, from to top to toe, and then, kindly nodding, said to him:

"Sit down here in this arbor; I dare say there's a bit of bread and cheese and a jug of beer to spare for ye, and a truss of straw in the loft at night."

Whereupon he went into the house, and sent out his daughter with the bread and cheese and beer, and she sat down beside the young man and asked him to tell her of the foreign lands, and in return told him all the village gossip, and how the corn stood, and when the next dance at the Crown would be.

Suddenly she rose, leaned toward the stranger, and said:

"Pray tell me what those three leaves are, sticking out of your waistcoat?"

The young man looked down and found the twig, with the three leaves, which had fallen upon him while he slept. It was caught in the flap of his waistcoat.

"It must have fallen from the great beech tree just outside the village," he replied. "I had a nap under it."

The girl listened attentively, waiting to hear what he would say next. When he had ceased speaking she began to question him narrowly, till she had ascertained beyond a doubt that he had really fallen asleep under the great beech tree, and that, moreover, he knew nothing of the wonderful power and properties attached to the tree. For he was a sly dog, and pretended to know nothing.

As soon as she had done questioning, she went and drew him another jug of beer, and pressed him to drink, telling him all the lovely things she had herself dreamt, and what a pity it was they had never come true.

Just then the shepherd came from the field, driving his sheep through the village.

As he passed the Crown Inn, he saw the two sitting in the arbor in earnest converse, and he stood still a moment, and said:

"Ah, yes, he'll be sure to tell you the beautiful dream, though I can get nothing out of him." And then he drove on his sheep.

When the girl found, do what she would, she could not learn anything about the dream, her curiosity knew no bounds, and at last she could control herself no longer, and asked him outright what he had dreamt while sleeping under the beech.

Then the young man, who was a mischievous rogue, and in very high spirits about his pleasant dream, with a sly look and a wink, said:

"Ah! I had a most glorious dream, which must come true; but I dare not tell you what it was."

But she worried and teased him so that at last he drew his chair toward her, and told her quite gravely:

"I dreamt I should marry the daughter of the landlord of the Crown Inn, and that after a bit I should become landlord myself!"

On hearing this the girl grew as white as a lily and then as red as a rose, and got up and walked back into the house. Then after some little time she came again, and asked if he had really dreamt it, and was quite in earnest.

"To be sure, to be sure," said he; "she who appeared to me in the dream was most certainly just like you!"

Then the girl went again into the house, and did not return. She walked straight to her own room; and thoughts flowed through her brain like water that runneth apace. First one idea, then another chased it away till back came the first thoughts. There was no end to the confusion. "He knows nothing about the tree," she said to herself, "he dreamt it, and whether I wish it or no, it will surely come to pass; there's no possibility of changing that." And with this she went to bed, and dreamt the whole night of the young man. When she awoke the next morning, she knew his face by heart, so often had she seen it in her dreams during the night. And he was a very good-looking fellow, too.

The young man had slept soundly on his bed of straw. Dreaming Beech, dream, and all he had said to the landlord's daughter were alike forgotten. He stood at the door of the tap-room, and was just shaking the landlord's hand, and wishing him "good-bye," when the girl entered. On seeing him ready to start, an indescribable feeling came over her, and she could not let him go.

[illegible] not yet been tapped, and the young man has nothing to do; couldn't he stay a day longer, and earn his board and lodging, and get something beside for the journey home?"

The landlord had no objection to make to this proposal, as he had just had his morning draught, and was in the best of humor.

Somehow the beer-tapping progressed but slowly. Then came bottling the wine, and when the cask was empty and the bottles full, then the girl thought he could help in the field-work, and when that was finished there were so many things to be done in the garden that no one ever thought of before. So week after week slipped by, and every night she dreamt of him. In the evenings she sat with him in the arbor by the house, and when he told her how roughly strangers had treated him, and what hardships he had gone through, it was really very singular, but a gnat or a hair was sure to get into her eyes, so that she was obliged to wipe them with the corner of her apron.

And so it came to pass that at the end of the year the young man was still at the house. And then the floors were scoured, and white sand and fir twigs strewn in all the rooms, and the whole village had a holiday. It was the wedding day of the young journeyman and the innkeeper's daughter; and everybody rejoiced at it, except just the few who sulked because they were jealous or pretended to be so.

Not long after, the landlord of the Crown Inn was decidedly once more in a happy frame of mind. He had been eating and drinking to his heart's content, and sat in his armchair with his snuff-box on his knee. Long he slept; and at last, when they tried to awake him, they found he was dead!

So the young journeyman became really landlord of the Crown, as he said he would in joke. And, indeed, all that he had dreamt under the beech tree came true, for each he had two lovely children, one of whom he probably took sometimes on his knees, and fed with a spoon, and possibly blew upon the food when it was too hot. Perhaps, too, the other boy ran about the room with the carrot; but the person who told this tale did not happen to mention the fact, and I forgot to ask about it. But it must have happened so, because whatever one dreamt under the beech-tree always did come true, to the very letter.

One day, about five years later, the young landlord, for such he now was, had come in, and was sitting in the taproom, when his wife ran in, and said to him—

"Only fancy! yesterday at noon one of our mowers fell asleep under the Dreaming Beech, without knowing it, and what do you think he dreamt? Why, that he was immensely rich! and only think who it was—Caspar, old Caspar, who is half-witted, and everybody pities and keeps only for charity. What on earth will he do with all his money?"

"Wife," laughed the husband, "how can you believe such rubbish? You, a sensible woman! Just reflect for one moment. How is it possible a tree can foretell the future—let it be ever such an old and beautiful tree?"

The wife gazed at her husband with wondering eyes, shook her head, and said slowly:

"Husband, don't speak so wickedly! You ought not to joke on such subjects."

"I am not joking, my dear," replied her husband.

For a time the woman was silent, as if she had not rightly understood him. Then she said:

"Why pretend what you do not mean? Surely you, of all others, have most reason to be grateful to the tree. Hasn't all you dreamt under it come true?"

"God knows," replied the husband, when she had finished speaking—"God knows I am grateful, grateful to Him and to you. Yes, it was a beautiful dream, and I remember it like yesterday; but everything is a thousand times better than I dreamt it, and you, love, a thousand times prettier and dearer than the young woman who appeared in my dream. But as regards the tree, my darling, this is my opinion: If a man loves dancing, he will soon find the music to dance to, and echo repeats the words that are spoken to her. I had been for so many years wretched and miserable amongst strangers, it was no wonder if once in a way I dreamt a pleasant dream."

"But still it was strange that you should dream you were to marry me."

"I never dreamt that! All I saw was a young woman, with two children, but she was not half as pretty as you, or the children either."

"Fie!" cried the wife; "do you mean to deny me or the tree? Didn't you tell me the first day we met? It was in the evening, out there in the arbor. Didn't you tell me you had dreamt you were to marry me and become the landlord of the Crown Inn?"

Then the man remembered the joke he had played his wife, and said—

"It can't be helped, dear wife. I did not really dream of you, and if I said so, it was only a joke. I remember you were so very inquisitive, and I wanted to tease you."

Upon this the wife burst into a flood of tears, and left the room. When he followed her, she was standing in the court-yard still crying. He did all he could to comfort her, but in vain.

"You have stolen my love, and cheated me out of my heart," she said; "I shall never be happy again, no! never?"

Then he asked her if she did not love him more than anybody in the world, and if they had not been the happiest couple in the whole village?

She could not deny this; but, nevertheless, she remained sad and miserable, notwithstanding all he could say. So he thought, "Let her cry herself out—to-morrow she will be herself again." But she was not herself again; for the next morning, though she certainly had ceased weeping, she was sadder and graver than ever, and pointedly avoided her husband.

Every attempt at reconciliation failed; nearly all day she sat gloomily by herself, starting whenever her husband came near her.

This state of things continuing some time, he also began to grow melancholy, fearing he had altogether lost his wife's love. Silently he moved about the house, thinking how to [illegible] the evil; but no idea occurred to him; so at noon he went out into the village, and loitered carelessly through the fields. The rich, ripe corn waved like a golden lake, and the birds sang sweetly enough, but his heart was full of sorrow. In the distance stood the old Dreaming Beech; queen of the forest it towered towards heaven. It seemed to beckon him with its green waving branches to come nearer like a good old friend. He went and sat beneath its shade, thinking of days gone by. Five years had passed since he, a poor miserable wretch, had rested there for the first time, and dreamt that pleasant dream. How pleasant! for it had lasted five years, and now—all gone! all gone! forever—and ever.

Then the beech began to rustle again, as it had done five years ago, and to move its mighty branches; and as they moved there fell, as then, the golden glittering sunlight across its leaves, and through the boughs peeped ever and anon the deep blue sky. Then his heart grew calmer, and he slept. Soon he dreamt that dream again of five years ago. The woman by the table and the little children at their play; but now, the faces were the faces of his own dear wife and children, and she looked at him with her large brown eyes so kindly, ah, so kindly! And then he awoke, and found it was only a dream! More sorrowful than before, he broke off a small green twig from the tree, and went home and placed it in his hymn-book.

The next day was Sunday, and as they went to church the leaves fell out at the wife's feet. He turned scarlet as he stooped to pick them up and put them into his pocket. But the wife had seen it and asked what it was.

"Only leaves from the Dreaming Beech, which is much kinder to me than you are. Yesterday I was resting beneath it and fell asleep. It wished to console me, for I dreamt that you were kind to me again, and had forgiven everything; but it is not true. The good old beech, though it is a noble tree, knows nothing about the future."

The wife gazed at him, and it was as if a ray of sunshine had crossed her face.

"Husband, did you really dream that?"

"Yes," he answered, positively.

And she knew it was the truth, by the twitching about his mouth, like one who has a difficulty in restraining his tears.

"And I was really your wife?"

"Really my own true wife;" and she fell on his neck, and half suffocated him with kisses.

"Thank God," she said, "now it is all right again! I love you so dearly, how dearly you can never know. And all these long weary days I have been in such dread, lest I was wrong in loving you, and that God meant me to have another husband, and you another wife! for you certainly did steal my heart, you bad man! and there was a deception at first—yes, you stole my heart, but it did not do you much good, for you, these things must have happened just as they did, whether we would or no." Then, after a pause, she continued—

"Promise me never to speak slightingly of the Dreaming Beech again?"

"I never will, for I believe in it, as you do, depend upon it, though in a different way, perhaps. And now let us paste the leaves in the beginning of our hymn-book, so that they may not be lost."—Chambers' Journal.

Boxing Children's Ears.

"Children's ears should never be boxed." So writes an eminent surgeon in the June number of The Popular Science Monthly. Though the statement will doubtless be received by many a juvenile reader in the light of a "self-evident proposition," there may yet remain a few parents and rural pedagogues to whom the reasons for the abolition of this form of rebuke may be of interest. "We have seen," writes Prof. Hinton, "that the passage of the ear is closed by a thin membrane especially adapted to be influenced by every impulse of the air, and with nothing but the air to support it internally. What, then, can be more likely to injure this membrane than a sudden and forcible compression of the air in front of it? If any one designed to break or overstretch the membrane he could scarcely devise a more effective means than to bring the hand suddenly and forcibly down upon the passage of the ear, thus driving the air violently before it, with no possibility for its escape but by the membrane giving way." So reasonable are these conclusions that there was not needed even the high authority of the writer for the subsequent statement that "many children are made deaf by boxes on the ear." It is unfortunate, however, that this and many other rebukes of the same order precede the reason, and hence a safer general order might be issued to the intent that no child should ever receive any form of corporal punishment until the parent or preceptor has stopped to reason—first with the child, and then with himself.—Appleton's Journal.

A CURIOUS CLIMATE.—The climate of Peru is set forth by a correspondent as exceedingly peculiar and strange. It never rains there, we are told, but during certain seasons, and when the atmosphere is filled with clouds a "dew" falls so thick, heavy, and continuous that it will saturate the heaviest clothing in less than half an hour. The coming and going of the clouds that distil this dew is another strange thing connected with Peru. The changes are reported so rapid and violent as to startle the stranger.

A PATRONYMIC ROMANCE.—Thirty years ago a young man entered the city of New York in almost penniless condition, and without a single acquaintance in the great wilderness of houses. To-day his name is known wherever humanity breathes. It is spoken in every hamlet, is heard in every city, and is as familiar to the worker in the mines as to his brother in the mills, and wherever language is known and ideas expressed the name of this penniless, unknown, and uncouth lad of thirty years ago is uttered. It was John Smith.

WHAT do singers do with all the "fresh laurels" they win?

Catching a Tartar.

John, the New York Sun's fool, writes from Raleigh, N. C.:

Some of the fellows who live in the woods are so thin they have to lean against a tree to swallow; they are yellower than blind man's buff, and so darned lazy they keep tame squirrels to shave 'em. They train the squirrels to dip their tails in soap suds, lather them, and then scratch the hair off with their claws. I said there is plenty of tar in North Carolina, and so there is. I caught a Tar-tar there myself. I saw a fellow who looked so green that if he hadn't stirred just as he did I'd been tempted to pour oil and vinegar on him and cut him up for a salad. He was whittling a stick.

Says I: Halloo.

Says he: Halloo yourself.

Says I: Boy, if hens lay eggs for nothing, and those eggs sell for sixteen cents a dozen, what's the percentage of profit?

Says he: Mister, it would take a prophet to tell, I reckon.

Says I: That's so; what are you making?

Says he: It's a whistle out of willer, and I say, Mister, can you make a whistle out of a bowl of soup?

Says I: No, sir.

Says he: Well, then, you ain't smart. I can.

Says I: Do you mean to tell me that you can make a whistle out of a bowl of soup?

Says he: Yes, I can. That there is a whistle, ain't it?

Says I: Yes, it is.

Says he: Well, I didn't make it in a bowl of soup, did I?

Says I: No.

Says he: Well, then, I made that there whistle out of a bowl of soup, didn't I?

That made this Northern gentleman mad, and I started to leave when he yelled out: I say, mister, if you'd lived in the days of the ark you'd gone in through the window.

Says I: Why?

Says he: Because you're so green that a dove would have lit on you first, sure.

I left under the impression that North Carolina boys are smart. Perhaps it's the turpentine that accounts for it, for that will make folks smart. I saw a touching picture yesterday. It was so touching I touched it. It was a man in the woods sitting upon a trunk under a big umbrella. He was eating chewing gum, and his trunk had more locks on it than the Erie Canal.

A New Way to Collect Fare.

Why is it that everybody likes to cheat a railroad? People who are scrupulously honest with everybody else will resort to all sorts of dodges to avoid paying railroad fare; and people who are opulent and open-handed with money seem eager to dodge even the smallest amount for riding on the cars. They never think of avoiding a stage or ferry fare thus. It is a peculiar form of kleptomania.

Some of the devices resorted to are very ingenious and very funny. For instance: There is a respectable lady who has occasion to make frequent trips between two stations on the Oil Creek road which are about fifteen miles apart. She buys a ticket to a station about half-way between, but does not get off there. On the contrary, she goes into the "saloon" and stays there until the conductor has made his round and returns to the forward part of the train. Then she comes out and takes her seat with the appearance of feeling better, with all the consciousness of a good deed performed, and rides free to her destination.

This game proceeded unchecked until last Saturday. The lady went through the same performance again, with this difference: when she attempted to come out of her saving retirement she found the door tied from the outside with a strong rope. She pulled, and tugged, and kicked, but of no avail. The conductor was in the smoking-car, the brakeman on the rear platform; and the passengers, supposing it was some prisoner or candidate for Dixmont, did not interfere. Luckily a brakeman happened in just as the train stopped at the station where the lady wanted to get off and untied the rope. She came out and got off the train rapidly, looking disgusted, even offended.—Oil City Derrick.

Marriage Among the Apaches.

Even those copper-colored cut-throats, the Apache Indians, have a touch of delicacy and romance in them. From a lecture delivered in San Francisco by Col. John C. Carmany, we take the following account of their courting customs; every young girl is at liberty to refuse a suitor for her hand. The father, mother, and brother are prohibited from interfering in her choice. Her person is at her own disposal. After a brief courtship the lover makes a formal proposal by offering so many horses. Horses are a standard of value among Indians. As the squaw does all the work, horses are accepted as an equivalent for her labor. When a young warrior is enamored, he fastens the horse near the wigwam of the squaw whose hand he seeks, where he is left four days. If she fails to feed and water the horse during that time, the master is rejected; but if she accepts his offer she grooms and kindly cares for the horse, and then ties him to the wigwam of her lover, as much as so say, "I am willing to be your slave and do your work." At the marriage the sages and sachems meet together, and the bride is not unfrequently loaded with forty to fifty pounds of silver and copper trinkets.

A Durable Paste.

Four parts, by weight, of glue are allowed to soften in fifteen parts of cold water for some hours, and then moderately heated till the solution becomes quite clear. Sixty-five parts of boiling water are now added with stirring. In another vessel thirty parts of starch paste are stirred up with twenty parts of cold water, so that a thin, milky fluid is obtained without lumps. Into this the boiling glue solution is poured, with constant stirring, and the whole is kept at the boiling temperature. After cooling, ten drops of carbolic acid are added to the paste. This paste is of extraordinary adhesive power, and may be used for leather, paper or cardboard with great success. It must be preserved in close bottles, to prevent evaporation of the water, and will in this way keep good for years.

RAIN AND SHINE.

Rain, rain, rain,
No sun to be seen for many a long day,
[illegible] the highway,
No chance for a crop of rye, wheat, corn or hay—
It is rain, rain, nothing but rain!
What will the poor farmer do?
Why, [illegible] in the house and sigh and repine,
And pour out impatiently line upon line
Of prospective woes, should the sun not soon shine—
That's what he's likely to do.

Shine, shine, shine,
No cloud to be seen for many a long day,
The fields hard and dry as the dusty highway,
No chance for a crop of rye, wheat, corn or hay—
It is shine, shine, nothing but shine!
What will the poor farmer do?
Why, wander about and moan and complain
That work and no work are equally vain
Unless we soon have a good shower of rain—
That's what he's likely to do.

Rain or shine,
We hear from too many the sad, sad strain,
It is nothing but shine or nothing but rain,
Both equally death to the life of the grain,
And the cause of many a whine.
What should the poor farmer do?
Why, smile when it shines and smile when it rains,
And take it for granted from all his past gains,
That God knows what's best for all kinds of grains—
That's what he could and should do.

A MAN in Cincinnati owned a pet panther. Last week he went off with with his wife and family for a visit of a couple of days, leaving the pet panther and his mother-in-law to keep house. On his return his grief can be imagined on discovery that it was the panther that was dead, not the mother-in-law. The old lady had talked the poor animal to death.

THE "India-rubber bustle" is again heard from. This time it was a Brooklyn young lady, who was thrown from her carriage coming down the hill from Prospect Park. She made 97½ bounces, in all, and was finally rescued, by a hook and ladder company, from the top of a telegraph pole, where she had stuck in attempting to complete the 98th bounce.

A POUGHKEEPSIE belle, who sported a long curl and a love of a bonnet, visited the menagerie the other day. She got too close to the monkey cage, and her mischievous prototype reached for that curl. He got it, and with it the rest of her false hair and her love of a bonnet. The entire family of monkeys began to wear the bonnet, and made sorry work of it, while the girl—well, what she did can be imagined.

THE prosperous undertaker of a neighboring town is a shoemaker by trade, and an acquaintance calling on him a few days since was surprised to find him seated at the bench, and pegging away at his former business. "Hallo, G——," said the visitor, "I thought you had left the care of soles for that of bodies." "So I had, so I had," said the carer of sole and body, with an emphatic rap of his hammer and a shudder of the left eyelid. 'Hot, your Holiness,' I replied; and be that he stepped down to the kitchen for the bilin' water, but before he got back I woke straight up. And now it's distressing me I didn't take it cowld."

Sent Home.

A Washington paper tells of an elegantly-dressed young lady who went into one of the dry goods stores on Pennsylvania avenue, bought a spool of cotton, and requested the proprietor to have it sent home. Overwhelmed with the important duty so suddenly thrust upon him, he immediately procured an express wagon and detailed a clerk, who, lifting the spool into the wagon, drove with it to the residence of the young lady, and, dismounting, rang the bell, and, when the door was opened, placed the spool upon his shoulder and carried it into the hall, and gently placed it on end, as if it had been a barrel of flour, and then retired. The consternation of the family can be imagined. The head of the house has been dodging in and out of the dry goods store during the past week trying to find that clerk.

Trouble in Germany.

Germany is supposed to be the most stable Government in the world; she has within two years received £160,000,000 from France, and is about to receive the remaining forty millions of the indemnity. But to-day, in Berlin, there is alarm and fearful anticipations of coming financial disasters; stocks are falling, and thousands of persons are threatened with ruin; while in Paris, although the country has just undergone another political revolution, there is buoyancy on the Bourse, a rise of 1½ per cent. in Government securities, and general confidence and hope in the future. There are not wanting good judges who say that Germany has all her troubles yet before her, while those of France are ended.—London Letter.

A TEMPERANCE doctor lately told an old soaker who complained of sore eyes that he must quit drinking or lose his eyes. He resignedly said: "Farewell, eyes."

A Transportation Item.

Steamboats are now carrying flour from St. Louis to New Orleans for twenty-five cents a barrel, and the railroads are carrying it to Boston for $1.20 per barrel—the distances being about the same, 1,200 miles. The rates for grain are respectively: To New Orleans by water, 12½c per hundred; to Boston, by rail, 65c per hundred. A little comparison of these two rates shows that the steamboats are carrying five barrels of flour to New Orleans for the same price that the railroads charge for carrying one to Boston, and that the boats are carrying five bushels and a fraction of grain for the same price that is charged by rail for one bushel the same distance.

Steamboatmen complain of the present low rates, 12½ cents per hundred, or $2.50 [illegible] they are now carrying freights, still these rates show what can be done when there is plenty of water in the river and navigation is easy; and they show, too, how important it is to the grain-growers of the West to have sufficient water in the rivers at all seasons of the year. The difference between 12½ and 65 cents per hundred is $10.45 per ton—a sum which, calculated on one-half the Western produce that passes down the Mississippi and its tributaries, would, in a few years, pay the cost of all the improvements needed to secure easy navigation at all seasons of the year.—St. Louis Republican.

Poor Jack.

A correspondent writes from Boyle's camp: "Capt. Jack was grievously disappointed that Gen. Davis did not meet him on equal terms, when his ten-mile ride brought him to headquarters. He thought himself a great chief, and expected the commander of the opposing forces to meet him and have a talk. Talk goes a great way with an Indian, and he supplements his defeats and his victories, and introduces all his great movements and transactions, with an interminable amount of talk. Gen. Davis is not much on that lay-out, and, to tell the truth, he doesn't understand the Indian traits and hobbies well enough to get the truth out of them when they do talk to him. The most unkindest cut of all was when the General returned, to Jack's protestations that he should never try to run away, answer that he had found him out to be such a liar that he wouldn't believe him if he swore by the four Modoc lakes. Poor Jack, now wert thou indeed fallen and treated despitefully!"

A correspondent of the Practical Farmer says: "I have known many men, and women, too, who from various causes have become so much affected with nervousness that when they stretched out their hands they shook like aspen leaves on windy days; and by a daily, moderate use of the blanched footstalks of celery, leaves as a salad, they become strong and steady in limbs as other people. I have known others so very nervous that the least annoyance put them in a state of agitation—and they were in almost constant perplexity and fear—who were effectively cured by a daily moderate use of blanched celery as a salad at meal times. I have known others cured by using celery for palpitation of the heart."

THE SKEPTICAL CONVINCED.—Every advance in Medicine, every new remedy has encountered an opposition, which is the test of truth. Galen and Jenner only were believed when they had proved their discoveries against opposition. But men are observing, and benefits always make believers. No incredulity can stand the silent argument of good results. When Dr. Walker proclaimed that he had produced from the medicinal herbs of California an Elixir that would regenerate the sinking system, and cure diseases not organic, the incredulous shook their heads. Yet his VINEGAR BITTERS is now the Standard Restorative of the Western World. The truth could not be resisted. Under the operation of the new remedy, Dyspeptics regained their health, appetite and strength, the Bilious and Constipated were relieved of every distressing symptom; the Consumptive and Rheumatic rapidly recovered; Intermittent and Remittent Fevers were broken up; the taint of Scrofula was eradicated! Who could gainsay facts like these? Not even the faculty. Skepticism was routed. All doubts as to the claims of the Bitters to the first place in the first rank of modern medicines were silenced, and this wonderful preparation is to-day the most popular Tonic, Alterative and Blood Depurent ever advertised in America. In common with other journalists, we are free to add our testimony to this remedy. It is a domestic medicine, and no household should be without it.—[Com.

THE TICHBORNE CASE.—The present prosecution of the Tichborne claimant has cost already £19,000, and before it is ended the expense to the Government will be £20,000. The trial is almost sure to end in a disagreement of the jury; and the great mystery of "Butcher or Baronet" will remain a mystery forever.

THE processes in the case of the Government Credit Mobilier suits have been served against all the defendants, but the papers in the injunction to prevent the defendants disposing of their property have not been completed. The trial will not begin before the first of September.

THE TRADE DOLLAR.—A general misapprehension seems to exist in regard to the new coin, which was provided for by Congress at the last session, to be known as the trade-dollar. The fact is that the sole object of the act is to facilitate commerce between this country and China and Japan, by allowing silver to be made into these dollars in the United States, instead of as heretofore, having to send the bullion to London for coinage. This new dollar will be used exclusively in trade with the Celestials, and will not enter into general circulation in this country, and will only be coined as demanded for use.

Rub the gum thoroughly with the finger wet with Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, heat the face well, and lap a flannel wet with the liniment on the face; also put a little of the liniment into the cavity of the tooth on cotton.—[Com.

DR. J. STAINER, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, has written a note to the agent for the MASON & HAMLIN Cabinet Organs, in London, expressing his great satisfaction with them, and especially commending their tones as "remarkably pure and free from reediness."

THE system frequently gets out of order and should be at once regulated, else other troubles will ensue. When physic is needed, take Parsons' Purgative Pills; they are a safe, wholesome and natural medicine.—[Com.

OUR READERS should be careful to notice that PROCTER & GAMBLE'S Stamp is upon the bars of their Mottled German Soap, as all good articles are imitated, and this Soap being so popular, other manufacturers have copied their stamp.

Mental Depression.

Mental depression is a disease of the nervous system, and of all the ills flesh is heir to, it is the one that excites the least sympathy. It is a subject of frequent jests, and is called by various derisive terms; but although it is often laughed at, it is not easy to laugh the patient out of the belief that his ills are all real—for it is a real disorder—the general features of which are constant fear, anxiety and gloom. The external senses, as well as the mental faculties, often manifest symptoms of derangement. Noise, as of falling water, and ringing in the ears are complained of, while black specks and fiery sparks frequently flit before the vision. Admonitions like these should not be disregarded, as they may, if neglected, terminate in insanity. The seat of the disease is in the brain and nervous system, and to control the malady it is necessary to use a powerful tonic and alterative, which will correct and tone those organs without inflaming the brain. This is the secret of the success of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters in cases of this kind, for which it is the safest as well as the best of restoratives. In fact, it is the only pure and reliable tonic stimulant known. Many nostrums, purporting to be tonics, are puffed up from time to time in the newspapers, but the sufferer had better let them alone. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has proven itself, by many years' trial, to be in every respect what it is represented to be.

MALARIA, or bad air, is the cause of every form of Fever and Ague. Shallenberger's Pills are an antidote to this poison, and cure instantly.

FOR BLOTCHES, PIMPLES, TETTER, Salt Rheum, and all Skin Diseases, Jayne's Alterative is a sure remedy. It purifies the blood and removes all obstructions in the pores of the skin.

Best and Oldest Family Medicine.—Sanford's Liver Invigorator—a purely Vegetable Cathartic and Tonic—for Dyspepsia, Constipation, Debility, Sick Headache, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Ask your Druggist for it. Beware of imitations.

VINEGAR BITTERS
DR. J. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

DR. A. TRASK'S
MAGNETIC OINTMENT
FOR THE CURE OF INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of [illegible] years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the value of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine. His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment. Certain it is that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of disease, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties. It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action in the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease which cannot be obtained from any other remedy. Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease. Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels. No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained. For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes. For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value. Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.
D. Ransom, Son & Co., Prop'rs, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, will cure a cough in one-half the time necessary to cure it with any other medicine, and it does it, not by drying it up, but by removing the cause—subduing the irritation, and healing the affected parts. For all cases of Hoarseness, Suppression or Loss of Voice, Bronchitis, Severe Chronic or Lingering Coughs, it will be found to surpass any medicine that has ever before been offered to the public. While it cures the severest Coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By its great and thorough blood purifying properties, it cures all Humors from the worst Scrofula to a common Blotch or Pimple. From one to six bottles are warranted to cure Salt Rheum or Tetter, the worst kind of Pimples on the face, Boils, Carbuncles, Sores, Erysipelas and Blotches among the hair. Eight to twelve bottles are warranted to cure Singing Noises in the Ears, corrupt or Running Ulcers, Scrofula and the worst cases of Secondary and Tertiary [illegible] Liver Complaint. $1.00 per bottle, 6 bottles for $5.00, by all Druggists. Manufactured at the World's Dispensary, Nos. 80, 82, 84 and 86 West Seneca St., Buffalo, N. Y.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, July 3rd, 1873

Senator Morton received the back-pay like a good christian statesman. Not a Republican paper has a word to say about Morton. The little congress men in the rural districts, however must bear the lash.

Judge Hoar, of Massachusetts, comes to the front as the probable Chief Justice. In this connection we see it stated that the appointment will not be made from the associate Justices.

Another murderer has been convicted in New York. Public opinion is carrying consternation in "Murderer's Row" in the Tombs. Cannot this matter be carried too far? We only ask the question.

Senator Thurman's record on the back-pay Congressional steal is a good one. He has returned the share allotted to him to National Treasury where it belongs, This contrasts well with Senator Morton, of Indiana, who keeps his booty.

It is estimated that the crop of wheat for 1873 will reach 250,000,000 bushels. It is also expected that the crop will exceed that of last year. In the South, the growing cotton promises great results. Many predict a year of plenty, yet a close and very annoying financial condition.

Hiram Powers, the most famous of American sculptors, died last Friday in Florence Italy, of consumption. His death was not unexpected, for his pulmonary disease had long been of a threatening nature. He was born in Woodstock, Vermont, July 29th 1805, having nearly completed his sixty-eighth year.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad runs fifteen fast trains daily, each way, between Baltimore and Washington City; four express trains each way between New York and the west. Persons going east by this route, have the privilege of going to Washington free, from the junction. The distance from Baltimore to Washington is 40 miles—time, one hour.

Mr. Colfax is said to be worth over a quarter million of dollars. For a man who complained of his poverty during his struggle with the ghost of Nesbit last winter, this will prove a source of pleasing reflection to his friends. Mr. Colfax went to Washington poor, lived in elegance, and yet on a salary of $5,000 a year has managed to save $250,000. That will do. Very few men under the circumstances could have done as well. It is now in order for another educational institution to dub him LL. D.

The Iowa Republican, in State Convention, have "re-affirmed their undying faith in their party." That is refreshing and in connection with Senator Carpenter's speech decidedly apropos. They have "undying faith in the Salary Grab, an "undying faith" in a President who has removed the seat of Government in close vicinity to a race track at Long Branch. Under these circumstances "undying faith" is good. It is very like a weasel, very like a camel, but more like a Modoc. It has the diminutiveness of the weasel, the broken back of a camel, and the treachery of a Modoc. "Undying faith!" Will some brother in good standing with the salary theives please give us the per cent. of that faith.

Injustice is being done to Senator Morton in the matter of back pay. Nobody who knows the Senator will attribute to him a mercenary motive in refusing to make an open return of the money to the Treasury, or suspect that he intends to leave it where he can benefit by it in years to come. He is not that kind of a man. His fault lies in another direction. He was playing to high a "policy" scheme. He did not believe it right to take the money, but he did not wish to make of himself a virtuous example for contrast with the conduct of those who did take it. In short, he wanted to keep on good terms with the back-payers, as well as the pay-backsters. It looks to us like whipping the devil round a stump, but they may have a different name for it in Indiana.—St. Louis Democrats.

Mr. Colfax has purchased the Buchtel property, on Jefferson street, paying therefor something over five thousand dollars.—South Bend Union

Colfax is poor you know, because he "never received a cent nor the tenth of a cent &c., &c.,"

READ, FARMER READ!

Let the Laboring Man Read.

When the Democracy were in power, the State tax was only five cents on the hundred dollars, but since the Credit Mobelier Salary Grab party have taken the reins they have raised it over 30 cents. Just look at that tax payer. When the matter is mentioned our neighbors the Ango's Republican and Waterloo Press says with bad grace it is too high. But does that relieve you tax payer, whether Republican or Democrat from this great enormity. Just think of it six times greater than that of a former administration. We are glad to know that our Representative, Mr. Shutt voted against this outrage on the people. Think of an intelligent representation of that party committing such a fraud upon the people, and then hear the little dogs caving around barking, it is too high. When one man kills another he is held responsible for his acts, so should a party be which ignores the rights of the people.

There is something absolutely pathetic in the case of Gen. Howard. It is impossible to believe him corrupt. His whole life until of late has passed without reproach. But the web of intrigue and dishonesty is closing more inexorably about him. Instead of being able to explain the serious charges of irregularities of the Freedmen's Bureau, he has virtually admitted negligence, if nothing worse, by offering to reimburse the Howard University $16,000, lost to it through his management. But, upon the heels of this, the Attorney General has decided to begin suit for his deficits in the Freedman's Bureau. This overwhelming, for the sum takes six figures to tell it and he can neither pay or give bond for that. He is worse off than his friend Colfax, for the latter saved his $100,000, and Howard has probably fooled his all away.

Carpenter's Key Note.

At the solicitation of his constituents, Senator Carpenter made a speech at Janesville, Wis., on Thursday evening, to explain his action in regard to the Salary Steal. The speech was one carefully prepared by this glib and ingenious orator, but notwithstanding it falls far from the mark of being satisfactory. In short it leaves Mr. Carpender in a more enviable position, for while attempting to explain away and apologize for the Salary increase and back pay, he takes occasion to defend the Credit Mobilier fraud. In this he is not as dashing and impudent as Ben Butler, yet none the less earnest. Senator Carpenter is a recognized leader of the Repuolican party, and as such enjoys a national reputation. In the Senate, last winter, the laurels of the Republican party were equally divided between Carpenter, Morton, and Conkling. There was a desire in each of these gentlemen to excel the other and become the leader, but that point was no altogether reached. While Morton loomed up among his party friends in Indiana and Conklin carried the loyal applause in New York, Carpenter, under the interpretation of Wisconsin Radicals, was esteemed the giant of the West.

The following extract from the speech which Matt Corpenter sent out to all truly loyal papers of the country in advance of its delivery is a melancholy confession of Congressional imperfection;

"But it may be said, if I have a home in Milwakee, why not leave my family there? Why hire a house in Washington? If you are to have a healthy Administration, it must be at the hands of men living in a healthy and normal condition. The laxity of life is restrained by the supervision of a wife, and the heart is kept alive to the better feelings of our nature by the sweet voices and the tender touch of children. Members of Congress will have families in Washington. It is better that they should have their own.

Now that the Senator has made this public confession, we advise Mrs. Carpenter to keep close watch on her husband. We suggest that she cultivate his society with great assiduity.

One hundred and fifty thousand dollars have already been expended to keep Stokes from the gallows.

Gen. Meacham gives Capt. Jack the credit of being the best of the Modocs.—He says he was the first and most persistent advocate of peace, but whenever he talked in its favor, some of the tribe would throw a shawl over his shoulders, or put a woman's bonnet on his head, signifying that he was a coward, and to his taunts and jeers he at last yielded.

After a life of curious and trying vicissitudes Jesse R. Grant, the venerable father of the President died at his modest home in Covington Kentucky, with but few of the family about him. The Grants came westward from Pennsylvania and settled at Mt. Pleasant Ohio. Here the General was born, and here for some time the Mr. Grant pursued his simple calling. Much of his life was passed in Ohio and it was from that State his son was appointed to the military academy. Through all the changing phases of a laborious life, the father finally emerged to behold in his son the most famous man of his time. The triumphant leader of the national armies, the victor of the most bloody battles of modern times, the twice elect of a great nation and the favorite leader of a great party. To have lived to see this should have been satisfaction enough for a more grasping soul than the simple minded man who passed so quietly way. His own life presents no eventful features, and were it not for his relationship none beyond own neighbors would have ever known of the kindly old man.

I am a Republican of the strictest sect, and radical as I have been, I now declare that it was absolutely humiliating to men of dignified sensibilities to see Delano (Secretary of the Interior) Boutwell, and Creswell (Postmaster General) going down last fall, first to North Carolina, and after having carried the State by detail, folding their tents like the Arabs and silently stealing away to the State of Maine, and then flitting away to other States and working to carry elections for the Administration party. I hope to God the time will come when such a spectacle will no longer be witnessed on the American continent.—Wm. H. West in the Ohio Constitutional Convention.

When a man tells you he is a candidate for office, look him all over. See if he is qualified for the position, and then ask him what he has done for the party that the party should bestow up on him its benefits. If he happens to be a dead beat, inform him pleasantly, yet unequivocally, that the party is false to its organizations if it helps men who have never considered it an act of importance to give the party support and encouragement. It should be made a rule to give all dead beat politicians the "go by." What we mean by dead beat politicians is that class of slippery individuals who are never seen interesting themselves in behalf of the party only when candidates themselves. Such men are not only a curse to party, but a nuisance to the community. Kick them out, is the mildest advice we have got to give. The Sentinel will assist in demolishing all such consummate scalawags. Better defeat than the election of a wishy washy hypocritical, bogus Democrat. You know where to find an honorable, upright political opponent, but never the class we have denounced above.—Fort Wayne Sentinel.

Beyond the Mississippi.

Thousands have already gone, and thousands more are turning their eyes towards new homes in the fertile West. To those going to Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon or California, we recommend a cheap, safe, quick and direct route, via St. Louis, over the Missouri Pacific Railroad, which runs its fine Day Coaches and Pullman Sleepers from St. Louis to principal points in the West, without change. We believe that the Missouri Pacific Railroad has the best track and the finest and safest equipment of any line west of the Missipi, and its connections with roads further West are prompt and reliable. The Texas connection of this road is now completed and passengers are offered a first class, all-rail route from St. Louis to Texas, either over the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. R. via Sedalia, or over the Atlantic & Pacific R. R. via Vinita. For maps time tables, information as to rates, &c., we refer our readers to S. H. Thompson, Eastern Passenger Agent, Columbus, Ohio, or E. A. Ford, General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo. Questions will be cheerfully and promptly answered!

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Go to the Fourth.

Days are getting shorter.

Corn is "coming out" all right.

New crossing are being put down.

Wheat fields begin to look yellow.

The court yard fence is completed.

We had a nice shower Sunday last.

We are now having an abundance of rain.

A delegation from this place will o tog Butler the Fourth.

Soda water in abundance and flowing constantly at Davenport's.

Slates, School Books, Paper, Etc., in great stock at Davenport & Co.

The hay crop is good but the rain interferes somewhat in getting it in.

Tomy Leasure has bought C. D. Hare's interest in the ice-cream business.

I am going. Where? To Wood & Williams to see these nice styles of dress goods. No sheddy.

Mr. Roth, our popular drayman, has put on the road a new dray with a neat little span of mules to draw it.

WANTED.— Samuel Laeferty, of this place, wants to employ a first-class tailor None but a good workman need apply.

The ice-cream saloon of T H. Leasure is doing a rattling business on account of their making a first-class article. Try it to-night.

Our band is going to Butler on the 4th, and, although young in experience, will leave the impression that "they are not so low."

There is to be a meeting at the Court House this Thursday night, to make arrangements for a procession to go to Butler on the Fourth.

Samy, who is employed by H. Wolf to manage his barber business, is said by all to be a first-class workman. Try him you that never have.

A Universal minister preached in the M. E. Church last Tuesday evening. The appearance of a heavy storm compelled him to abbreviate his discourse.

If you want to deal with pleasant people those that wont snap your head off the first time you speak, go to Wood & Williams store near the new brick hotel.

Hon. H. Randall, one of the oldest pioneers of Noble county, gave us a call last Monday. The Judge looks hale and hearty, and is as genial and clever as ever.

D. Culver has the contract for a new bridge across Cedar Creek. Its time that dilapidated bridge was removed or repaired. The former, however, would be the wisest.

Mrs. Floyd is opening fine new bonnets ribbons, flowers, braids, etc, at cost so as to close out her spring stock. A fine assortment to select from. Go and see her, on Main street, south of the new hotel.

Our jolly, clever, genial humorous old friend with the big heart, and still greater abdominal proportions, Hon. Mansfield, no relation to Josie, is in town as good natured as ever.

The best way to kill potato bugs is to put about 3 spoonfuls of Paris Green in a pail of water, until dissolved, and then sprinkle over the vines with a broom or sprinkling can. It is much better than putting on the dry stuff.

INDEPENDENCE BALL.—A grand ball will be given on the evening of the Fourth at Matson's new hall, Waterloo. The managers will make it a splendid affair and with a fine new hall, and good music there is no reason why all should not enjoy themselves.

Capt. E. D. Hartman, formerly of Waterloo has permanently located in this place and will practice his profession in conjunction with our fellow townsman J. E. Rose. We are always pleased to welcome men of such sterling qualities as Capt. Hartman to our place.

ANALINE DYES.—This is a new preparation for coloring without the trouble usually experienced. If you want to color your carpet rags, or anything else, go to Davenport & Co's, and get this cheap preparation warranted superior to all others.

A strange rumor comes from Waterloo in regard to an attempt at suicide of one of its oldest citizens. A dose of morphene is said to be the choice of the would-be suicide to shuffle off this mortal coil.—The cause assigned for the rash act is not stated.

Be careful when you come to town to go to the right corner for your dry goods There's all the difference in the world. Wood & Williams across from the new brick hotel, will treat you pleasantly and show you a fine stock of goods at cheaper rates, than any shoddy establishment you can find. Try them.

There is to be several fine races to come off at the Fair Grounds, at Waterloo, on the Fourth. Tom Hunter and several other fine horses will represent and a slow race, that is, the slowest horse the winner, will add fun to the occasion.

A postal card was received at our postoffice last week, addressed to the "Prettiest Girl in Town." It has been claimed by 38 young ladies, and our Nasby has been compelled to vacate the "ranch" several times to escape the vengeance of those to whom he refused to deliver the card.

Brick is now the cry. Work on several houses cannot be commenced until more brick are made. There is a large demand for good brick here, and there is certainly money in manufacturing them. Brick makers should be secured and enough brick made to meet the large demand.

The new postal law requiring postage to be paid on newspapers delivered in the county where published, will undoubtedly be repealed at an early day in the next session of Congress. Readers of the COURIER are, therefore, advised to pay postage for no longer than six months in advance, which will be ten cents.

Our old friend Charley Gillett, of Waterloo, met with a bad accident last week As he was crossing the track with a team a hand car came along and struck the hind wheels turning the wagon over and throwing Charley out, breaking his right leg below the knee and dislocating a shoulder.

Wood & Williams, headquarters for dry goods, are doing a fine business, because their prices and goods suit the people.—The way we know these gentlemen will do a fine business is to judge from their past success in establishing themselves, by their correct and honorable manner of doing business. Their stock will comprise everything in the line of dress goods tickings, sheetings, etc. Go and see them.

The Marshall has made some very valuable improvements on our streets this spring. In fact he has shown more energy and enterprise than a dozen of his successors. We give him due credit and hope that he will still go on in the good work. For fear some of our readers do not know who is our present Marshal we inform them that it is H. E. Altenburg Esq., as liberal a gentleman as we have in town except in his con founded politics.

THE NEW FENCE.—The $300 fence around the Court yard now stands out in bold relief and gladdens the heart of a virtuous and happy people. Its primative beauty is striking, and under the mellowing influences of the shimmering sunshine is dazzling unlike the walls of Troy, it was built for beauty, and when we contemplate the refined imagery of the projectors we are led to exclaim, How mysterious are the ways, etc. It is a very good job for the kind and the contractor, Mr. D. Culver, has done the work in a substantial and workmanlike manner. It does not look so bad after all, and small favors should be thankfully received.

The accomplished editor of the Angola Republican wants to know why the DeKalb county levy is 40 cents and their county only 20 cents. It the first place our assessment has been increased only one third while their assessment has been increased over three thirds. In the next place it takes more to run this county than it does our neighbors. Last year one item of bridge, in Steuben amounted to about $1300, while ours was $3100.—Another item that of interest on county orders which has been accumulating for years past took over $8000 last year and a few more minor things will, we trust, be sufficient to enlighten the gentleman in regard to his 20 cent item.

A young man from the country was captivated by a very finely wrought ladies under-chemise (we believe that is what the thing is called) hanging in the show window of one of our millinery stores that is not kept by a man, and purchased it. He took it home and put it on. It did'nt fit. He tried it on rear part before. That was worse than ever. He could'nt bring his two hands together without cutting his arms off at the shoulders, and the garment on the garment on the back was as full as if it had been made for a hunchback. He returned the article and said it did'nt fit. The milliner wanted to know why, and he told them it was too full breasted in the back. And that 's all we know about it.

The Press of last week says that on Monday, the remains of a man were found in the barn of a man named Moore, at North Benton, Steuben county, nine miles North west of this place. The body had been in posession of Moore for six weeks, and its presence was detected by stench it caused in the neighborhood. Moore says his son is a doctor at Auburn, and that the body is one he had procured for dissection. On inquiry, however, it seems that no doctor or medical student of that name lives in Auburn. The citizens, or a considerable portion of them, doubt the explanation given by Moore; but, strange as it may appear, allowed the body to be buried without a legal investigation. Some of them were here on Monday, after advice, and we told them give the facts to the Corroner of Steuben county. The body was not recognized by those who seen it.

A new era is about to be inaugurated in the public schools of this place. The Trustees have had the building thoroughly cleaned and painted, new blackboards, new seats and other additions made, that will contribute to the comfort and convenience of all concerned.

Prof. H. S. Lehr, of the Normal academy of Ada, Ohio, has been engaged as principal, and if half is true that is said of him the school interest here will certainly not suffer at his hands. He is known here by many as an accomplished and successfu teacher, one who is well qualified to bring up our school to the highest standard.—Prof. A. H. Huffman of the same place will assist him, besides an able corps of assistants already engaged.

There is no good reason why we should not have as good educational facilities as there is in Northern Indiana, the only drawback being our school building which we hope soon to see succeeded by a handsome and commodious brick edifice. Auburn has always been largely patronized from abroad and with the commencement of the new regime we expect to this patronage increased. It behoves us to do all we can individually to maintain and foster this interest and especially to encourage the new administration in bringing about the greatest possible success.

Notes on the Wing.

EDITOR COURIER: Thinking a discription of a short trip through different parts of our State, might not be uninteresting to many of the readers of your paper, I have taken a few notes on the wing for that purpose. I left Butler on the 23d ult. and after enduring the rays of a meridian sun, for several hours arrived safely at Ft. Wayne; but as we are all acquainted with that place I will say nothing about it I took the cars to Decatur, Capitol town of Adams county. This is a small town located in the mud and woods. I made the acquaintace of a few of its people, where I met genial fellows, especially Bart, of the Burt House. They are erecting a splendid Court House at this place at the cost of $85,000. Get to Portland county seat of Jay county. Found a little town similar to Decatur, not so much and rather better buildings. Next to Richmond the metropolis of Wayne Co. Passed Winchester, capitol of Randolf Co. From this south I began to notice the effect of the crops. Corn was large, grass out and wheat looking yellow The large bridge at Richmond attracted my attention. It is over 400 feet long and 80 feet high. This place claims a population of 13,000. I then left Richmond for the Capitol, and a ride of three hours arrived safely. The next day I took a ride over the city and was much surprised at the vast improvements made in two years.

The Ninety Seventh Anniversary.

The resistless flight of time has brought us again to our grand holiday, and tomorrow morning will usher in its ninety-seventh anniversary.

The stripes and stars will be floted on a thousand hights from the mountain to either sea, and the thunders of a thousand canon will announce the joyful fact throughout our land. Almost a century has passed away since from the steps of the State House, at Philadelphia, was announced the "declaration of rights," which thrilled the hearts and quickened the pulses of the crowd assembled there, and as the clarion notes of the old bell rang out the joyful tidings, the cry was taken up, and from the brave and true gathered around there arose one grand univesal shout, until the very air resounded with the cry—the burden of which was taken from the prophetic inspiration inscribed upon the clanging bell—"Proclaim liberty throughout the land, to all the inhabitants thereof."

Looking back through the dim vista of the years which have flown, and noting gigantic strides of a country then disenthralled and thoroughly united, we can well glory to-day in the stern and unflinching bravery of that band of patriots who pledged "their lives, and sacred honor" in the cause of the then inchoate, but now glorious Republic of America. How the blood tingles in the veins when we read of that immortal band, as they recited the wrongs and oppression of tyranny, and calling upon the Supreme Judge of the Universe to witness the rectitude of their intentions, they mutually absolved themselves from all further allegiance to the "mother country," and were from henceforth a "free and independent" people.

The actors in that drama have all long ago been gathered to their native dust; death dropped the curtain over their busy and eventful lives, and in the quiet grave yard they sleep in their unbroken rest—heeding not the falling leaf, the icy winds the budding or blooming of beauteous flowers; but as the revolutions of time sweep on and bring about the annual recurrence of the day, their memory is brought back as fresh and green as if it were but yesterday they were laid to rest.

Our forfathers met in the city of Philadelphia to devise means to sunder the ties that bound them to the mother country, which had then become burthensome through the tyrannies imposed upon them by the arbitrary and high-handed course of George III. They met in convention to declarge against the outrages and usurpations of a ministry drunk with power, who had oppressed the American colonies by burthensome taxation, and by quartering large armies in their midst to overawe and subject them to all manner petty tyrannies. These burthens they bore until to bear them longer would have been a sin against God and posterity. A convention composed of such men as John Hancock and his patriotic compeers convened on this memorable occasion, in the city of Philadelphia, and issued to the world a declartion renouncing all allegiance to crown of a hated and despotic tyrant.

At 2 o'clock p. m., July 4th, 1776, the great bell in the dome of Independence Hall, Philadelphia, rang out its peals:—"Proclaim Liberty throughout the world, and to all the inhabitants thereof!" At that hour a nation was born. Three millions of white men, previously slaves to British rule, were declared to be free by the Continental Congress. It was a glorious day! The whole land resounded with the cheers of the people determined to be free.

"And for the support of this Declaration, with the firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor," said the Representatives of Thirteen United Colonies of North America. The declaration they thus pledged themselves to support proclaimed to the world that the Colonies were oppressed, that they were determined to threw off the oppression; that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness were among the inalienable rights of man, and that the Colonies were and of right ought to be free and independent States.

This declaration and this pledge were not mere words. To maintain them both brave men, few in numbers, illy equipped and slender in resources, went forth to the field of battle to fight against fearful odds, and under the most discouraging circumstances.

Under the result of these heroic acts we are the greatest nation in the known world because we are a "free and independent" people. And to-day thousand of hearts shall throb in unison over the victory then won, over the triumphs since achieved, and a grateful people will bow in reverence and hasten to honor the patriotism and and memory of the noble dead, with thanksgiving and praise for this great and good government, and for a moment ignore all Salary Grabbers and Credit Mobilers.

How to Secure a Good Instrument.

The introduction of the renting plan in our own city and vicinity has proved a wonderful success, demonstrating its usefulness in providing families with instruments.

We can refer to hundreds who would have never had an organ or piano in their house but for this plan. It recommends itself to the mechanic, clerk, school teacher, laborer and others who have a state salary, part of which they can devote to the payment of an instrument. It has also been found convenient to merchants who have all their capital actively employed, and do not wish to draw the full price of instrument from their business at one time. The success of this plan leads us to extend the limits to which the plan has been confined, and we are now prepared to furnish instruments to all who want one, on the best terms we possibly can. For the purpose of giving information we annex some of the usual terms for for an instrument on this plan.

We do not present these as our only terms, but as the most usual; and if these do not suit, any one wanting an instrument will tell us the best they can do, we will accommodate them if we possibly can We should be pleased to have any one wanting an instrument to write to us and we will do the best we can for them.

We warrant entire satisfaction, and any one ordering an instrument will receive as good a one as if present to select it for themselves, otherwise it may be returned at our expense.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY has been sentenced to pay a fine of $100, and the costs of prosecution, as the penalty for illegal voting....The colored men of New York are clamoring for places on the police force....The Maine Republican State Convention nominated Nelson Dingley, Jr., for Governor, passed resolutions protesting against the granting of the public lands to railroads and canals, denouncing the salary grab, and condemning all Credit Mobilier transactions.

THE election officers who received the vote of Susan B. Anthony have been fined $55 each....Horace F. Clark, President of the Michigan Southern and Union Pacific railroads, died in New York, last week, after a brief illness. Mr. Clark was a son-in-law of Commodore Vanderbilt. He was 58 years old....Ex-Police Superindent Kennedy, of New York, is dead....Joe Burton, colored, was hanged at Georgetown, Del., on Friday, for the crime of rape....Somebody at Louisville, Ky., forwarded to President Grant, at Long Branch, for his son Jesse, a live alligator, four feet long. Jesse declined the present, and the President paid the express charges ($14), leaving the alligator with the baggageman. The monster soon afterward became "dejected" and died.

PASSAIC, N. J., and Pottsville, Penn., were each visited by a disastrous conflagration last week....Forest fires have been raging in Central Pennsylvania and Northern New York. Thousands of acres of valuable timber have been destroyed....New York State is actually without a Senate, or a constitutional provision for one, the Legislature at its late session, by a bungling piece of legislation, having abolished the Senate altogether....Stokes' trial has been postponed to October.

BEN BUTLER is making a lively canvass for the Governorship of Massachusetts, and is confident of being elected....Two stables, one near Philadelphia, containing twelve valuable trotters, and the other at Buffalo, filled with fifty horses, were destroyed by fire last week, the horses perishing in the flames....Lewis Tappan, one of the early pioneers of the Abolition movement, died last week in New York, aged 85....In a hurdle race at Jerome Park, New York, last week, one of the horses fell, killing the rider.

THE trial of young Walworth for the murder of his father is in progress at New York....The Juniata has left New York in search of the Polaris and the missing Buddington party. Her crew numbers 130, and her equipment contains everything that is needed for Arctic navigation.

THE Connecticut Legislature has fixed the rate of interest at 7 per cent....The effects of the Alden Type-Setting and Distributing Machine Company were sold at New York, the other day, at auction, for $9,500. It is said that the inventor sunk at least $500,000 in perfecting his invention....It is proposed to have a grand reunion at West Point, next year, of all the living graduates of that institution.

The West.

ALBERT KEEP, of Chicago, succeeds John F. Tracy as President of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad....The wheat crop of California this year is expected to exceed 22,000,000 bushels....Burlington, Iowa, was visited by a terribly destructive conflagration on the morning of the 19th of June. The Palmer Opera-House, Court-House, two hotels, and a large number of stores were destroyed, four blocks being burned. The loss is about $300,000, half of which, it is thought, is covered by insurance....Two men were sleeping together in a store at Santa Rosa, Cal. One dreamed that a burglar was robbing the store, and he took his pistol from his pillow and shot his bedfellow, killing him....The town of Maysville, Mich., has been almost totally destroyed by fire.

IN Chicago, the other day, two men had a dispute about the ownership of a 25 cent measuring rule. One struck the other in the forehead with his fist, from the effects of which he died in a few hours....Destructive forest fires have been raging in Northern Michigan.

THE managers of the principal railway lines running into Chicago have signed a paper agreeing to issue no more passes except to their own employes and their families traveling on their own roads. All passes now outstanding will be allowed to continue in force until their expiration, Dec. 31, and will not be renewed. The following roads have entered into the agreement: Chicago and Northwestern, Chicago and Iowa, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, Rock Island, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, Chicago and Alton, Illinois Central....Michigammi, a mining settlement of 800 inhabitants on the shore of Lake Superior, took fire last week from the burning woods which surrounded it, and was destroyed. The people to save their lives sought refuge in the lake, but a number were overtaken by the flames, and a dozen or more were roasted to death....The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad has promulgated its new schedule of rates, to conform to the new Illinois railway law. The principle has been adopted of fixing a certain rate per mile for the various classes of freight, and then applying this rate by sections of two miles and a half up to twenty-five miles, and to sections of five miles for distances exceeding twenty-five miles. The application of this tariff will test the effect of the pro rata provision, bring out its merits and show its defects....Public advertisement was given in the Chicago papers, the other day, that the corn in certain bins in two North Side elevators was hot. The announcement had an instant effect upon the corn market, the price depricating an average of 11 cents a bushel. As there are some 4,000,000 busels in store in the city, the loss is considerable. The decline also followed the corn in transit between Chicago and New York, and to some extent, the corn at all points in the East. As a whole, there was probably a fall of 11 cents per bushel on not less than 10,000,000 bushels of corn, equal to the annihilation of value in the hands of the holders of $1,100,000. The Tribune, in its financial, says: "The great feature in local trade and finance, to-day, was the panic and decline in prices of corn, wheat, and provisions. In fact, there was a general crash in prices of nearly all kinds of products dealt in in this market. The aggregate loss will be large, though but a small portion of it will fall in this city. Perhaps the heaviest losses are in pork, which has been held up by speculation—at a much higher price than justified by the prices of hogs—ever since last winter."

LATE heavy rains in Western Wisconsin render the crop prospects in that region very favorable....A daughter of Robert Everson, of Plymouth, Mich., essayed to kindle a fire with kerosene. She succeeded admirably, enveloping herself, father and mother in flames. The two former are dead, and the mother will probably lose her arms....Immense fields of wheat and oats in Osceola, O'Brien, Clay and adjoining counties of Iowa, have been destroyed by grasshoppers....A dispatch to a Chicago paper says there were upward of thirty persons burned at Michigammi and Spur Mine villages, in Michigan, and that several more were drowned in the lake, having fled thither from the flames.

THE public schools of Cincinnati have long been troubled by the question whether the reading of the Bible could legally be made compulsory. The matter was carried to the courts, and the Ohio Supreme Court has just decided that the Constitution of the State has no bearing on the question one way or another.

MR. RODDY, of the village of Burlington, near St. Louis, the other day killed two burglars, and fatally wounded a third, while they were attempting to rob his store.

Washington.

THE report of the Secretary of the Navy, embodying the results of his investigation into the cruise of the Polaris, has been published. It affords little or no information that has not been collected by reporters and correspondents from the party on the ice-floe and already given to the public. Secretary Robeson has no doubt that Capt. Hall's death was due solely to natural causes, and that the separation of the Polaris from the ice-floe was the result of unavoidable circumstances....The Postmaster-General has directed that all postal cards which cannot be delivered to the person addressed shall be immediately returned to the writer without charge....The Secretary of War telegraphed to Gen. Sheridan, the other day, that the Government has decided not to return the Kickapoo Indians captured by Gen. Mackenzie.

THE revised rules projected by the new Civil Service Commission have been examined and approved by the Cabinet, and are now made public. One of them declares that, while it is not the purpose of the rules and regulations either to restrict the power of removal or to extend the tenure of service, such power will not be exercised arbitarily, and therefore application must not be entertained by any authority having the duty of nomination or appointment, for the removal of any person in the civil service, nor will any person be removed for the mere purpose of making a place for any other person. The following are extracts from the rules:

The grouping heretofore made for the Executive Department at Washington is modified by striking out the words "female clerks, copyists, and counters at $900 a year." These places being below the grade of clerkships of class 1, selections may be made by the appointing power at discretion from the list of those reported competent, being at liberty to give the preference to such as may be justly regarded as having the highest claims to public consideration by reason of the loss of support or property, occasioned by the death or disability of any person in defense of the Union in war or in other public service of the Government.

Applicants for appointment as cashiers of Collectors of Customs, cashiers of Assistant Treasurers, cashiers of Postmasters, superintendents of money-order divisions in postoffices, and other custodians of large sums of public money for whose fidelity another officer has given official bonds, may be appointed at discretion; but this rule shall not apply to any appointment to a position grouped below the grade of Assistant Teller.

In cases of defalcation or embezzlement of the public money, or other emergency calling for immediate action, where the public service would be materially injured unless the vacancy is promptly filled without resorting to the methods of election and appointment prescribed by the existing regulations, or where a vacancy happens at a place remote and difficult of access, and the methods prescribed for filling it cannot be applied without causing a delay injurious to the public service, the appointment may be made at discretion; but this rule shall not apply to any place which is provided to be filled under the rules of competitive examination.

For the purpose of bringing the examinations for civil service as near to the residences of those desiring to be examined as the appropriation at the command of the President will warrant, and for the further purpose of facilitating, as far as practicable, the making of selections for such service equally from the several portions of the Union, while at the same time preserving the principle of promoting merit as tested by fair competition, it is provided that the United States shall be grouped into five districts. The President will employ or designate a suitable person to be Chief Examiner, whose duty it shall be, subject to the supervision of the Civil Service Commission, to promote uniformity in preparing for, conducting, reporting, and grading the examinations by said Boards at Washington, and to prepare for, attend, supervise and report the examination herein provided to be held elsewhere than at Washington. The district examination shall be held not more than twice in any one year in the same district, except in Washington, where an examination may be held in respect of each department as frequently as the head of such department, subject the approval of the President, may direct; and all persons so examined in Washington, wherever they may reside, shall be entered on the record of persons eligible for appointment equally as if examined elsewhere.

WASHINGTON dispatches announce that the President has about decided to appoint ex-Attorney-General Hoar to the vacant Chief Justiceship....The Secretary of the Navy went to New York last week to superintend the fitting out of the steamer Tigress, which is to go in search of the missing Polaris....The War Department invites proposals for supplying 250,000 head-stones for the graves of the Union dead....The free delivery of letters has been ordered at Peoria, Des Moines and Davenport.

IT is stated that the suspended Commissioners to the Vienna Exposition, Gen. Van Buren and others, will appeal to the next Congress for an investigation of the case....The Postoffice Department has ordered the establishment of 93 additional money-order offices—seven of which are in Ohio, eight in Indiana, thirty-three in Illinois, ten in Missouri, twenty-two in Michigan, eleven in Wisconsin, and sixteen in Iowa. This increases the total number of money-order postoffices to 3,069. ....The official report of the Agricultural Bureau on the wheat crop shows a large increase of acreage over last year, with good prospects for more than the average yield per acre. The report on cotton shows the increase average of acreage over last year nearly 12 per cent. The present condition of the crop stands as follows: Florida, 2 per cent. above the annual average. All the others fall below, viz.: Virginia and Alabama, 7 per cent.; North Carolina, 15; South Carolina, 12; Georgia and Louisiana, 6; Mississippi and Arkansas, 8; Texas, 14; and Tennessee, 10. The acreage cultivated will fall considerably below that planted. The weather generally during the last week in May was favorable, and there was a hopeful prospect that the condition of the crop would rapidly improve. The worms and caterpillars have made an early appearance at various points, and are causing considerable apprehension of destructive ravages. No estimate of the crop is made.

THE Commissioner of Pensions has promulgated the following new and important order: "On and after the 1st day of July, the consideration of all invalid increase cases will be suspended by the Pension Office, until the biennial examination, which takes place on the 4th of September next. Medical examinations, however, will continue in such cases, so that no applicant may suffer loss as to the commencement of increase by reason of date of the medical examination. Meantime all original cases upon files will be considered and disposed of so far as the evidence will warrant."....A Washington special says: "The official life of Minister Jay will terminate on the close of the Vienna Exposition, as he has long been marked by the President for removal."....It is sated that the Secretary of War, under advice of the Attorney-General, has decided to commence suit against Gen. O. O. Howard for a certain amount of money for which he failed to account as Commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau....Information has been recieved at the capital that the Cheyenne and Kiowa Indians are off their reservations. These are the savages to conciliate whom Santanta and Big Tree are to be turned loose. Gen. Their loss was 600 killed and 300 wounded, while the Republicans had only four killed and sixty wounded....E. B. Eddy, a lumber dealer of Ottawa, Ontario, has failed for $1,000,000.

The Growing Crops—A Flattering Outlook.

The following is the official report of the Agricultural Department on the condition of the grain crop, as telegraphed from Washington on the 27th June:

Wheat—The winter wheat is mostly harvested. Of 752 counties from which reports have been received, 202 are above the average, 168 average, and 381 below. Of 300 counties reporting spring wheat, 103 are above the average, 115 average, and 83 below. The average winter wheat is somewhat increased, though many fields have been winter-killed and plowed up for spring wheat and other crops. The average spring wheat is very largely increased, and especially in the Northwest is unusually promising. The indications of the crop of 1873 are considered at least equal to those of June, 1872, when the Department estimated the prospective crop at 220,000,000 bushels. The subsequent conditions of growth raised the first estimate of the year, in the annual report of 1872 not yet published, to 249,997,020 bushels. With equally favorable conditions the yield may be safely set down at 250,000,000 bushels. Insect ravages, however, are reported in spring wheat, indicating serious loss in some localities.

Oats—An increased average and an improved yield of oats are indicated in the majority of the States. The maximum condition, 118, is found in Virginia, and the minimum, 83, in California.

Rye—Twenty-four States report an increased, and ten a decreased, average. Of winter rye, sixteen States report the condition above the average, two an average, and the remainder below. The maximum condition, 110, is in California, and the minimum, 89, in Illinois. Spring rye is reported in only ten States; the maximum condition, 108, in Kansas, and the minimum, 79, in Indiana.

Barley—The condition of winter barley varies from 65 in Kentucky to 108 in Kansas. It ranges from 83 in Indiana to 114 in Missouri.

There are no returns of hops.

THE PROSPECT IN THE NORTHWEST.

The Chicago Times publishes reports from different points in each of the Northwestern States showing the condition and prospects of the crops. The advices are of a very encouraging character, and indicate that the yield of most kinds of grain, and especially that of wheat, will be considerably above the average product.

THE MICHIGAN FRUIT PROSPECT.

Michigan fruit-growers report to the State Pomological Society, in session last week, that they expect much less than an average yield. The crop in the St. Joe peach region will be one-third less than usual.

AN astronomist who has counted them and knows, says only about 6,000 stars are visible to the naked eye in the clearest night. An ordinary opera-glass for inspecting calves and other animals, brings about 20,000 into view, while the largest telescope in existence renders 25,000 visible.

POUNDS sterling were substituted for francs in the telegraphic announcement of the sum the Shah of Persia intends to "go through" in his summer's trip. Instead of $25,000,000, it is only $1,000,000; so, in place of being a spendthrift and profligate, it appears that the Shah is a parsimonious old miser.

IN speaking of King Mirambo, of Central Africa, the Court Journal says that a monarch who would take the trowsers sent from missionary-inspired ladies of Aberdeen, split them in halves, fill them with sand, and make a war club of of each leg, cannot be forgiven upon the ground of mere eccentricity.

IT has been shown by careful investigation that the amount of heat received from the sun in one minute is sufficient to raise the temperature of five and a half cubic miles of water to one degree of centegrade—or an amount of heat equivalent to a force required to do the work of two thousand steam engines of one hundred horse-power each, working continuously for four thousand years.

LIZZIE AND LYDIA TAYLOR five years ago entered the office of the Charlotte Republican as compositors. They afterwards went into the Battle Creek Journal office, and since that time they have earned from $8 to $20 per week. From their earnings they have supported their mother; as housekeepers they have lived well, bought a piano, taken music lessons, gave $100 toward the building of the Baptist Church at Battle Creek, and have saved $1,200. They are unmarried.

THE following story is told to illustrate the strictness with which the Cunard Steamship Line is managed: The captain of one of their New York ships having lately married, asked leave to take his wife with him on one voyage. This was granted, but, on going to take command when the ship was ready for sea, he found one of his brother captains on board, from whom he learned that, though the company had no objections to his taking his wife to America, they were not willing to trust him with the ship, too.

Very "Frenchy."

A story is told of a French gentleman, who, having lost the bulk of his property through the rascality of friends in whom he trusted, crowned it all by the loss of his mental balance, and for the remainder of his days found his only delight in riding in omnibuses and passing fares from passengers to the driver, taking care when change was returned to add to it a sou or two out of his own pocket, and watch the effect on the receiver. In nine cases out of ten, as the story goes, the passenger, counting over his change, and finding, as he supposed, that the driver had cheated himself, would look bewildered for a moment, and then pocket the change with a quiet chuckle. The special delight of the lunatic was to satisfy himself in this way that nine-tenths of his fellow-men were dishonest, if they only had the opportunity.

INFLUENCE OF SEX ON CRIME.—An investigation into the nature and cause of crimes in Massachusetts has developed the rather unpleasant fact that a little over seventy per cent. of the females arrested or imprisoned are guilty of offences against morality, and that for every 100 men who have been sent to prison 182 times, 100 females have been sent there 342 times. The other day a woman was sent for the tenth time to the House of Correction; and one of the Boston judges knows a woman, a good tailoress, who has been drunk nearly all the time during the past fifteen years, excepting during the months she was in limbo. Woman should take her sex bodily in hand and raise her in the social scale. Perhaps the chief fault lies in women, who are more susceptible to temptation than men.

North Pole.

The following extract from the report of the Polaris investigation will be found interesting:

On board the Polaris are specimens of drift-wood picked up on or near the shores of Newman's Bay and Polaris Bay, among which Mr. Myers thought he recognized the walnut, the ash, and the pine. Among numerous facts that appear to be shown by the testimony elicited on the examination, we may mention as one of much interest, that the dip of the needle amounted to 45 deg., and its deviation 96 deg., being less than at Port Frulke and Renselaer Harbor, as given by Dr. Kane and Dr. Hayes. The rise and fall of tides was carefully observed, the average being about five and one-half feet. The greatest depth of water noted was about 100 fathoms. The existence of a constant current southward was noticed by the expedition, its rapidity varying with the season and locality. The winter temperature was found to be much milder than was expected, the minimum being 50 degrees below zero in January, although March proved to be the coldest month. The prevailing winds were northeast, although there were occasional tempests from the southwest. High winds were noticed, however, from all points of the compass. Rain was occasionally observed, only on land, however, the precipitation presenting itself over the ice in the form of snow. During the summer, the extent of both lands and elevations was bare of snow and ice, excepting patches here and there in the shade of the rocks. The soil during this period was covered with a more or less dense vegetation of moss, with which several arctic plants were interspersed, some of them of considerable beauty, but entirely without scent, many small willows scarcely reaching the dignity of shrubs. The rocks noticed were of a schistose or slate nature, and in some instances contained fossil plants, specimens of which were collected. Distinct evidences of former glaciers were seen in localities now bare of ice, these indications consisting in the occurrence of terinnial and lateral moraines. Animal life was found to abound, musk oxen being shot at intervals throughout the winter. Geese, and duck and other water fowls, including plovers and other wading birds, abounded during the summer, although species of land birds were comparatively few. No fish were seen, although nets and lines were frequently called into play in obtaining them. The waters, however, were found filled to an extraordinary degree with marine invertebrata, including jelly fish and shrumps. Seals were very abundant. Numerous insects were observed also, especially several species of butterflies. Also flies, bees, and insects of like character.

The Oldest City in the World.

Damascus is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore. Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have dissappeared from the Tigris and the Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a center of trade and travel—an island of verdure in the desert; "a presidential capital," with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun; the street, which is called Strait, in which it was said "he prayed," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did a thousand years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass, and the water-wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still "occupy" these "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mohammed surveyed from a neighboring height, and was afraid to enter, "because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part, he was resolved not to have it in this world," is to-day what Julian called the "eye of the East," as it was, in the time of Isaiah, "the head of Syria." It is still a city of flowers; the streams of Lebanon and the "silk of gold" still murmer and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syrian gardens.

Oh, the Girls!

The girls in the principal cities in this country are noted as follows:

Baltimore, the handsomest.

Boston, the most intellectual.

New York, the gayest and most expensive in dress.

Washington, the most airy and superficial.

Philadelphia, the most refined and ladylike.

Chicago, the fastest and most dissipated.

St. Louis, the most reckless.

New Orleans, the most truthful.

Cincinnati, the sweetest and most amiable.

Louisville, the proudest.

Detroit, the wildest.

Cleveland, the most graceful and entertaining in conversation.

San Francisco, the most indifferent.

Richmond, the most anxious to be loved.

Mobile, the most liberal entertainers.

Hartford, the best musicians.

Buffalo, the dullest.

Rochester, the longest hair.

ENDLESS BURNING LAMP.—Among the lost arts is that of the endless burning lamp. It is said that in the time of Edward VI. a lamp was discovered in the grave of Constantine at York, which had been burning since his burial to that time—a period of 1,200 years. Also, in the grave of Tullia, daughter of Cicero, was found a burning lamp, which was lighted at her death 1,550 years before. It went out as soon as daylight was admitted. Yet it is certainly a clever device of the ancients to invent a lamp which would illuminate, through all time, the home of their dead.

A HEN SWALLOWS AN EAGLE.—A Missouri paper wants its readers to believe that a gold dollar was found in the crop of a hen, which the misguided fowl had swallowed before the firing upon Fort Sumter. She failed to make a "corner" on her gold deposit, and finally lost her life in trying to resume specie payment.

A Man Who Knew One Hundred and Fourteen Languages.

[illegible] Mezzofanti was without doubt, the greatest master of languages who ever lived. He was born in the year 1774, and his father, a carpenter, destined him for the same calling.

He worked on a bench standing within hearing of some boys in Greek and Latin, and without knowing the Greek alphabet, or even looking into a Greek or Latin book, he picked up by ear a considerable knowledge of both languages, thus discovering to himself and others his wonderful aptitute for linguistic studies, and attracting the notice of a priest who arranged with him for his education. In college he mastered Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Spanish, French, Swedish, German, Arabic, and Coptic, and at the age of 23 was appointed professor of Arabic in the University at Bologna.

During the Napoleonic wars he was a constant visitor to the hospitals, whether he went mainly for the purpose of learning the various languages spoken by the prisoners there, among whom he found Bohemians, Russians, Walloahs, Servians, Hungarians, Croates and Poles, and from them he learned to speak fluently all their languages.

Late in life he went to Rome, first as keeper of the library of the Vatican, and afterwards as a Cardinal. Here he continued his linguistic studies, mastering Sancrit, Persian, Georgian, Welsh, Irish, Lappish, Armenian, Chinese, and a number of other tongues, and when he died, in 1849, he could speak correctly one hundred and fourteen different languages. The most astonishing part of the matter, however, was that he not only spoke these languages correctly, but knew perfectly their peculiar idioms, and was even familiar with the little local dialectic variations in each.

Lord Byron, astonished at his perfect mastery of good English, tested him with English slang, and found the Italian priest more than a match for himself, even in that, whereupon he pronounced him "a monster of languages, a Briarous of parts of speech, and a walking polyglot." Another of his admirers thought that if he had been at Babel he might have acted as interpreter for the confused host without any difficulty.

A Human Thermometer.

We want to believe that story from a Peoria paper about Mr. Henry Bull, but it is hard, very hard to accept it with perfect confidence. Mr. Bull, it is alleged, was fed upon calomel and blue pills by the doctors for a number of years, so that finally he became absolutely saturated with quicksilver. The other day, while he was standing by the side of the house, the sun suddenly came out bright and warm, and Bull began gradually to ascend. He stopped at the line of the sill of the second story and hung there, suspended in space, until a thunder storm happened to come up, which cooled the atmosphere, and then Mr. Bull slowly descended. Now he has a graduated scale marked on the gable end of his dwelling, and whenever Mrs. Bull wants to know how warm it is she ties flat-irons to Henry's legs to hold him down, and walks him around to the gable end and cuts him loose and lets him rise to eighty or ninety degrees, and when she gets the information, she lassoes him with the clothesline and hauls him down. We say we want to believe this anecdote, because it makes us happier to have perfect faith, but it is harder than believing most lies.

Narrow-Gauge.

The success of the narrow-gauge railways seems beyond question. A large majority of the roads of the West, now projected or being built, are narrow-gauge. The Denver and Rio Grande was the first one commenced on this plan. Then the Colorado Central was changed from broad to narrow gauge. The Northern Utah line, the Leavenworth and Denver, and the Southern Pacific, beginning in Texas, are among the roads of this character that are being carried forward to completion. All over the country trunk or branch roads of this gauge are being built. One will soon be completed running from St. Louis to Cairo; one from Terre Haute to Cincinnati; the Pennsylvania Central is building branch roads of the same pattern, and the Arkansas Central is being laid as a narrow-gauge. The Chicago, Millington and Western is another important line that will doubtless soon be in active course of construction. All this is pretty good evidence that the narrow-gauge is becoming popular, and that its advantages are more apparent as they become more fully known.

Stammering.

One who was a stammerer for years writes: "No stammering person ever found any difficulty in singing. The reason of this is that by observing the measure of the music, by keeping time, the organs of speech are kept in such apposition that enunciation is easy. Apply the same rule to reading or speech and the same result will follow. Let the stammerer take a sentence—say this one: 'Leander swam the Hellespont,' and pronounce it by syllables, scan it, keeping time with the finger if necessary, letting each syllable occupy the same time, thus: 'Le-an-der-swam-the-Hel-les-pont,' and he will not stammer. Let him pronounce slowly at first, then faster, but still keeping time—keeping time with words instead of syllables, and he will be surprised to find that, by a very little practice, he will read without stammering, and nearly as rapidly as persons ordinarily talk or read. Then practice this in reading and conversation until the habit is broken up. Perseverance is all that is necessary to perform a perfect cure."

WHAT CONSUMPTIVES NEED.—The late Dr. Marshall Hall, of England, said: "If I were seriously ill of consumption, I would live out doors day and night, except in rainy weather or mid-winter; then I would sleep in an unplastered log-house. Physic has no nutriment, gasping for air cannot cure you, monkey-capers in a gymnasium cannot cure you, and stimulants cannot cure you. What consumptives want is air, not physic—pure air, not medicated air—plenty of meat and bread."

A HARTFORD man has left $20,000 to found a lame horse hospital.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Flowers.

Flowers stimulate industry as well as lighten toil—for we must have them. We are cold without them, but to have them requires patient study, patient culture, and untiring determination. Every one must be studied alone. In perfection, they can be had only in connection with art and a kind of horticultural genius. Their culture is an art. How they breathe, and eat, and drink. How they vary, their species—under what laws.

Flowers are also servitors of our imagination; they bring food to the poet. They produce an atmosphere that is peculiarly conducive to rhythm. I do not know why it is color and grace of motion and delicacy of form and perfume have such a tendency to make every eighth or tenth syllable rhyme, and every line begin with a capital, but so it is. What a constant tribute poetry pays to flowers. Can you find one of the great singers who has not at least a line, and mostly a poem, in honor of floral charms? Take away noble landscapes, level down the hills, make the sun rise and set in drab, kill out the flowers—and the poet's corner would become very speedily a bean patch. Now the flowers come to the brain with a delicate touch, like the finger of a mother in sleep that takes wrinkles out of dreams—tiny children with their arms full of every imaginable grace. You can see purity, modesty, benevolence, ambition, watchfulness, patience, truth, all somewhere about your feet. But not only do they inspire much of the rhyme of life. What do you suppose must be the power of a single fuchsia in a family? It never catches the eye of the mother without resulting in a song; it calls the attention of the children, and displaces the rudeness of coarse work or vulgar contact. It doubtless has a powerful influence in making the whole family more neat, more tasteful, more courteous, more refined. I like to take out the animal—the feeding plague of eating—by putting a bouquet among the dishes.—Gardeners' Monthly.

Fattening Hogs—Maintaining their Appetites.

It not unfrequently happens that hogs put up to fatten show a loss of appetite for weeks at a time, eating but little and wasting a good deal. Messrs. Lawes and Gilbert, the well-known English farmers, have encountered this difficulty, more or less, in addition to positive disease, and after many experiments have prepared a compound which they state has been very effectual. The following are its ingredients, and the proportions: 20 lbs. finely sifted coal ashes; 4 lbs. common salt; 1 lb. superphosphate of lime. They are duly mixed and put into a trough where the hogs can have free access to them at all times. In a case where three pigs were troubled with swellings and difficulty of breathing, they consumed nine pounds of this mixture during the first fortnight, six pounds the second, and nine again during the third. The expense of materials is very light. Those who have occasion to test the prescription would confer a favor on others by reporting the result.

Hiving Bees.

A bee-keeper gives the following plan to prevent a swarm of bees from getting far away from the hive, with the statement that after ten years' experience he has never known it to fail once. As soon as they show the first symptoms of swarming, stop up most of the outlets of the hive so as to force them to be a considerable time coming out. The swarm being made up in part of young bees, many of whom cannot fly well, and as nothing can be done by the swarm until all are out, they fly about in the air; by prolonging their exit the feeble ones become tired, and finding their plans frustrated, they alight to rearrange their journey. If they can leave the old hive all at once, they care very little about alighting.

Salt for Pear Trees.

Salting around pear trees to prevent the blight is becoming a general practice in Central New York. From 400 to 600 pounds per acre are regularly applied each year, with satisfactory results. A correspondent of the Small Fruit Recorder writes as follows on this subject: "Last spring I put up a small shovelful of the refuse material from the salt works—which is composed, I believe, of salt, lime and ash—around a four year old pear tree. It has made a very thrifty growth, and the leaves are all free from blight or spot, and have a very glossy, healthy look; while others of the same lot, manured with barnyard manure, have grown but little, and the foliage is spotted and dull."

Importance of Salt.

Notwithstanding the assertions of a certain school of hygienists, salt is absolutely necessary to the health of all vegetable eating animals. Those living exclusively on flesh get the saline matters contained therein, and consequently do not need salt. Scientific investigations have proved that a portion of the blood consists of common salt. This is continually evolved through the kidneys and pores of the skin. The bile and the cartilages of the body contain soda, one of the constituents of salt. If the supply is cut off, digestion cannot be properly carried on, and the animal suffers. Farm animals should always have a supply of this necessary mineral, that they may take it at will; in which case they will not eat more than they naturally require.

Smoke It in Sugar.

In my own case a rusty nail had made a bad wound in the bottom of my foot. The pain and nervous irritation was severe. This was all removed by holding it in the smoke for fifteen minutes and I was able to resume my reading in comfort. We have often recommended it to others with like results. Last week one of my men had a finger nail torn out by a pair of ice tongs. It became very painful, as was to have been expected. Held in sugar smoke for twenty minutes, the pain ceased, and it promises speedy recovery.—Exchange.

Houses for Farm Laborers.

Many of our best farmers are coming to the conclusion that it does not pay to keep their homes as boarding-houses for their farm hands, and are erecting houses in which the men can board with their own families, thus releasing the farmer's wife from much of her proverbial drudgery. It works well in other kinds of business, why not in farming?—Exchange.

Large Fowls.

Persons desirous of obtaining large fowls, equally good as layers of large eggs, and also combining good table qualities with early maturity, and being perfectly hardy, should cross the Dorking hens with a small Brahma cock. The cross between the Dorkings and dark Brahmas is also good for the table, being also easily raised, but their eggs are small.

Mixed Swindling.

California has this drama: One Whitney, having a sum of money in bank, and owing an equal sum, consulted one Dixon as to the best means of avoiding payment. Dixon promptly counseled that Whitney should withdraw the money and lodge it securely in his hands, so that it could not be attached by legal process. This was done; but when Whitney desired to withdraw the sum from his ingenious and guileless friend, the latter denied all knowledge of the transaction. Thereupon the despoiled Whitney craves the interposition of the law, and makes a clean breast of it. The legal myrmidons overheard Dixon, and it is at last discovered that he has made over the cash to an evil woman named Richardson, with the understanding that both are to fly, rejoining each other in a distant city, where they can diffuse the booty in peace. Searching and urgent investigation of this person disclosed the fact that she had just perfected her arrangements to throw overboard her fellow felon and run away with another man; a man of the Hoodlum color, with a taking eye and a correct taste in hair oil. Search for this young man brought to light the amusing fact that he had spent quite a portion of the money in purchasing a fugitive outfit for another young woman, who, as soon as she had got the articles, did literally and actually fly with still another young man about whom nothing is known, except that he seems to be the only one in this strange succession of criminals who has reaped any of the fruits of the original crime. Considering the extreme complication and embarrassment of everybody concerned, and the small likelihood that he will ever get any of his money back, it is possible that Whitney may now almost wish that, instead of monopolizing his capital in that secret fashion, he had quietly paid his debts with it.

A Lovely Postoffice Business in Montana.

An amusing experience which recently befell a special agent of the Postoffice Department illustrates the ideas which postmasters in the far West entertain regarding the dignity and importance of their position. The agent, commonly called "Mac," while officially visiting various offices in Montana Territory for the purpose of correcting any irregularities of postmasters, stopped at Iron Hood. Going into the postoffice he found the room divided into three sections—first a saloon, next the postoffice, and the last a faro bank. The mail bag was brought in, a rough looking customer opened it and emptied the contents on the floor. The entire crowd got down on their hands and knees and commenced overhauling the letters, among which were several registered, and selected such as they wanted. After they were through, the remaining letters were shoveled into a candle-box and placed on the bar. The special agent, thinking the office needed a little regulating, asked the bar-tender, who had received and distributed the mail, if he was postmaster. He answered, "No." "Are you the assistant postmaster?" "No." "Where is the postmaster?" "Out mining." "Where's the assistant postmaster?" "Gone to Hell's Canyon, and by thunder Bill Jones has got to run this office next week; it's his turn." The Government official then asked who he was, and demanded the keys of the office. The bartender coolly took the candle box from the bar, put it on the floor, and gave it a kick, sending it out of the door, saying: "There's your postoffice, and now git." The agent says: "Knowing the customs of the country, I lost no time in following this advice, and got." That office was discontinued.

Russia's Peaceful Revenge.

The Russians have launched an iron-clad vessel in the Black Sea. The event itself seems a trifling one, but it becomes of tremendous importance, when it is considered that the launching of the vessel is a sponge which wipes out all the bloody triumphs achieved by combined France and England in the Crimean war. One of the points which was secured by that conflict was the vacation of this sea by Russia, for the reason that its occupation by that power was a constant menace to Turkey, whose integrity England and France were—and are—vitally interested in maintaining. But, to-day, France has ample occupation in caring for its internal affairs, and in securing the vacation of its territory by the German troops. It has far more interest in the doings of MacMahon than in those of Alexander; and it has sufficient sickness demanding its attention at home, without sitting up with and caring for the sick man of the Orient.

England is not given to fighting of late, except with powerful allies. It has enough to do to watch the progress of Russia southward through Asia; and, however much it may care, can do nothing to arrest the Russian re-occupation of the Black Sea. And thus it happens that the launching of this iron-clad revenges Sebastopol, and redeems all the defeats and humiliations which Russia sustained in the Crimean war conflict.

THERE were 1,653 deaths from small-pox at St. Louis last year. The cases were 1 in 52 of the population, the deaths 1 in 262.

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

History of the Organization.

The rapid increase in numbers, and the increasing prominence and influence of the order of Patrons of Husbandry have excited no little interest in the history of the origin and progress of that influential organization. The idea was originally borrowed from an association which has existed for many years in a community of Scotch farmers in North Carolina. This Scotch society seems to have had for its objects the purchase of all needed supplies from first hands, and at wholesale rates, and the cultivation of more intimate social relations among its members. It was really nothing more than a secret co-operative, industrial and literary association. The numbers composing it were few and its influence small. Indeed, the fact that such a society had an existence was not known beyond the limits of the community affected by its institutions. It was not until the spring of 1868 that the Order of Patrons of Husbandry became known to the people of the West. During the preceding winter, Mr. H. P. Kelley, of Itasca, Minnesota, and several other leading agriculturists of the West, happening to be in Washington, had frequent interviews in relation to the interests of the farming population of the great West. It was about that period that the character and workings of the Scotch society of North Carolina became known to them. The idea was seized upon, elaborated and matured to adapt it to the more general purposes of a national order.

In the beginning of 1868, the order was introduced into the West by the organization of a grange at Itasca, Minnesota. In a short time another grange was organized in Jasper county, Iowa; a third grange soon came into existence at Waukon, Almakee county, in the same State. From the year 1868 the order made little progress until the past twelve months. A few granges were organized in Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois, but up to the beginning of the year 1872 it is estimated that the whole number of members in the four States named did not exceed seventy-five thousand. It is claimed that in the same States now, there are at least four hundred and fifty thousand patrons.

It may be interesting to the readers to know something about the internal organization of this now influential order. As before stated, the Order of Patrons of Husbandry is a secret society, no one except members being allowed to cross the threshold of their grange halls. Women as well as men are admitted to the highest degrees in the subordinate granges. Beyond the fourth degree it does not appear that females are admitted. Members admitted to the first degree are known respectively as Laborer and Maid; in the second degree as Cultivator and Shepherdess; in the third degree as Harvester and Gleaner, and in the fourth degree as Husbandman and Matron.

The fifth degree seems to be conferred only in the State Granges, and upon men only. Those who have been admitted to this degree are called members of the Pomona or Hope Grange, composed only of Masters and Past Masters of subordinate granges. The sixth degree is conferred only on members of the council of the National Grange. This council is composed of Masters and Past Masters of the State granges. The council meets once in every year. The seventh is the highest degree to which any patron can attain. It is conferred only on members of the National Senate, which is composed of members of the council who have served one yerr in that body. The emblem of this degree is Ceres. The functions of the council and senate are similar to those of representatives and senators in legislative bodies. The supreme executive authority in the order is lodged in the Master of the National Grange; but each subordinate grange has its own master, overseer, lecturer, steward, assistant-steward, chaplain, treasurer, secretary, gate-keeper, Ceres, Pomona, Flora and lady assistant steward. Officers in subordinate granges are elected to serve for one year, in State granges two, and in the National Grange five years. Subordinate granges, by the rules, must meet at least once in every month, State granges once a year, and the National Grange once in every two years.

The order seems to be intended to exercise a moral supervision over its members, and provides for the care of such as may be unfortunate. The social character of the order is made prominent, but the material interests of the class exclusively represented in its secret conclaves are, it is said, most assiduously guarded. It will be seen from the particulars given above that this order is very compactly organized, and, when taken in connection with its vast increase in numbers, its general diffusion over the whole country, and its manifestations of power and purpose, its existence constitutes a most interesting study for the sociologist as well as the publicist. The moral and intellectual welfare of its members, though strictly attended to, does not reveal the broader and deeper significance of the existence of this organization. Already in many localities has the occupation of the agents, or "middle-men," who deal in manufactured wares consumed by farmers, become obsolete. The granges have appointed middle-men of their own, through whom an interchange of products is effected at the minimum cost. In some places they have purchased or leased grain elevators. At other places they have employed forwarding agents of their own order. In Iowa they have already built an agricultural implement manufactory of extensive capacity. Thus far they claim that these enterprises have proved profitable to them in the great reduction in the expense of doing business and lessened cost of manufactured implements. But what is most significant in this movement is the rapid advance it has made. In Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, and especially in Georgia, the people are organizing granges with the same avidity which characterizes the progress of the order in the Northwest.—St. Louis Republican.

A FARMER in Harrison county, Ky., has effectually destroyed potato bugs by sprinkling tobacco juice upon them. He also sprinkles elder leaves on cabbages, and thus drives off and kills worms and bugs that infest them.

The Fire-Worshipers.

In an interesting letter from India to the Syracuse Courier, a correspondent, signing the initials "N. F. G.," says: "You have all heard of the Parsees. They are the Jews of Bombay. They are a race that was excluded from Persia as the Jews have been from many countries. Here they located. They are very industrious, and are a peculiar people. They are the traders. They buy and sell the cotton. They are the brokers, the money-lenders, and shavers. They never mingle with others. They have their own schools, and in their way are highly educated. They take care of their own poor. They have great wealth, and have elegant villas on Malober Hill, the most fashionable part of the city. They drive splendid horses and ride in elegant carriages. If the ladies and children appear on the street, they are dressed in silk. I never saw children so elegantly dressed anywhere else. Many of the young ladies are very beautiful, but are never allowed to receive visits from any but their own race. They are fond of amusements, and have a theater of their own. They are fire-worshipers. When the labors of the day are over they are seen along the shores of the sea, facing the setting sun, with their hands clasped, repeating their prayers. They have very peculiar notions of life, but their cemetery is more peculiar still. It is different from all others. We made a visit to their cemetery, not knowing at the time that no one was admitted. It is a large tract on the best part of Malober Hill. It is very valuable now, but was purchased many years ago. We made application at the gate for admission, and were refused. We appealed to a young Parsee, who happened to be passing. He was dressed in silk and very gentlemanly in appearance. He said that no Europeans were admitted. We told him that we were not Europeans, but Americans. He said he would be very happy to oblige Americans, but could not, but did consent that we should go up the road outside the inner wall, and have a view of the city and bay. The sentinel took us along the winding road, and a rupee given to him acted like a charm. It opened all the gates and passed the police. There were no Parsees in sight to stop us as we entered the prohibited inclosure. These grounds are surrounded by a wall twenty feet high, and have been used for a great number of years by this strange people. There are no monuments in the cemetery. There are three round towers about fifty feet in diameter, and fifty to sixty feet high. On the top of these towers there is an iron grate. The dead are brought to the gate and delivered to the priests, and the friends depart. The priests prepare the corpse and lay it on the grate, and it is devoured by the vultures, and the bones drop through the grate into the charnel house below. These towers or vaults are called the "Towers of Silena." We saw hundreds of vultures sitting on these towers, and the sentinel told us that they would take all the flesh from the bones of a corpse in an hour. We asked why these towers? The sentinel, pointing to one, said, "Parsee with plenty of money put there;" to another, "Parsee with but little money put there," and the other, "Parsee with no money put there." The sentinel said, when a corpse is placed on the grate, the strife and the noise of the vultures is frightful, and could be heard for a long distance. We saw those "Towers of Silena," and do not care ever to be any nearer.

Starching and Ironing.

Starch and iron shirt bosoms as usual, and when the articles are thoroughly dry, place one at a time on a narrow, hard and very smooth board, which has had one thickness of cotton cloth over it, sewed tightly; have the "polishing iron" heated so that it will not scorch, and rub it quick and hard over the surface, up and down the bosom, using only the rounded part on the front of the iron. A still higher polish may be obtained by passing a damp cloth lightly over the smooth surface, and then rubbing hard and quickly with the hot iron. I think it needs a good deal of patient practice to do this admirably, but I know it is crowned with success, and when once learned it is as easy as other ironing. A "polishing iron" is small and highly polished, with a rounded part which allows all the friction to come on a small part at one time, which develops the gloss that may be in both linen and starch. These irons may be had at our hardware stores for about seventy-five cents each; one is sufficient for a family. Collars and cuffs look nicely done in this way.

Soldier Habits.

According to good authority, MacMahon, the soldier-President of France, is a true military-republican in many of his ways, and vastly popular. He lives a retired, unostentatious life; and though he displayed extraordinary pomp when sent, a few years ago, on an embassy to Prussia, his manners are unpretending and his dress plain. He seldom appears in uniform, and the only mark of distinction he wears is the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor. His most marked characteristics are a love of children and a fondness for study. He made a triumphal entry into Milan, in 1859, with a little girl, who had offered him a nosegay, perched upon his holsters. He is probably as well versed in military history as Faidherbe, and is often busy with a child and map upon his knees. His favorite amusement is riding. In society he is shy, almost sad, and seems ill at ease. He likes to saunter about the boulevards, with his hands in his pockets, and a cigar eternally in his mouth, when he is not on horseback; and he is seen to most advantage at home, surrounded by his family.

Feeble Frenchmen.

Recent figures shed a startling light on some of the causes which doubtless led to the French defeat in the late war. It appears that the standard of height and physical condition of the French is so low that, in order to obtain ten thousand sound-bodied soldiers, fourteen thousand conscripts in the rural districts, and over twenty-four thousand in manufacturing neighborhoods, have to be drawn. That is, less than one-half of the full-grown males, in the latter localities, are capable of bearing arms. It reveals a state of disease, physical infirmity, and degeneration, for which no one could have been prepared. An English paper attributes this melancholy state of things to the severity of the toil of the French lower classes. The peasant is, in general, miserly of his time as of his money; having his own little plot, he works at it almost literally day and night, sparing only enough time on Sundays, perhaps, to attend a daybreak mass and an occasional vespers; and not only works thus indefatigably himself, but compels his sons—nay, his wife and daughters, too, for they are practically his slaves—to keep pace with him. The Breton peasant utilizes his children on the farm when they are not more than two or three years of age, and little toddling fellows, unable to walk without a stagger, may be seen driving cows to pasture, and picking grapes at vintage-time, in the Breton fields. Another cause of degeneracy, no doubt, lies in irregularity of life and unhealthiness of food. A much larger proportion of French peasants than is commonly supposed are "heavy drinkers;" and what they drink is the worst sort of cheap, fiery white wine, du pays. Absinthe is by no means unknown to them, and they eat the most indigestible of hard, sour bread, and buckwheat galettes. Their life, in short, is in too many cases divided between debauchery and exhausting toil; and the consequences are seen in the feeble bodies, the premature wrinkles and bent figures, which are but too familiar to the tourist in the French interior.

Editorial Matter.

In his address to a convention of Ohio editors assembled at Columbus, in that State, a few days ago, Mr. Oscar T. Martin, formerly of the Springfield (O.) Advertiser, told some truths about the partisan press which Messrs. Reid and Watterson, in their journalistic lectures, had forgotten to mention. Said he: "There is not an editor here or elsewhere who is not writhing in chains, who does not daily choke back sentiments of an honest heart from fear or favor. This is a bitter truth, but none the less truth. The offal that is thrown to you, in the shape of country printing, buys your silence, just as the midnight burglar buys the silence of the faithful watch-dog with meat that is thrown to it. Neither can bark; their mouths are full. You ride free to this convention over the railroad of a corporation notorious for its bad management. A complimentary to the theatre is the paltry price paid for an unfaithful and untrue critique of the performance, and you sell yourself, body and soul, for an infinitesimally less sum than Judas received for the betrayal of his Master. The public contracts, for which the exorbitant bid of a favorite on slim security is preferred to the conscientious bid of a master workman, is not exposed by the journal that advertises the bids. The rival over the way begins the howl. The fraud and corruption of your municipal bodies is not unmasked because you are a member of the ring. You quake with holy horror at the only symptom of virtue manifested by our legislators, in reforming our postal relations, whereby your privileges may be abridged, and break out in bad eruptions of double-leaded indignation, with frowning black head-lines, over the salary steal of your poverty-stricken Congressmen. On the title-page of your paper you fly such flaunting lies as 'The freedom of the press is the safeguard of the nation!' 'Truth crushed to earth &c., and you prostitute the patriot motto: 'Give me liberty or give me death.' You are bound hand and foot."—Exchange.

Gen. Meacham and the Modocs.

Gen. Meacham has been in Iowa City, and the Press, of that place, says:

"Concerning the murder of Canby and Thomas, Gen. Meacham was confident before they went to the council that they were going to their massacre. They had all been warned by 'Toby,' Riddle's squaw, but no one believed her except Meacham, who had known her for four years, and trusted her implicitly. She is a pure blooded Modoc, and her husband, Riddle, is a white Kentuckian. It is too late to regret that Canby and Thomas had not the insight into her character which enabled Meacham to trust her fidelity, for then the fatal council would not have been held. But Canby trusted nobody but the army, and the Rev. Dr. Thomas confided in nothing but Providence, while Mecham relied upon the squaw, and he was the only one who came out to tell the tale. He was shot in the crown and forehead, in the right arm and left hand, and had one of his ears nearly cut off in the attempt Hooka Jim made to scalp him. He shot one of the Schonchins and is confident he killed him, for the head was brought to camp by one of the Warm Springs. There is a family of Schonchins, which accounts for the Schonchin captured with Jack."

A New Printing Press.

Mr. Hoe has completed a new "perfecting press," which is to "knock the spots off" the Walter machine. The new press, which is now being tried and perfected, prints 24,000 copies, on both sides, in one hour. The Daily Telegraph, I am told, is to have the press as soon as perfected. The circulation of the Telegraph, with all its faults, is really immense. Its daily sale is never less than 170,000—it has reached on more than one occasion 270,000, and even 275,000 copies; and 230,000 is its ordinary sale during the busy season. I really don't know much about the circulation of journals at home, but if I am not mistaken these figures exceed those of any American daily. Some very valuable improvements have recently been made in the rapidity of the process of stereotyping the plates for newspaper presses. The Edinburgh Scotsman, which is now printed on two Walter presses at a very great speed, has its plates stereotyped for these presses in an almost incredibly short time of twelve and a half minutes for the first plate and two minutes for the subsequent ones; and for its Hoe presses it beats even this time, turning out the first plate in only eleven minutes.—London Letter.

A BRILLIANT party was lately given by an Indiana lady on the day she got a divorce from her husband. On leaving, at a late hour, each of her guests wished her "many returns of the happy occasion."

Extraordinary Physical Strength.

The strength and dexterity of the "hamals" of Constantinople in carrying enormous burdens are, says the Levant Herald, proverbial, but it is surprising to see one of these poor Eastern porters quietly plodding his way up or down some hilly street with a perfect mountain of material piled upon his back. The loads they carry are most miscellaneous, but even old residents, blasés on this point, were astonished recently to see a hamal staggering along the Grande Rue de Pera with a large four-wheeled carriage—all complete except the horses—lashed on to his porter's knot. It would be interesting to know what are the habits and diet of this powerful hamal. Is he an early riser? Is he a teetotaller? Does he smoke? and how did he bring himself into such condition that he can carry a carriage instead of requiring a carriage to carry him? His muscular powers must far exceed not only that of Milo, but even that of the famous English athlete, Thomas Topham, of Islington, who on the 21st of April, 1739, advertised himself to perform several feats of strength at the Nag's Head, Gateshead, on the 23d of that month, namely: "He bends an iron poker, three inches in circumference, over his arm, and one of two inches and a quarter round his neck; he breaks a rope that will bear 2,000 weight, and with his finger rolls up a pewter dish of seven pounds hard metal; he lays the back part of his head on one chair and his heels on another, and, suffering four men to stand on his body, he moves them up and down at pleasure; he lifts a table six feet in length by his teeth, with a 100 weight hanging at the further end of it, and lastly, to oblige the public, he will lift a butt full of water." Topham, however, did not, like the hamal of Constantinople, carry a four-wheeled carriage on his back, nor did his extraordinary strength conduce to the equanimity of his temper or to his peace of mind, if we may judge by his end, for in the obituary notices of last century it is stated that on Aug. 10, 1749, "died Thomas Topham, known by the name of the Strong Man, master of a public-house in Shoreditch, London. In a fit of jealousy he stabbed his wife, then cut his own throat and stabbed himself, after which he lived two days."

Funny Temperance Case.

In Akron, Ohio, I heard of a funny temperance case. A rum-seller whom I will call Hi Church, because he was "high" most of the time, had been sued several times for damage done by his rum on citizens of the town. One man came out drunk and smashed in a big glass window. He was too poor to pay for it, and the owner came against Church. A boy about sixteen got drunk and let a horse run away with him, breaking his arm. His father made Church pay the damage. A mechanic got drunk and was killed on the railroad track, and his wife sued Church for $2,000 and got it. A farmer got drunk and was burned in his barn on the hay. His son sued Church and recovered. Church got sick of paying out so much money for personal and property damages. It ate up all the rum-seller's profits. Still, he acknowledged the law to be a statute, and that it made him responsible for all the damage done by his rum. He used to argue, also, that sometimes his rum did people good, and then he said he ought to receive something back.

One day lawyer Thompson got to drinking. Thompson was mean, like most all lawyers, and when he died of the delirium tremens there wasn't much mourning in Akron. There wasn't anybody who cared enough for Thompson to sue Church for damages done. So, one day, Church went before the court himself.

"What does Mr. Church want?" asked the Justice.

"I tell yer what, Jedge," commenced the rum-seller, "when my rum killed that thar mechanic Johnson and farmer Mason, I cum down like a man. I paid the damage and squared up like a Christian—now didn't I, Jedge?"

"Yes, you paid the damage, Mr. Church; but what then?"

"Wall, Jedge, my rum did a good deal to'rds killin' lawyer Thompson now, and it 'pears ter me when I kill a lawyer I kinder oughter get a rebait!"

ELI PERKINS.

A Remarkable Criminal.

A convict named Moncrief Waddams has recently met death at his own hands in the New Jersey Penitentiary, whose career in life has been somewhat remarkable. According to New Jersey's traditions, this young man committed more robberies and stole more horses than any other three men in the country, and four years ago, such was the terror of his name that the farmers of New Jersey formed vigilance committees in every county to protect their stock from being carried away by him and his gang. Waddams sprang from a wealthy family in the north of England, and was graduated at Eton and Oxford with high honors. For some high-handed misdemeanor, growing out of his reckless and rollicking disposition, he was arrested at Leeds, and through family influence was released, on condition of his quitting the country. This he did, and coming to New York, he began a wild and reckless career, almost without a parallel.

POSING FOR A PHOTOGRAPH.—A farmer and his wife called at a Detroit photograph gallery to order some photographs of her, and while the operator was getting ready the husband gave the wife a little advice as to how she must act: "Fasten your mind on something," he said, "or else you will laugh and spile the job. Think about early days, how your father got in jail, and your mother was an old scolder, and what you'd have done if I hadn't pitied you! Jest fasten your mind on that!" She didn't have any photographs taken.

CLERICAL PRESUMPTION.—A Keokuk pastor told his congregation that the late tornado in Iowa was the visitation of a special providence to punish people for their sins. "We know," says the Louisville Courier-Journal, "of few sins much worse than the presumptuous familiarity which prompts a weak and erring mortal to talk about the purposes and intentions of the Deity with as much freedom as if he was discussing the points of a yoke of oxen."

Singing Birds.

Among the bill passed by the last legislature was one for the protection of birds—not those commonly known as game birds. This law, is one for the benefit of farmers and gardeners.

The Vincennes Sun says:

"People have learned from experience that but for the little wild birds which have long been considered almost worthless, their field crops, fruits and gardens would every year be destroyed by insects, bugs and worms of various kinds. Extensive investigation have been made to ascertain the advantage of birds, and it is generally admitted that but for these beautiful little feathered songsters the whole land would be covered with worms, bugs, musquitoes, gnats, caterpillars and their larvae, which would sweep off the greater part of the crops.

English sparrow are being transported to this country in large numbers for this purpose. They feed exclusively on insects and are very gentle. But they are not superior in these respects to many of our birds. The blue bird common sparrow, wren, swallow, and many of the thrush tribe are decidedly valuable, and would be perfectly gentle if they were treated kindly. They would soon take up their abode in our cities and on the farms, where they would fill the air with sweet music and labor industriously for our protection against the ravages of insects. There is scarcely one of the feathered tribe that is not useful in some way. We can well afford to feed the wood-pecker crow, dove, and even the hawk, for the good they do us. True, they may damage a little fruit take up some corn, or catch a chicken occasionly; but they more than pay their board in destroying insects, catching mice, rats, moles and snakes."

The law mentioned forbids the killing of certain small birds, whose natural home is in climates such as we have in Indiana, under severe penalties. Any boy caught destroying these birds should first be admonished of the injury he is doing; if he then persists in his folly, flog him; and as a last resource, any friend of the feathered tribe, and enemy of potato bugs may have such a youth fined for violation of this salutary law of the State.

A New Departure in Earnest.

The democrats of Allen county Ohio, held their regular County Convention on Monday June 16. It was the largest convention brought together there for many years; but what was the most remarkable was the following declaration of sentiments adopted by the convention:

"Whereas, The events of the past decade have demonstrated the fact that the tendency of those intrusted with the affairs of Government is to disregard the interests of the people for the attainment of selfish purposes; and

"Whereas, The open, high-handed and glaring corruption of the servants of the people, in squandering the public bonds upon pet corporations, in the Credit Mobilier frauds, and in the action of the Congress of the United States in and about the passage of the infamous act commonly called the 'salary bill,' by which the servants of the people purloined from the public treasury a vast sum of money over and above the amount for which they agreed to serve them, it now becomes the duty of the people, made imperative by every consideration of manhood, self-respect, ane self-preservation to arise in their might, irrespective of former political alliances, and hurl from power and position every man whose honor has been so cheaply exchanged for pelf, is no longer fit to be intrusted with the affairs of a free and enlightened people; and

"Whereas, Coruption in appalling proportion pervades all the political avenues of the country, so that public confidence is almost entirely obliterated; and whereas, the sole purpose of the Democratic party is, and ought to be, the promotion of the public interests and the preservation of the honor of the people; and whereas, both of the political parties have demonstrated that they are powerless to check or control the existing tendency toward the utter demoralization of the politics of the country; therefore

"Resolved, By the Democracy of Allen county, in convention assembled, that we invite the people of the State of Ohio, without regard to past political associations, to meet at Columbus, in mass convention on the 30th day of July next, to take such action as the exigencies of the time demand.

"Resolved, That all Governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed, and that a strict construction of the Constitution, coupled with a rigid observance of its provisions in the enactment of all laws, is our only protection against centralization and consequent despotism

"Resolved, That men elected to positions of honor, trust and profit do not thereby become the rulers of the people, but are their servants, and therefore amenable to the people for every breach of confidence or violation of trust, and should be held to the strictest account of their official conduct.

"Resolved That the President of the United States, by his readiness to approve a bill by which he has been enabled to pocket $25,000 per annum extra pay, has published himself to the world as the most sordid of all who worship at the shrine of Mammon.

"Resolvea That we have with pride viewed the official career of Charles N. Laminson, our member of Congress, as a true representative of the people, up to the time he gave his countenance to the Salary bill.

"Resolved, That after a mature deliberation, and without any feeling of passion, we do hereby declare as the unanimous sentiment of the people of Allen county, that Charles N. Lamison, by his action of voting for and accepting an increase of his salary, has forfeited the confidence of the people; and we demand of him that as the next session of Congress, he do all in his power to effect an unconditional repeal of the Treasury of the United States the money by him received in excess of the contract price of his service, or that he resign his seat in Congress."

This is a wise and timely action. The Ohio Democrats, at least those of Allen county, prove themselves superior to all ordinary partisan considerations. Before the question whether corruption can be surpressed or whether it is destined to surpress the republic, all old political divisions and distinctions fade into insignifican ce. If we are no longer to have bey country except one of thieves, rob cars, bribe givers, and bribe takers, it is a trifling matter whether we are called Republicans or Democrats or Liberals.

We trust the mass convention of the State of Ohio invited to meet at Columbus on the 30th day of July next will be an assemblage of patriotic men sensible to the momentous importance of the crisis and prepare to act with as much wisdom and frankness as the Democrats of Allen county.

A reporter for a Wisconsin paper writes "Those who personally know our esteemed fellow-citizen, Colonel———, will regret to hear that he was brutally assaulted last evening, but not killed."

Ladies must be allowed to wear short-sleeved dressed if they wish, or the Constitution of the United States must be amended, for it expressly provides that "the right to bear arms" must not be interfered with.

Solomon amended—there are four things past finding out. The way of the serpent upon a rock; the way of man with a maid: the way of a ship in the midst of a storm, and the way of the Court of Appeals in a murder case.

A man who can give up dreaming and go to his daily realities—who can smother down his heart, its love or woe, and take to the hard work of his hand; who defies fate, and, if he must die, dies fighting to the last—that man is life's best hero.

Ex-senator Pomeroy has writtten a letter to a friend in Washington in which he annoucees that he will be a candidate before the Legislature of Kansas for the vacant Senatorship. He declares that he will clear up the York charges at his approaching trial and convince the people of Kansas that he is innocent.

Two Letters that Mean Something.

Markley & Shrader maintain such marked success that many seem to marvel at the sight. Men say Markley & Shrader mean soon to monopolize the sale of merchandise, such as Men's shoes Misses' Shoes, and even Old Maids' shoes Mr. Markley manifestly means to make the merchandise manufactured by their own men meritorious. Sir Shrader stands by his side and says: Since we started our stock has been second to none, and we shall Still Strive to Sell Such Splendid Shoes, etc., that Several Salesmen can Scarcely tend the Sales.

A visit to the handsome store of this enterprising firm, in Keystone Block, will convince our readers that it is one of the most desirable places in our city at which to purchase anything in the line of boots and shoes, for ladies, gents, misses, boys or children. The stock at this time especially, is replete with every thing seasonable and nice. The selection of a choice stock in this line is by no means an easy matter, but Messrs. Markley and Shrader seem to have exhibited rare skill in choosing their goods. We notice many attractive novelties this spring that will be of interest to all who have the good taste to know that a neatly dressed foot is one of the most pleasing of sights.

We can heartily endorse the above as we know it to be a fact. The above firm have a larger stock than any other house in Fort Wayne, and sell at prices defying competition. When you purchase goods there you know they are reliable for that the character of the house.

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE

The Methodist congregations of Logansport held a thanksgiving meeting on the 15th to celebrate their victory over the whisky sellers, they having succeeded in defeating all applicants for license but one.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says: It costs Mr. Morton a great deal to exist—much more than it does a great many other folks. For instance, the last year he was governor his cow feed cost him over $700, which the State promptly paid

Two farmers of Boone county, named Beal and Duncan, quarreled while on their way home from Lebanon, on Monday night of last week, when the latter struck the former with a board, breaking his neck. Both were drunk.

Geo. W. Mack, of South Bend, used his shoemaker's strap upon his wife, who, after he had left the house, packed up the household goods and took a train east.—When Mr. Mack went to dinner he was informed by a placard that his domicile was for rent.

A gentleman traveling on the Wabash railroad, the other day, pulled out a bottle and took a huge drink of brandy, remarking: 'I drink only when I am traveling in the Wabash valley." The magnificent blossom on his nose indicated that he spent most of his time on that train.

While some laborers were repairing a bridge on the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western road, near Crawfordsville, a man was stationed on the bridge to flag the train coming from the east. The engineer, not seeing signal, ran over the flagman and killed him, he being unable to escape from the bridge.

There was an attempt at suicide in Darlington, the other night, by a young lady whose parents keept a house of ill repute It is maintained that the young woman has persistently repelled all the urgent temptations exerted upon her to degrade her character, until wearied by the associations and importunities of the wicked, she attempted self-destruction in self-defence, that is in defence of her virtue.—She was saved from death by prompt medical aid, and ought to be saved from further annoyance.

An eccentric old fellow, who lives alongside of a grayeyard, was asked if it was not an unpleasant location, "No," said he, "I never jined places in all my life with a set of neighbors that minded their business so stiddy as they do.

When you have a bone on your plate and are obliged to take it up in your fingers, don't neglect to mention that "fingers, were made before knives and forks," The novelty of the remark will immediately strike the company very happily.

A Judge charged a jury as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, you must find that the defendant is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. A reasonable doubt is such a doubt as will convince a reasonable man that the defendant is not guilty."

"You must have lived here a long time," said a traveling Englishman to an Oregon pioneer. "Yes sir, I have. Do you see that mountain? Well when I came here that mountain was a hole in the ground." The Englishman opened his half shut eyes.

An old chap thought the war was over, because he found a place in town where he could get two cigars for five cents. After smoking one, he retired behind a board fence, and came out ten minutes later, pale in the face but ready for another war.

Almost a centenarian, and the oldest person in the country, died on the 22d ult. Mrs. Elizabeth Clarkson has been in Laporte since 1838, and would have been ninety-seven years old on the 14th day of July. The Argus says: The old lady was a remarkably industrious woman all her life and even to the day of her death she seldom remained idle for more than a few minutes at a time—always finding something to do to busy her hands and mind. She retained her faculties until the last, and in less than one hour before she died, was up and around the room.—She had no disease. and simply died with old age—dropped away like one going to sleep, without the least struggle, and no apparent pain.

One of the most touching cases of generosity with which we are familiar was that of our friend Crumm of Indiana.—His wife secured a divorse from him and announced her intention of marrying again. About six weeks before the wedding, crumm accidentally shot himself in the leg, and the doctors were compelled to amputate the limb to save his life.—As soon as Crumm got around again, he extracted the bone from the excised member, and had it worked up into handles for a dozen fine table knives, which he gave to the late Mrs. Crumm for a Bridal present, and the remainder was turned into two gross of double-eyed suspender buttons, which were inclosed with a congratulatory note to the groom. These instances of unselfish devotions are rare as they are beautiful.

A traveler coming up from the Central depot, says the Detroit Free Press, stopped for a moment to examine a coat hanging in front of a clothing store. The proprietor rushed out and asked: Wouldn't you like to try on some coats?" "I dunno but I would" responded the traveler, consulting his time killer, and he went in and began work. No matter how often he found his fit, he called for more coats, and after he had tried on 'about thirty he looked at his watch again, and resumed his own garment and walked off, saying: "I won't charge a cent for what i've done; hang a man who won't oblige another when he can do it! If I'm ever around this way again and you've got any more coats to try on I'll do all I can to help you."

It is Better

Better to wear a calico dress without trimming, if it is paid for, than to owe the shopkeeper for the most elegant silk, cut and trimmed in the most bewitching manner.

Better to live in a log cabin all your own than a brown stone mansion belonging to another.

Better to walk forever than to run in debt for a horse and carriage.

Better to use the old cane seat chairs, and faded three-ply carpet than tremble at the bills sent home from the upholster's for the most elegant parlor set ever made.

Better to pay the street two cents for music if you must have it than to owe for a grand piano.

Better to gaze upon bare walls than pictures unpaid for.

Better eat thin soup from earthenware, if you owe your butcher nothing than dine off lamb' and roast beef and know that it does not belong to you.

A party of gentleman of Indianapolis a few weeks since bought some lands, in the adjoining county of Morgan, said to contain gold. Last Thursday they made a visit to their newly acquired posessions and discovered indubitable evidence of the presence of gold and silver ore, but whether in paying quantities or not is to be determined. Great excitement exists over the discovery, although there have been rumors of the presence of the prescious metal for many years.

Noah Van Winkle, who has been mail agent on the L. S. & M. S. R. R. for the past twelve years and four months has resigned his position, making his last trip on Saturday. Mr. Van Winkle's appointment is dated March 14th, 1861, he being one of the first appointed under President Lincoln, changes in administration generally make changes of employees in all government places, but during all this time while many changes have been made on this route, he has retained his position against all political raids, making him the oldest agent in the Northwest, if not in the United States, The Superintendent of Agencies at Chicago keeps a record of trips made by each agent, and has computed the distance traveled by Mr. Van Winkle, during this time at a little over six hundred thousand miles.

THE RAILROAD ASSESSMENT.

Since our last issue the State Board of Equalization have been diligently at work on the railroad assessments. A decision has been rendered as to the amount of the assessments on on the following roads, to-wit

Peru and Chicago Railroad, main track $6,500 per mile; rolling stock $1.673. The same from Peru to Michigan City, main tracks, $4,000 per mile; rolling stock $2,973.

Bee line, main track $11,250 per mile; rolling stack $4·650.

Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis, main tracks, $7,760 per mile; rolling stock $4,000

Lake shore and Michigan Southern, main tracks, $14,000 per mile; rolling stock $6,000

Michigan Central, main tracks, $14,000 per mile; rolling stock $6,000.

Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago main tracks, $15,000 per mile; rolling stock $6,000.

Justice has at last overtaken the immense corporations in this State, and like all other classes their property is to be assessed and made bare a just amount of the burdens of taxation

The increase over the former assessments is very large.

As an instance we take the case of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, in this County Under the old law the road, side tracks, rolling stock, depot grounds, depots, and station houses were valued at a total of $8,000 per mile, or a total of $152,000 in the County. Under the new law as given above, on the main track and rolling stock alone it is $21,000 pey mile. When the valuation on the side tracks, depots, stations &c., is made it will increase the above to at least $25,000 per mile, or a total in the county $475,000, being an increase of $323.000, over the oldassessments.

Then to the Eel River Railroad, will be assessed in proportion to its value adding at least another $150,000 to the tax duplicate of the county. These two items show the character of the increase over the State. The action of the State Board is welcome news, especcially so to the former, whose lands under the new law are assessed beyond all precedent on the productive investment as compared with railway corporations. The railway companies are of cource indignant as the acting of the Board and threaten to go to the Courts, but we say to the Board, and we but express the will of the people, go on and do justice though the heavens fall.

Indianapolis had a young tornado last Thursday evening, which blew down large trees at the fair grounds and a portion of the wall of an unfinished building.

Real estate in Jackson county has been valued for assessment at an average of $12.14 per acre, without improvements—with improvments, at $14 61.

The Indianabolis Journal says that at a recent date the balance in the cash box of the State Treasury amounted to $11,111 11—a queer combination of figures which will probably not concur again for many years.

A correspondent in Sullivan county writes that the wheat and corn crops in his vicinity pomises an abundant vield, that the potatoes are uninjured by the bugs, and that crops of all kinds, except fruit, will yield abundantly.

THE NEWSBOY'S DEBT.

"Sir, if you please, my brother Jim—
The one you give the bill, you know—
He couldn't bring the money, Sir,
Because his back was hurted so.

"He didn't mean to keep the 'change ;'
He got runned over, up the street ;
One wheel went right across his back,
And t'other fore-wheel mashed his feet.

"They stopped the horses just in time,
And then they took him up for dead,
And all that day and yesterday
He wasn't rightly in his head.

"They took him to the hospital—
One of the newsboys knew 'twas Jim—
And I went too, because, you see,
We two are brothers, I and him.

"He had that money in his hand,
And never saw it any more.
Indeed, he didn't mean to steal !
He never lost a cent before !

"He was afraid that you might think
He meant to keep it, any way ;
This morning, when they brought him to,
He cried because he couldn't pay.

"He made me fetch his jacket here ;
It's torn and dirtied pretty bad ;
It's only fit to sell for rag,
But then, you know, it's all he had !

"When he gets well—it won't be long—
If you will call the money lent,
He says he'll work his fingers off
But what he'll pay you every cent."

And then he cast his rueful glance
At the soiled jacket where it lay.
"No, no, my boy ! Take back the coat,
Your brother's badly hurt, you say?

"Where did they take him ? Just run out
And hail a cab, then wait for me.
Why, I would give a thousand coats,
And pounds for such a boy as he !"

A half-hour after this we stood
Together in the crowded wards,
And the nurse checked the hasty steps
That fell loudly on the boards.

I thought him smiling in his sleep,
And scarce believed her when she said,
Smoothing away the tangled hair
From brow and cheek, "The boy is dead."

Dead? dead so soon? How fair he looked !
One streak of sunshine on his hair,
Poor lad ! Well, it is warm in heaven ;
No need of change and jackets there.

And something rising in my throat
Made it so hard for me to speak,
I turned away, and left a tear
Lying upon his sunburned cheek.

UNCLE JEFFRIES' WILL.

When old Hiram Jeffries died, contrary to all expectations, there was no will to be found. That there had been one was a fact testified to by Lawyer Sharp, who had always transacted the old gentleman's business. He had prepared the document for him, years before his sudden death, in favor of his widowed niece, Marian Moore, Lawyer Sharp declared. But nowhere was it to be found. Many were the speculations concerning its disappearance. Some said the old gentleman had destroyed it in a fit of anger with his niece on account of her marriage with the poor young music master, Albert Moore, sixteen years before. Some said he had never made a will ; others, and among them Lawyer Sharp, believed that some one had stolen it. Few believed this, however, for who could have any object in doing so? No one was allowed to live in the house by old Jeffries but Mrs. Kenton, the housekeeper, who was greatly attached to Marian, and the cook, an Irish girl, who took no interest in the affairs of her strange old master. Aside from these no one entered the house but the doctor, the lawyer, and his sister, Mrs. Tabitha Jeffries, who visited him occasionally.

But then it was not Miss Tabitha, of course. She was above such things of so little importance to herself ; at least she strove hard to make the world believe that such was the case. She was an old maid of about fifty, tall and angular, with a voice like the north wind, and a terrible temper, added to which she had a very penurious disposition, being almost miserly in her business transactions. She owned and superintended a millinery store in the flourishing town of Blockville. She appeared greatly surprised at the will's disappearance, saying that, "Brother Hiram had always declared his intention of leaving his property to Marian ; and, as for herself, she had no wish to be encumbered with so much of this earth's goods.". But as no will was brought up in Mrs. Moore's favor, and only Lawyer Sharp's testimony went to prove that there had been one, she was allowed to take possession of her late brother's estate, which consisted of a fine house in Blockville, and a beautiful farm near the suburbs.

Mrs. Tabitha evinced much reluctance in accepting her good fortune, and even went so far as to declare that she would not take up her abode in the old mansion until one year after her brother's death. She did this for a twofold reason: First, she found her business so lucrative that she wished to continue in it for some time to come ; and, as she could not very well attend to both places, she determined to gain attention from her townspeople as one being very kind and considerate to her niece and her four children.

Poor Marian Moore ! she had not thought much of her Uncle Hiram's property. She had been her uncle's pet before she had met the handsome, dark-eyed musician, and given him her hand and heart. When the old gentleman heard of the relation between them, he took one of his "quiet passions," and informed Marian that "if she married that fellow, with such an outlandish name, she need never expect to enter his house during his lifetime."

This did not trouble Marian much, however ; she was willing to endure much for her young husband's sake. They had no need of asking help from the old gentleman for ten happy years, during which Albert Moore kept his family in more than comfort. His was a sad blow to his poor wife. Added to this, they found themselves without anything to support themselves on, as they had lived entirely upon the music-master's labors.

In this extremity Uncle Jeffries came to their assistance. He did not take them to his house, however ; he erected a pretty cottage in the suburbs to which he removed them, allowing them the interests of a few thousands a year during his lifetime.

"Perhaps you'll get something more, some time," he would say when he visited them in their economically kept home ; "but for the present, Marian, you had better stay where you are, for I don't suppose I could ever get along with your children, two of them boys, too."

And so eccentric Uncle Hiram would take his leave.

Thus they had lived for six years until death had claimed Uncle Jeffries. Then they thought of his will, and hoped he had remembered them, as their yearly annuity ceased at his death. But the property reverted to Aunt Jeffries, and she never hinted a word to the young widow concerning its being renewed. She treated Marian like an utter stranger when they met "out of society," and Marian would have begged from door to door before she would ask her aunt for a dollar. So she gave up the pretty cottage and went to live in a tenement, where, with the help of Ollie, her eldest child, she managed to support her family by sewing.

One day, about a year after Uncle Jeffries' death, Ollie found that she could not live any longer without a new hat, as her old one had been trimmed and retrimmed until she could not possibly wear it any longer. So, having a little spare money, she went to Miss Jeffries' shop, as it was nearer than any other, and ordered a hat. A few days after, she called for it, but the shop and house adjoining were in great confusion, in consequence of the fact that the mistress was that day removing to her brother's house. She was finishing up her last day's work in her shop, or, rather, she was seeing that her superintendent, Mrs. Whittle, did. And between Miss Jeffries orders and the confusion which reigned, she was almost crazy.

"Miss Moore has called for her hat," said Miss Tabitha's shrill voice ; "is it ready?"

"Yes, only I know it is too large for the lady," said Miss Whittle, hesitatingly.

"Here, slip this under the lining around the crown," said Miss Tabitha, impatiently kicking some pieces of old paper which came blowing past her into the room.

At that moment a caller was announced, and, to Mrs. Whittle's great joy, Tabitha hurried away, leaving her in peace.

"I guess this will do," she muttered, selecting an old yellow piece of parchment, and dexterously fitting it into the crown. "It must," she added decisively.

So Ollie got her hat, and was well satisfied with it.

Affairs in Mrs. Moore's family grew worse every day. The widow fell ill, which had much to do in emptying their slender purse. And hard as she, Ollie and Jessie, her second girl, worked, they found it impossible to pay their rent. So they went one step lower, and lived in one room in a tenement. The "world" knew little of them, and they knew little of it.

"Mamma," said pretty, brown-eyed Ollie one day, to her poor, pale mother, who was reclining on the bed, "I've finished the last shirt ; I'm going to take it home when Jessie returns ; and while I'm waiting I'll just fix my hat ; the lining needs renewing."

Her mother sighed ; she knew that her noble little daughter did much to lighten her heavy load. If Uncle Hiram's will had only been found, perhaps they might have been better off now.

Thrifty, energetic Ollie sat down, with scissors and needle, to try and improve the poor old hat she had purchased from Aunt Jeffries' shop one year before.

"I wonder what this is," thought she, as her deft fingers ripped out the old piece of paper which distracted Mrs. Whittle had improvised as lining. "I wonder what it is," she said under her breath, as she unfolded it, and ran her eyes over the writing with which it was covered. "It's it ! it's it ! O ma, it's it !" she cried, losing all control of herself as she understood the contents of the paper.

"What are you talking about?" asked Mrs. Moore, regarding her daughter in astonishment.

"O mamma ! It's it ! It's Uncle Jeffries' will !" cried Ollie, in wild delight.

Mrs. Moore sat straight up in bed, and looked at Ollie as if she thought her going crazy. She had given up, long ago, all thought of finding the will.

"Mamma, read it. It is the will !" cried Ollie, laying the document in her mother's trembling hand.

It was indeed Uncle Jeffries' will. Lawyer Sharp recognized it at once as the one he had penned for the old gentleman years before. In company with Ollie, he visited Miss Jeffries in her house, and confronted her with the declaration that she had stolen her brother's lost will. At first she indignantly refused to believe that the will was not a forgery. But when Lawyer Sharp said, sternly, "I give you, Miss Jeffries, five days to leave this house, and renounce all claim to Mr. Jeffries' property, or the whole town shall ring with your villainy," she started, and her face turned to a sickly yellow hue.

"You need not start nor look surprised," he continued. "The will was found in your possession—at least, Miss Moore found it inside the lining of a hat that she received from your shop one year ago."

The expression of Tabitha Jeffries' face changed from fear to rage anger.

"I know who put it there," she cried, losing all self-control as she remembered that she herself had been instrumental in the will's being found. "That old Whittle did ; she never had half sense," she added, spitefully. "Take this old house if you want it—I have a better," she continued, with a scornful glance at Ollie. "I'll have my revenge on Whittle, who is dependent on me for her living."

"I advise you to remove to your own home at once," said the lawyer, coldly. As for Mrs. Whittle, Miss Moore will attend to her ; she will be perfectly able to do so now," said the lawyer, looking at Ollie with a provoking smile.

So Miss Tabitha Jeffries—whom every one hated—removed from the great old house, giving as her reason that the will had been found, and Marian Moore, looking happier than she had for many a year, took up her residence in it. Mrs. Whittle was handsomely provided for by her.

"And to think," Ollie says sometimes, with laugh, "that I never knew what a jewel I was wearing in my old hat !"

THE CHOLERA.

Causes of the Disease, and Preventives.

[Extract from a Circular of the American Health Association.]

The local conditions that chiefly promote the outbreaks and propagation of cholera are—

1. Neglected privies.
2. Filth-sodden grounds.
3. Foul cellars and filthy or badly-drained surroundings of dwellings.
4. Foul and obstructed house-drains.
5. Decaying and putrescent materials, whether animal or vegetable.
6. Unventilated, damp, and uncleansed dwellings and apartments.

These localizing causes of cholera should be promptly and very thoroughly removed before a case of the disease appears in the town or district ; and if any sources of putrescence or of excessive moisture remain, even these should be controlled by the proper cleansing and disinfection.

Thorough scavenging and surface drainage, with the application at the same time of quicklime and coal tar or crude carbolic acid ; whitewashing with fresh quicklime ; the cleansing and thorough drying and ventilation of cellars, basements, chambers, and closets, and daily care to cleanse, flush, ventilate and purify the sources of defilement about all inhabited premises, will afford almost complete protection if suitable care is taken of personal health.

The security of personal health requires pure drinking water, fresh and substantial food, temperance, and the needed rest and bathing of the body.

The principles relating to disinfection as a means of destroying the propagating or infectious cause of cholera—the "cholera contagium"—are readily understood, and may be so explained to any family that the household may insure its own immunity against the introduction and spread of the disease.

For privies, water-closets, drains and sewers—Eight or ten pounds of sulphate of iron (copperas) dissolved in five or six gallons of water, with half a pint of crude carbolic acid added to the solution, and briskly stirred, makes the cheapest and best disinfecting fluid for common use. It can be procured in every town and by any family, and if the carbolic acid is not at hand, the solution of copperas may be used without it.

To prevent privies and water-closets from becoming infected or offensive—Pour a pint of this strong solution into every water-closet-pan or private-seat once or twice a day.

To disinfect masses of filth, privy-vaults, sewers, and drains—Gradually pour in this solution until it reaches and disinfects all the foul material.

For the chamber-vessels used by the sick, and for the disinfection of ground upon which any excremental matter has been cast away, for disinfecting extensive masses or surfaces of putrescent materials, and for drains, sewers, and ditches, the "dead oil" of coal-tar, or coal-tar itself is available ; coal-tar may be used as a disinfecting paint upon the walls of cellars, stables, and open drains.

Quicklime is useful as an absorbent and dryer upon such walls and in damp places, and white-washing with it should be practiced in common tenements, factories, basements, closets, and garrets.

To disinfect the clothing defiled in any manner by excremental matters from the sick, throw all such articles immediately into boiling water, and continue the boiling for half an hour ; or place them in a solution, covered, made as follows : One pound of sulphate of zinc, six or eight gallons of water, to which add two or three ounces of strong carbolic acid.

Keep the soiled articles saturated until they can be boiled. If the acid is not at hand use the zinc water alone.

Apartments, bedding, and upholstery that have been used by the sick with cholera or diarrhea should be fumigated by the burning of several pounds of brimstone (sulphur) upon a defended iron pan, with the place tightly closed for several hours, under a physician's directions.

A Strange Story.

A horrible report comes from India. A gentleman living in the interior, being something of a naturalist, had a great passion for hunting snakes. His wife, however, had a great aversion to them, and could not bear to look at a dead one. He thought this all nonsense on his wife's part, and resolved to cure her of her fear by making her familiar with snakes. One day, while hunting, he killed an exceedingly large boa-constrictor, which he brought home and stretched out on the verandah in front of the house. After dinner he told his wife he had something on the verandah he wished her to look at. They went to the door together, and as she stepped out he closed and locked the door. She screamed frightfully, but he thought her fear would be soon over, and so he remained in the hall making sportive remarks for his wife to hear. As her screams continued he opened the door only to see his wife in the agony of death, crushed in the folds of a monstrous boa. It appears when one of these serpents is killed that its mate will always follow the body if it is taken away, and will avenge itself on the first object it meets. In this case the boa had followed its dead companion, and had lain in wait for some one to appear, on whom it could fasten its coils. The gentleman went mad on the spot, and had to be conveyed to an insane asylum.

TOOTHACHE.—A new remedy consists in the employment of injections introduced into the gums near the diseased tooth. Dr. Dopp has tried these injections in about one hundred cases. In twenty cases he made use of morphia, which succeeded very well, but only for a time. Chloroform was far more successful, and is now exclusively used by Dr. Dopp. It was eminently successful in sixty-two cases out of eighty. The injection is made with the small syringe commonly used in France for subcutaneous injections. Only two drops are put in at a time. The needle is introduced gradually, and must remain in situ a few seconds. On withdrawing it, pressure must be exerted on the gum with the finger. In by far the greater number of cases, one injection is quite enough to stop the toothache.

"Is DEM bells ringin' for fire, Tiberius?" "No, sir. Dey got plenty o' fire ; dem bells is ringin' for water !"

Curiosities of Weather.

Perhaps there is nothing about which ordinary people talk so much at random as the weather ; how, in their time, it was colder, hotter, drier or wetter ; whereas, as a matter of fact, although one year may differ from another, the average of wet and fine, of cold and heat, is maintained from generation to generation. The greatest cold experienced in England has been 5 degrees, and in France 24 degrees ; the greatest heat (in the shade) has been, in the former country, 96 degrees ; in the latter, 106¼ degrees. In Africa, on the one hand, and British North America on the other, the extremes of temperature upon the globe have attained a scale of 240 degrees. The most curious incident with respect to extreme cold that ever took place in warfare was the capture of Dutch vessels by cavalry, which—since they were frozen in on the Trexel—Pichegru sent against them. In Africa, besides the heat, there is sometimes an altogether unexpected inconvenience. The traveler in the desert suddenly hears one of his Arabs exclaim : "The torrent ! the torrent !" and everybody has at once to hurry to the nearest elevated spot. In a few seconds, the valley in which he has been journeying is hidden by a deep body of water, which hurries with its rocks, trees and wild animals. Nay, on one occasion, it is recorded by M. d'Abbadie, that he found an Arab looking disconsolately on the wet ground, after the passage of such a flood—which does not last beyond a few hours—for what the Frenchman took to be his pipe or his lance. "Don't talk to me about pipes and lances," was the irritable rejoinder ; "that torrent has carrried off my camel, my whole fortune, and my wife and children." The explanation of this phenomenon is, that when a cloud bursts on the barren hills there is neither soil no root of trees to absorb or arrest the passage, but it rushes down to the plain, like water from a house-roof.

Extraordinary Murder by a Child.

A few miles from this city, on the opposite side of the river, is Mr. George Humphrey's plantation, known as the Dalkieth place, on which there are several colored families living. The pride of one of these families is a very precocious little six-year-old boy, whose sprightliness and intelligence have been the joy and admiration of his parents, and the remark of all who knew the little fellow. Some time ago a little stranger appeared in the family to claim a part of the love and care of the parents and divide the parental affection with the little six-year-old. He had no love for the baby, was jealous of it, and its presence in the family was a sting in his little breast. In his own childish way, he brooded over the matter for some time, and seemed finally to decide upon a course of action.

Day before yesterday, while the men were in the field at work, and the woman either with them or engaged elsewhere, the children were left alone about the cabins to amuse themselves as they might see fit. The mother of the infant and the little six-year-old had left the baby snugly stowed away in the cradle asleep, and her little boy in the yard playing with the other children, when she went away. She had scarcely gotten out of sight, when the little boy gathered up a brickbat, almost as much as he could carry, and walking into the cabin where the baby lay, began to pelt it over the head with the brick until he actually succeeded in breaking the infant's skull, and mashing it almost to a jelly. He then managed to get the child out of the cradle, and dragged its lifeless body to the woods, a short distance from the house, where he hid the body in the bushes, and returning to his playmates said to them : "I beeve I till ole baby." He then led them to the spot where he had left the infant lying, and sure enough there lay the little innocent with its head crushed, and life extinct. When it is considered that the perpetrator of this most foul and atrocious crime is only 6 years old, it almost staggers belief.—Vicksburg (Miss.) Herald.

Governor's Salaries.

The salaries of the Governors of the States range from $1,000 to $8,000 a year. Louisiana, the least able in her present financial condition, except perhaps South Carolina, to pay a big salary, pays $8,000 a year for her Governor. McEnery and Kellogg could afford to divide as a compromise of political differences and still have better pay than a good many Governors get. California comes next in the lis, paying $7,000 a year, probably in gold, though now that greenbacks are in circulation in the Pacific States, Gov. Booth may have to be content with them. Nevada, the silver State, thinks she can afford $6,000 a year for the luxury of a Governor, and pays it without grumbling. None of the other States pay more than $4,000, and most of them $3,000 and under. The great State of New York pays but $4,000 for the able administration of Gen. Dix, while Illinois gets the services of John L. Beveridge for $1,500 a year. A Vermont Governor manages to get on with $1,000 a year, but as he watches over a far more limited territory than Gov. Furnas, of Nebraska, who gets no more, he ought not to grumble.—Cincinnati Commercial.

Michigan Lumber.

The aggregate "lumber crop" of Michigan reaches two thousand million feet, valued at forty million dollars ; and if we add the lath and shingles we reach near fifty million dollars as the yearly value of this great industry. We find an army of thirty-five thousand stalwart men employed in camps and mills, and paid at least twenty-eight million dollars each year as wages ; and this does not include machinists or saw-makers in towns and cities, or farmers busy in their fields to prepare food for this host of workers, and the four-footed beasts that serve them.

Load this yearly product into cars and we should have a train eighteen hundred miles long ; put it on board ships and it would load a fleet of eight thousand vessels ; and we are told that it reaches all the lakes from Chicago to Buffalo by water, and is carried by rail far South to Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and many lesser towns along the routes, giving the main income of some railroads by the transit.—Old and New.

Progress of Journalism.

The following is an extract from the valedictory address delivered before the Michigan Press Association by President John N. Ingersoll, of the Shiawassee American, at the annual meeting held at Detroit June 18, 1873 :

In my library are volumes of the old National Intelligencer, on which I worked as a journeyman printer, and in which I find, six days after the election of 1836, the first hint that Mr. Van Buren had probably been chosen to the Presidency ; and the latest news from Europe is announced by packet only sixteen days from Liverpool. But now, through the energy of the representatives of the press and the agency of the magnetic telegraph, the choice of President is read in the papers on the day after the election, and the eager comments of the London press. Just forty years ago I was an apprentice in an office adjoining the New York Journal of Commerce, then the leading commercial newspaper in that city. Two men did the presswork of the entire edition on a common hand-press, with an old-fashioned buckskin roller. To-day, all through New York Printing-House Square and its vicinity, the pedestrian hears the underground jar and roar of mighty steam presses, each of which costs $30,000, and contains 14,780 distinct pieces, in bolts, screws, nuts, pulleys, springs, pins, keys and rollers, with over 29,000 yards of tape and blankets—the whole press weighing 41,514 pounds, and printing 24,000 impressions hourly. Besides the old Journal of Commerce, there were in New York, up to 1830, other old-fashioned "blanket-sheet newspapers," with which the reader seasoned his morning coffee or flavored his evening cup of tea. At this time, the "penny papers" began to take the place of the so-called respectable sixpennies." The competition was short and decisive—and the lively, crisp penny-sheet became the paper of the period—though, truth to say, the Journal of Commerce still exists and lives (as is truly said) "becase the older men died out of it." In those days newspapers were lugubriously solemn, "with no flippant wings to disturb the prosy flow of journalistic inanity." There was no telegraph prior to 1843, no ocean steamships till a period still later, and no associated press organization to simplify the process of obtaining news. But, for a moment, let us go back half a century further—and fifty years is but a brief period—for a still a greater contrast. I hold in my hand a copy of "The Country Journal and the Poughkeepsie Advertiser," of August 2, 1788. The printers whose modest skill put together these pages have long slept in their graves, but the story which their handiwork preserved will live on, to the immortal glory of those who espoused through its columns the principles that secured the birth of a republic. Our chief interest, however, is found in the contrast which this paper presents to the journalism of to-day, and herein furnishing the most comprehensive illustration of the progress of the intervening years. Looking at this time-stained paper, and then upon the great journals that now daily feed the popular mind with everything worthy of notice from the four quarters of the globe, it is difficult to feel that the journalism of to-day has not reached the limit of its possibilities in all that pertains to the perfection of the art, the development of mind, and the dissemination of intelligence. It may be an open question whether the improvements of the present day preceded the public mind, or whether the popular wants demanded the improvements ; certain it is, as Victor Hugo quaintly remarks, "the diameter of the press is the diameter of civilization. The press is force, because it is intelligence. It is the living clarion, and loudly announcest he advent of justice. Holding no account of night, except to salute the dawn, it becomes day and warns the world."

Typhoid Fever.

At a recent lecture on typhoid fever at Guy's Hospital, Sir William Gull remarked that two hundred and fifty years ago one of the kings of England died of the ague, but now by improved agriculture and drainage the disease had become rare, and certainly few die of it. Typhoid fever, he asserts, is as preventable as ague, and two hundred and fifty years hence deaths from it will be rare, The disease is caused by a virus of nature, which may get into the healthy body, increase in it, and destroy it. It is an accidental condition, and not one of the ordinery processes of nature. The origin of the disease is somehow or another connected with drainage ; it has therefore been called the filth fever, and to get rid of the filth is to get rid of the fever. This was illustrated in the case of the Milbank prison, where typhoid and dysentery were once thoroughly established, but where both almost wholly disappeared when the water supply was changed and efficient drainage provided. In closing his remarks on the treatment of the disease, the lecturer said that no man can approach a case of typhoid fever without paying some attention to hygiene. This he claimed was of the greatest importance, and with it he would prefer to carry any one through the disease by wines, soups and fresh air, rather than by drugs.—Galaxy.

Resurgam.

A strange case of resuscitation lately took place at the hospital of the Val de Grace, at Paris. A man had hanged himself in the Rue St. Jacques, and having been cut down and examined by the medical men, was pronounced dead. The clinical lecturer, however, desired to try one last experiment, and he opened the chest and attempted artificial respiration, but without success. He then applied the pole of an electrical battery to the pneumo-gastric nerves, and passed a strong current at intervals of four seconds. Soon after some signs of respiration appeared, and in five minutes the cardiac pulsation was perceptible. The epiglottis was tumefied, and the tongue had to be drawn out with pincers to leave a passage for the air. A few ounces of blood were obtained from the medico-cephalic vein, the dilated pupils contracted, the signs of life became more and more manifest, a few drops of alcohol were given, muscular contractions became visible without electricity, warmth returned to the feet, the pulsation in the carotid arteries recommenced, and the patient was cured.

YOUNG GRIMES.

Old Grimes is dead—that good old man ;
We never shall see him more ;
But he has left a son who bears
The name that old Grimes bore.

He wears a coat of latest cut,
His vest is new and gay ;
He cannot bear to see distress,
So turns from it away.

His pants and gaiters—fitting snug
O'er patent leather shoes ;
His hair is by a barber curled—
He smokes cigars and chews.

A chain of massive gold is borne
Above his flashy vest ;
His clothes are better every day
Than were old Grimes' best.

In fashion's court he constant walks,
Where he delight doth shed ;
His hands are white and very soft,
But softer is his head.

He's six feet tall—no post more straight—
His teeth are pearly white ;
In habits he is sometimes loose,
And sometimes very tight.

His manners are of witching grace,
His voice of sweetest tone ;
His diamond pin's the very one
That old Grimes used to own.

His mustache adorns his face,
His neck a scarf of blue ;
He sometimes goes to church for change,
And sleeps in Grimes' pew.

He has drank wine of every kind,
And liquors cold and hot ;
Young Grimes, in short, is just the sort
Of man old Grimes was not.

MR. CARPENTER, of Marquette, Mich., had not the slightest idea he was about to create an atmospherical disturbance when he knocked the ashes out of his pipe on the head of a powder keg. And when a fellow-workman conveyed all that was left of Mr. Carpenter to his wife in a bag, she quietly remarked: "Just his luck. Hang him up in the wood-shed, where the cats won't get at him, till night."

The Feet.

There are no parts of the human body that need more assiduous attention than the feet. If the eyes, ears, lungs, or other more delicate organs become deranged, they give warning by ailment. It is otherwise with the feet. They may be neglected or even abused without any bad consequences being immediately felt ; but then, though not immediately felt, they will to a certainty be eventually felt, and felt very sorely too. An excessive flow of blood to the head, extreme liability to cold, disordered digestion, and other numerous evils are the results of inattention to the feet. The feet should be regularly washed and wiped every day. Stockings should not be put on while there is the slightest moisture on the feet. The stockings absorb the moisture, and gradually return it to the feet, thereby causing them to feel cold and uncomfortable, and what is worse, when the feet are cold, circulation is interfered with, and the whole system, especially the brain, is thrown into an abnormal state. Keep the feet clean and warm, the head cool, and the bowels open, and then it makes little difference to you whether the physicians be skillful or not. If you wish to preserve your whole system in good working order, be sure and attend to your feet. Let all our readers profit by these remarks, and they will soon feel by experience that we are not exaggerating the consequences of proper attention to the feet.

The Freedom of the Press.

The Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania has incorporated the following into the new Bill of Rights for that State: "The printing press shall be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the Legislature or any branch of the Government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof. The free communication of thought and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man, and every citizen may freely speak, write, and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of the liberty. No conviction shall be had in any prosecution for the publication of papers relating to the official conduct of officers or men in public capacity, or to any other matter proper for public investigation or information, where the fact that such publication was not maliciously or negligently made shall be established to the satisfaction of the jury. And in all indictments for libel the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the facts, under the direction of the court, as in other cases."

The Way Nick Bowers Was Caught.

Nick Bowers was a member of the original Christy Minstrels, and, in his day, was the greatest "middle man interrogator" known in the profession. Nick used to tell, with great merriment, an incident of his boyhood. To preserve the flavor of the relation, we will record in Nick's own language, and only regret that we cannot accompany it with his inimitable gesticulation.

"My old man," said Nick, "as a general thing, was a pretty steady old gent, but once in a while he would get oblivious, and water was not the cause of it. I recollect a certain holiday was approaching, and I had been skinning around to get a little money to have a time with on that day; but the fates and purses were against me. It was but two days prior to the anticipated holiday, and I hadn't nary a red. Remember this, boys, when I add that on the same afternoon I came into the house, when lo! there on the floor, totally overcome by his libations, lay my respected daddy, and beside him lay six shining half dollars which had rolled from his pocket. Boys, I've been an honest man all my life, but once when a boy I committed a theft. I hooked one of those half dollars. Thinks I to myself, the old man's been on a jamboree, and won't know how much he spent, and will never miss it. But, mark you, the next morning I and my two brothers were summoned into my father's presence. The old man's face lowered. I thought of the half dollar and knew that a storm was brewing.

"Boys," said he, "last night when I came home I had six half dollars. One of 'em's gone. Your mother didn't take it. There's been no one else in the house. Which one of you took it?"

We all protested our innocence.

"Boys," said the old man, "that half dollar never walked off, and I'm going to find out which one of you took it."

Turning around, he took down from the wall an old, flint-lock blunderbuss. This he deliberately loaded with powder and buck-shot in our presence; then fastening it upon the table, cocked it, took a seat behind it, holding the string in his hand, and in solemn tones addressed us thusly:

"Boys, I'm going to discover the thief and punish him at the same time. You must each of you blow into the muzzle of that gun. When the guilty one blows, off goes his head. Now then, you have a chance; will you own up or blow up?"

"Ben," said the old man to my eldest brother, "have you got that half dollar?"

"No, sir."

"Take a blow."

Ben did so in safety.

"Nick" (eh boys, I tell you the chills began to crawl down my back), "got that half dollar?"

"No, sir," said I, with a defiant swagger.

"Blow in that gun."

I walked up bravely, gave a blow, and—dodged!

"Nick," said the old man in a voice of thunder, "where is that half dollar?"

He had me. The truth dodged out of me. Said I, "Out in the barn, pap!"

A Popular Dream Dispelled.

How often do we hear of people wishing they might be able to leave this plague-afflicted sphere and float off careless, happy and free, into sun-lighted and sun-warmed "glorious space." We imagine that were they so able to float away, taking with them their present bodily possessions, they would be heartily glad to return by the very first express. Science demonstrates that of all cold, dark and dreary places in the universe, this so-called "glorious space" is the coldest, darkest and dreariest. We all know that the lighter and thinner the atmosphere the lower is the temperature. The celebrated Dr. Young calculated, from the known laws governing the density of the atmosphere, that 4,000 miles high, about as far as from San Francisco to Boston, a cubic inch of common air, at the sea level, would occupy as much space as that which is inclosed by the orbit of Saturn. At such an altitude there would be neither heat, light nor sound. Air is necessary for all these, and there being no atmosphere at such a distance, "glorious space" is a most inglorious space.

Experiments made 180 years ago demonstrated that a bell, rung by clockwork, when placed under an exhausted receiver, emits no sound. The report of a pistol on the top of Mont Blanc makes no more noise than the explosion of a percussion cap at the level of the sea, and aeronauts tell us that at the height of two miles all sound ceases. The discovery that light will not penetrate even pure air is due to Prof. Tyndall, who, in the course of certain experiments, succeeded in obtaining a glass tube filled with what he supposed would be "optically pure atmosphere," and was surprised to find it completely opaque, not a ray of light passing through the cylinder. For the light we possess we are indebted wholly to the impurities in the air, the little motes which float in the sunbeams. Remove these impurities and the inhabitants of the earth would be shrouded in complete darkness. Light would be a thing unknown.—Peoria (Ill.) Transcript.

Women as Hod-Carriers.

The correspondent of the Baltimore American at the Vienna Exposition writes:

"I have before alluded to the fact that women perform the hardest kind of laboring work in Germany, but was not prepared for the sights I have witnessed to-day in Vienna. In America mixing mortar and carrying the hod is considered such hard work that few white men can be found willing to undertake it at the present day. An immense building near our hotel, occupying a whole block, is in course of erection, on which not less than 400 persons are employed, fully 200 of whom are women. All the hard laboring work is done by women, such as making and carrying mortar in buckets on their heads to the workmen handling the brick. They are not allowed a moment's leisure, several overseers being on guard to keep them constantly in motion. We found the same proportion of women at work on all the new buildings, and there must be many thousands of them to-day doing this species of laboring work in Vienna. They are both young, middle-aged, and old, but all seem to be strong and healthy. At dinner-time they swarm into the shops to purchase a piece of brown bread and fat bacon and a mug of beer, and eat their dinners sitting on the curbstone. Their wages is one florin, or [illegible] cents per day, and I am assured by a gentleman resident here that most of them sleep about the buildings on shavings, or in barns or sheds, having no homes. Amid all the splendor and wealth of this great city, with its million of inhabitants, there is, perhaps, more destitution, want and suffering than in all the cities of America. Still, we frequently hear some of our countrymen praising and preferring the governments of Europe. While viewing this scene, the Emperor and Empress, with his staff, and outriders glittering in gold and precious stones, dashed along the Ringstrasse on the way to the palace, while a short distance off stand the royal stables, a magnificent structure, covering at least four blocks of ground, as large as Franklin square, the meanest animal of which is better cared for than these women. It is not to be wondered that of the [illegible],000 births annually in the lying-in hospital in Vienna less than half are of children born in wedlock.

What We Have to Eat Per Annum.

We gather some interesting facts relating to the subject from the advance sheets of the volume on "Industry of the United States, Ninth Census, 1870," soon to be issued by the Department of the Interior. The classification of lands is an improvement on our former reports; as, for example, instead of the old division into "improved" and "unimproved," the acres are given under the several heads of the following compilation:

Acres in farms in the United States	188,921,099
Acres in woodland	150,390,177
Acres unimproved	68,423,755
Whole number of acres in farms	407,735,031

An abstract of the principal crops gives the following result in bushels:

Wheat	287,745,626
Rye, barley and buckwheat	56,501,821
Oats	282,107,157
Indian corn	760,944,549
	1,387,299,153

The amount of farm wages paid during the year (1870), including the value of board, was $310,286,236. Of other large products were:

Potatoes, beans and beans, bu	170,794,329
Rice, lbs	73,635,021
Butter, lbs	514,092,683
Cheese, lbs	53,492,153
Honey and maple sugar, lbs	43,146,460
Molasses and syrup, gallons	23,564,460
Wine, gallons	3,092,330
Cane sugar, hogsheads	87,043
Swine, sheep and cattle, No	68,497,795
Milch cows, No	8,935,332
Milk, gallons	235,500,599
Hay, tons	27,316,048
Value of slaughtered animals	$398,956,376
Value of orchard and garden products	$65,054,418

The Superintendent says that with so great an expanse of territory, a vast omission of value in the gross has been unavoidable. The estimated cash value of farms is $9,252,803,861, and of farm products, implements and live stock, $309,693,544. Less than one-half of the area of inclosed farms is under cultivation, and less in the whole than one-tenth of the national territory. Of the total vast product here exhibited, the proportion of nearly three-fourths is raised in that most fertile fertile part of the globe, the Mississippi valley.—Exchange.

A PHYSICIAN WHO HEALED HIMSELF.—If a railroad director were lashed to every locomotive, there would be fewer railroad accidents, and if doctors had to take their own physic before administering it to their patients, fewer people would be poisoned. Dr. Joseph Walker, of California, took this course when he first compounded the famous Vinegar Bitters which now rank as an inestimable household remedy in all parts of the United States. He healed himself with this specific before he offered it to the world. He introduced it with a simple statement of the manner in which he had discovered its vegetable ingredients and been cured, while wandering, sick and poor, among the California tribes. He stated what the preparation had done for himself and a few sufferers from dyspepsia, biliousness, rheumatism, lung diseases, and many other prevalent disorders, believed him, tried the new restorative and were more than satisfied with the results. In this way the sale of the Vinegar Bitters began, and we mention the fact as an evidence that in this age of intelligence and inquiry, nothing that is really valuable to mankind can prove a pecuniary failure—even though it may lack the help of capital, and have to fight its way against powerful opposing interests. Within two or three months after introduction, the article became self-supporting, and it now yields a magnificent annual revenue.—[Com.

Best Time to Paint Houses.

The Technologist says: The best time for painting the exterior of buildings is late in autumn or during the winter. Paint then applied will endure twice as long as when applied in early summer or in hot weather. In the former it dries slowly and becomes hard, like a glazed surface, not easily affected by the weather or worn off by the beating of storms. But in hot weather the oil in the paint soaks into the wood at once as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and nearly ready to crumble off. The last difficulty, however, might in a measure be guarded against, though at an increased expense, by first going over the surface with raw oil. By painting in cold weather one annoyance might certainly be escaped—namely, the collection of flies on the fresh paint.

Temperance Medicines.

If you would patronize true Temperance Medicines, scientifically prepared by a skilled physician, and by a process the discovery of his own, wherein not a drop of rum, whisky, beer or any other alcoholic or fermented liquor enters—use Dr. Pierce's Family Medicines. They do not manufacture drunkards, as do the various "Cordials," "Tonics," "Elixirs" and "Bitters" of the day. Golden Medical Discovery is nutritious, tonic, alterative, or blood cleansing, and an unequaled cough remedy. Pleasant Purgative Pellets, scarcely larger than mustard seeds, constitute an agreeable and reliable physic, Favorite Prescription—a remedy for debilitated females, while his Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is known the world over as the greatest specific for Catarrh and "Cold in the Head" ever given to the public. 646

Fire insurance is regarded everywhere as among the necessaries of life. A property-holder is reckless without it. Life Insurance is now classed with fire insurance in this particular. The National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, with Branch Office at Philadelphia (with which correspondence should be had), with the largest cash capital of any life insurance company in the world, offers insurance in all sections of the country at three-fourths the customary rates, and desires an agent in every locality. It combines absolute strength with unusual cheapness, is managed by some of the best men of the country, and is well worthy the patronage of all persons seeking insurance, and the attention of all persons seeking employment.—[Com.

TWO NOTED literary men died in New York city, last year, and it was supposed that both died poor. Each received a salary amounting to more than $3,000 a year, for many years before he died. In one instance it was necessary to take up a collection among the friends of the deceased to obtain the necessary funds for burial expenses. In the other case, while the dead man lay in the house, a friend searching through his private papers found a life insurance policy for $5,000. The last premium had been paid by a friend while the man was in good health. Do not neglect to insure your life. Do it now, and we recommend the old New York Life Insurance Company as one of the very best companies to insure in. Send to the home office, 348 Broadway, New York, for all necessary papers.—[Com.

The Career of a Great Remedy.

Twenty summers have elapsed since it was briefly announced that a new vegetable tonic and alterative, bearing the name of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, had been added to the list of Preventive and Restorative medicines. The modest advertisement which invited attention to the preparation stated that it had been used, with great success, in private practice, as a cure for dyspepsia, bilious complaints, constipation and intermittent fever. It was soon discovered that the article possessed extraordinary properties. The people, of every class, tested its merits as a tonic, stimulant, corrective and restorative, and found that its effects more than fulfilled their hopes and expectations. From that time to the present its course has been upward and onward, and it stands to-day at the head of all medicines of its class, American or imported, in the magnitude of its sales and its reputation as a safe, agreeable and potent invigorant and restorative. For languor and debility, lack of appetite and gastric disturbances, so common during the summer months, it is absolutely infallible. Indigestion, bilious disorders, constipation, nervousness, periodical fevers, and all the ordinary complaints generated by a vitiated and humid atmosphere, vanish under its renovation and regulating influence. This is its record, avouched by volumes of intelligent testimony, extending over a period of a fifth of a century, and comprehending the names of thousands of well-known citizens belonging to every class and calling. In Europe it is thought a great thing to obtain the patronage of royalty for a "patent medicine," but Hostetter's Bitters has been spontaneously approved by millions of independent sovereigns, and its patent consists in their indorsement.

WHEN THE LIVER IS OUT OF ORDER use Dr. Jayne's Sanative Pills, and you will bring back this organ to a healthy condition, and get rid of many distressing symptoms.

VINEGAR BITTERS
PURELY VEGETABLE
FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
EUREKA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

DR. RADWAY'S
SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT
Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for

Kidney and Bladder Complaints,

Urinary and Womb diseases, Gravel, Diabetes, Dropsy, Stoppage of Water, Incontinence of Urine, Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, and in all cases where there are brick-dust deposits, or the water is thick, cloudy, mixed with substances like the white of an egg, or threads like white silk, or there is a morbid, dark, bilious appearance, and white bone-dust deposits, and when there is a pricking, burning sensation when passing water, and pain in the Small of the Back and along the Loins.

No Preparation Has ever given such universal satisfaction as the OLD STYLE BITTERS. They stand upon their true medicinal qualities, and are composed of Purely Vegetable Standard Tonics. The Medical fraternity acknowledge them the most pleasant and reliable remedy ever offered.

For Dyspepsia, From whatever cause, the OLD STYLE BITTERS are a never failing remedy.

For Liver Complaint and Biliousness—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are a sure cure for any trouble of the Liver. When torpid and diseased the Bitters stimulate to action, causing a free flow of the stagnant bile, leaving the Liver in a natural and healthy state.

Jaundice—Is one of the results of a disorganized Liver, for which OLD STYLE BITTERS is a sure cure.

Catarrh.—Thousands are suffering from this painful and dangerous disease. The persistent use of OLD STYLE BITTERS will cure, if taken according to directions.

Fever and Ague—The OLD STYLE BITTERS strike this disease right at the point for sure eradication, and are a positive preventive and certain cure.

For Headaches, Dizziness, Rheumatism, Uneasiness, Distress and Enlargement of the Spleen, Irritation and Derangement of the Stomach, Kidneys and Liver, there is no medicine yet produced equal to the OLD STYLE BITTERS.

Loss of Appetite.—If you desire to become vigorous and strong eat good plain nourishing food and take OLD STYLE BITTERS before each meal. This will produce the desired effect.

Consumption.—This disease spares neither old or young, but quietly takes its victim to the grave. If taken in time the OLD STYLE BITTERS are a never-failing remedy.

Female Weakness and General Debility.—The OLD STYLE BITTERS are especially adapted for Females, as they contain nothing that will injure the weakest physical form. Debilitated young ladies and those giving birth and nursing children are in constant need of an invigorating Tonic to build up their constitutions. The OLD STYLE BITTERS are just the thing. The world has not produced better. They are perfectly harmless and very pleasant to take.

A Tonic.—OLD STYLE BITTERS are unsurpassed by any Tonic or Bitters, and grateful thousands acknowledge them the 'Wonder of the Age.'

Will any one take Vile, Nasty poisons, falsely called Tonics, when such a pleasant and effectual remedy as OLD STYLE BITTERS can be had? Those who love life will not.

Beware of Counterfeits.—None genuine without the signature of Dr. A. H. Smith, also his name and trademark blown in the bottle.

CONSUMPTION
And Its Cure.
WILLSON'S
Carbolated Cod Liver Oil
Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

C. N. U. No. 27.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, July 10, 1873

Hon. Peter Kiser, of Fort Wayne, claims to have in his possession the veritable little ax with which George Washington cut the apple tree.

The song of the friendly pistol is heard throughout the land. Every day some fresh and blood-curdling murder is recoded. Crime was never more rampant, while criminals go unwhipt of justice through pleasure of emotional insanity or some equally contemptible quibble of the law.

Now, that Oakes Ames has passed away, Schuyler Colfax is planning a little arrangement by which he proposes to bring to the front a gentleman "just returned from Europe" who is to swear that Oakes Ames himself that drew the cash for that famous $1,200 Credit Mobilier check which has given the ex-Vice President so much trouble. Sharp, but we apprehend, a trifle too thin to "draw."

The Liberal Republicans state contral committee of New York held a meeting on Saturday, at which were many prominent gentlemen.—After discussion it was resolved by the committee to hold a state convention at an early day, and to act in concert with the Democraatic party. General John Cochrane presided at the meeting, and made a most telling and forcible argument for unity on the part of Liberals and Democrats.

Two Judges—Judge Howland, of Indianapolis, and Judge Patterson, of Sullivan county—have decided that the new liquor law does not require a petition for the granting of a permit to be signed by a majority or those actualy voting, but simply a majority of the legal voters of a ward, town or township, as the case may be. they differ in toto from the opinion of Attorney General Denny.

A new Atlantic Cable has been laid. How little the general public know of this enterprise; and yet, quietly and successfully the Great Eastern has reached Heart's Content, and laid another cable. When the Great Eastern was built she was found to be a failure as a passenger or freight vessel; but she has demonstrated the fact that she is a success in laying ocean cables.—Her great length and depth enables her to ride the waves steadily, with less danger to the cable than smaller ones would. She has earned a place in the history of the 19th century, and proud may she be of it.

The man for times has as at last turned up. His name is Jewell, his occupation that of a minister of the Gospel, his place of residence Lafayette Ind. the good things he proposes to do for a suffering people are: "Stop the importation and manufacture, as well as the sale and use of liquor; break down all monopolies; bring about the repeal of divorce laws; regain for the family the healthful influence it should exert in our social system; substitute arbitration for war; promote universal love; strengthen the moral attributes of the government; enforce home economy; establish a non sectarian school system; suppress political partisanship; supersede selfish political economy by a more philanthropic plan, and defend labor against capital."

The Republican papers of other States are not so hasty in coming to the defence of Senator Morton, for his part in the salary grab, as the papers of this State. The Senator favored a much larger increase than was voted and would have taken his share of the plunder without an objection but for the popular indignation that swept over the country. To shelter himself from the storm, he left Washington without drawing the back pay, but left it standing to his credid to be receipted for at any time in the future. Referring to this matter the Detroit Tribune says: "The man who marks out for himself Senator Sherman's 'passive policy,' also confesses that is the receiver of what he regards as stolen goods, but that he is willing instead of making prompt restitution, to leave the property where he can reach it, if at any time in the future it should seem safe and he should think best. All these performances savor of weak knees and a limber spine, and are based upon the false idea that the peoble can be humbugged with chaff."

English Usage—A Difference.

Mr Robert Lowe, the British Chancelor of Exchequer, recently gave a contract of carrying mails by sea on the east coast of Africa for £26.000 a year to one company when another company had offered to perform the same service for £16,000 a year

No sinister motive or corrupt bargain has been attributed to Mr. Lowe. in this transaction; and the London press only denounces the press as stupid careless, over liberal, lavish, and so on. The Spectator says: If the House chooses to say that he was in ignorance over liberal, or if the Cabinet chooses to cancel his contract, he can hardly stay in power." At any rate it is certain that Mr. Lowe has come very near to being turned out of the Cabinet for this squandering of the public money.

The difference between the Government of England and that of the United States in affairs like this is remarkable. With us one of the Secretaries boldly takes $93,000 out of the Treasury and hands it over to parties to whom, by an express statue, he is prohibited from paying anything; and there is reason to believe that his inducement to this dishonest act was "a present to a lady" of $5,000. Yet he remains in power, with enormous additional chances at the Treasury which he has so successfully invaded. In England official extravagance is hated and corruption is not known. With us corruption is the rule and extravagance is continual.

The Chicago Times, of yesterday, embodies in the following a good deal worthy of attention: "In New England, the most conspicuous defender of the salary steal, and the most pronounced apologist of the Credit Mobilier robbery is B. F. Butler. And B. F. Butler is in New England the recognized champion of 'the Administration' at Washington.

"In Ohio, the most conspicuous defender of the salary steal and apologist for as well as participant in the Credit Mobilier robberry is John A. Bingham. And John A. Bingham is the chosen Representative of 'the Administration' at a foreign Court.

"In Wisconsin, the most conspicuous defender of the salary steal and most emphatic apologist of the Credit Mobilier robbery is 'Matt' Carpenter. And 'Matt' Carpenter is in Wisconsin the recognized champion of 'the Admintration' at Washington.

"At Washington, the man who signed the 'Salary Grab' act, and without whose signature neither Butler, nor Bingham, nor Carpenter, nor any of the rest of the thieves, could have stolen what they did steal, is U. S. Grant, the head figure of 'the Administration,' and three of whose most trusted political friends are named Butler Bingham, and Carpenter. What do these facts signify?"

The Hon. George E. Pugh and a large number of other prominent citizens of Cincinnati have issued a call inviting the people of Hamilton county and of Ohio in general to participate in the State Convention to be held at Columbus on July 30. This is the Convention called by the Democracy of Allen county upon a platform of which the following is a conspicuous portion:

"Whereas, Corruption in appalling proportions pervades all of the political avenues of the country, so that the public confidence is almost entirely obliterated; and

"Whereas, The sole purpose of the Democratic party is, and ought to be, the promotion of the public interests and the preservation of the house of the people; and

"Whereas, Both of the political parties have demonstrated that they are powerless to check or control the existing tendency toward the utter demoralization of the politics of the country."

We rejoice that men so eminent in the Democratic party as Mr. Pugh and his associates agree in the declaration that the sole purpose of the Democratic party ought to be the promotion of the public interests and the preservation of the honor of the people.

Gen. Brinkerhoff, Chairman of the Liberal Republican State Central Committee of Ohio, has also called a State Convention to meet in Columbus on the 30th inst. Liberal Republicans can hardly fail to approve the doctrines set forth in in the Allen county resolutions, add they will generally be very ready to accept these principles as their opn, without regard to previous party affiliations.

OFFICIAL PAPER [illegible] COUNTY

Local and [illegible]

Currants are ripe.

Cherries are [illegible].

Whew! but its hot.

Plenty of rain last week.

How'd ye enjoy the Fourth?

The farms don't like so much rain.

Some wheat was harvested this week.

Go to the Central for your soda water. Its the best in town.

Work on the new hotel is progressing rapidly.

The Court House side-walk is going slow.

Work has commenced on the Ensley block.

The weather soothsayers are now predicting a wet harvest.

Two weeks from to-day is the time for the Club to give a hop.

The young folks at Corunna had a hop on the evening of the Fourth.

Ice-cream, and big dishes too, for a ten cent scrip, at Tommy Leasure's saloon.

Billy Edgerton is building up a large country trade in his line. Bill is a good barber.

Edward Picker, Esq., of the Toledo Blade is visiting his parents in this place He reports good times at Toledo.

We notice a new frame building nearly completed on Cedar street. Also a brick residence.

There is some complaint about the potato bugs, but we do not think their ravages will be very serious.

We have a new lot of material, and those wanting work done can have a good job at a reasonable price.

The boys of this place had quite a nice little dance at the hall, on the evening of the Fourth. About 10 couple were present.

Some fighting rooster who said he lived near Auburn, got pounded between here and Waterloo, on the Fourth. For particulars see his "sconce."

The Methodist Sunday-school had a meeting for the children last Sunday evening. D. D. Moody, Esq. made some very touching remarks to the young men.

M. F. Long, Jr., is still working up the Watertown fire insurance company.—Those wanting their property insured would do well by calling on Mike.

A great many reports have been circulated in regard to the accident at Corunna, on the 4th inst. We are sorry to say that the ladies got the biggest ones

The "set-up-Mary-Jane-and-show-your-breast-pin" attitude in pedesttianizing is the agnoy with the fashionable fair ones now, having supærceded the Kangaroo flop and Grecian Bend.

E. McIntyre, Esq., at Waterloo, is rapidly building up the patronage of the Waterloo House. Mac is a good business man, and we hope he will success in this undertaking.

A country lass, the other evening, asked what those little things (balloons) were. Her fellow replied they were things in which Auburn people sent little babies to heaven.

At Corunna, during the hardest part of the rain, on the 4th inst., we saw a man walking along the street in his bare head carrying a shilling straw hat under his linen coat. Every little helps.

Our friend N. King, at the junction has a nice property there that he will dispose of at reasonable rates. It consists of an acre and a half of good ground, with a good new frame house. Now is the time to get a bargain.

W. F. Smith & Bro., of Butler, are doing a good trade because they keep a good stock and sell at low figures. They keep good grocceriess and provisions and have their numerous customers.

A faithless lad from the country promised the pardner of his arm he would not drink any intoxicating liquors on the 4th, but he did and got drunk. She pleaded with tears in her eyes for him to take her home. He was too drunk to comply.—This was at Waterloo.

Our subscribers should remember to let us know where they want their paper delivered at this place, at the Postoffice or this office. Those abroad must not blame us because they have to pay postage, as it is an act of Congress and must be obeyed The salary grabbers cut this privilege off with their "little hatchet."

A week ago last Sabbath as Mr. C. Cool was going to church, his horse took fright ran away. He dashed into the woods and threw him out of the buggy, breaking his shoulder and bruising him up considerably. There was not much left of the vehicle.

[illegible] having worked steadily on his [illegible]" (one acres) for two successive [illegible] has "gone west" for recreation. [illegible] to Duluth, thence west on the [illegible] Pacific Railroad as far as construction [illegible] will be absent about two weeks.

[illegible] Baker east of town, offered [illegible] last year for $8000. He gave [illegible] to the Eel River road, and the other day he was offered $10,000. That's making $2000 pretty easy, but we hope there are few people in the county so mercenary.

[illegible] Press says that the "editorial" [illegible] edits the Auburn half of the Courier does not know that Waterloo will celebrate.

The [illegible] undeveloped louses, who runs a paper of one half the reading matter of the Courier, could not have perused the Auburn half very closely.

D. H. Boser, the popular landlord of Butler hotel, is meeting with great success since he has re-assumed the proprietorship of that popular house. He keeps things neat, clean and tidy, and sets a table loaded with palatable and digestiable food. We can recommend the Butler Hotel of Butler.

EXCURSION.—On Thursdry July 17th the Ft. Wayne Jackson & Saginaw R. R. will sell round trip tickets to Alpena Mich good to return within 30 days at $12.50. John L. Davis has tickets and can furnish all particulars. The Excursion train will pass through Auburn at 3 30 Friday morning.

A large, stout fellow in this place has heard that it is generally reported at Corunna, that he was drunk on the night of the 3rd. He will be there in a few days to see the person who told it. He says his muscle has always carried him through, and its just as big as it ever was. We make a note of this in order that no one will "go west" on account of it. He has reference to the muscles on his legs. Of course he has.

The Angola band furnished music for the Waterloo folks, on the Fourth. We have no hesitancy in pronouncing it a first-class band, composed of as clever young men as ever chawed beef. They play admirable, though we doubt whether they could do justice to themselves on such a day as the Fourth was. We hope there may be an occasion soon when they can regale our citizens with some of their harmonious sounds.

We have met him—Mac—we mean Mr McGonigal, the talented lawyer and able editor of the Angola Republican. Also Mr. Peterson of the Times, both agreeable gentleman. We saw them at Waterloo on the 4th. Mac had a professional call while there is the reason we know him to be as above stated. Two of our boys were arrested for assault and battery, and therefore a lawyer came forth. While he was pleading their case, the scalawags gave leg bail, and when their attorney looked around they were gone. The attorney was described to us as a man with "mutton chop" whiskers, and we only fully comprehended the meaning when we met our aimable friend Mac.

How to Secure a Good Instrument.

The introduction of the renting plan in our own city and vicinity has proved a wonderful success, demonstrating its usefullness in providing families with instruments.

We can refer to hundreds who would have never had an organ or piano in their house but for this plan. It recommends itself to the mechanic, clerk, school teacher, laborer and others who have a state salary, part of which they can devote t the payment of an instrument. It has also been found convenient to merchants who have all their capital actively employed, and do not wish to draw the full price of instrument from their business at one time. The success of this plan leads us to extend the limits to which the plan has been confined, and we are now prepared to furnish instruments to all who want one, on the best terms we possibly can. For the purpose of giving information we annex some of the usual terms for for an instrument on this plan.

THE FOURTH.

The Fourth, the Fourth, the [illegible] Fourth
With its rain and mud from south to north,
Filling the streets with its slush and mire
Whoever [illegible] it did'nt is a darn liar

Our rural poet has thus said, and yet he don't half express the state of things on the Fourth in this section of country. Rain commenced falling about 7 o'clock in the morning and continued in no gentle showers until noon when a cessation of a couple of hours took place. We are certain that it rained, because when we started to Butler we were dry, and when we arrived there we wasn't. The band were in the same predicament. But it was the Fourth and everybody was bound to celerain, brate or no brate.

Though the rain had poured down from early morn, we found a large crowd filling every available place of shelter in the place. After dinner a procession was formed which marched to the grove where the Butler and Auburn bands furnished music, and the declaration was read, followed by a splendid oration.

After this came the fantastic parade, which made fun for everybody. The procession was large, composed of wagons and horsemen. The venerable speaker of color was in the place of honor in the front, and was led flushingly to the speaker's stand, to belch forth in an original speech. This he did so well that a mule in the procession was so tickled that he made a hearty responce in his customary language. He new exactly where the laugh come in. Then the rain recommenced, and never let up until night, and the fire-works were postponed. Had their been fair weather Butler would surely have been swallowed up with the crowd.

In the evening we went to Waterloo and found about as many people there, Angola being well represented. The programme for the day had to be abandoned but in the evening the display of fire works was given. The dance at Matson's hall was largely attended, and the supper at the Lent House was a splendid affair. What we regret the most was the prevention of the races by the exceeding bad weather. In fact all seemed to regret this and no doubt the attendance at the track would have been quite large. Take it all in all celebrating on such a day as last Friday was discouraging work, but no one is to blame.

Auburn was quiet and those of her citizens that remained at home were quite contented. Its hard work to celebrate especially on a rainy day. There are no accidents to record resulting from the celebration, and that is a gratifying feature at least.

CORUNNA.

This place had no celebration on the Fourth, but quite a good time was had on the evening of the 3rd. A large crowd had gathered on the bridge that crosses the Air Line Railroad, and a grand performance was had similar to a trapese entertainment. On the morning of the 4th fire-crackers were snapping here and there until train time, when almost every body went to Butler.

The new brick school house is progressing finely, and in a short time they can boast of a better structure of this kind than Auburn can. For a small town it has a great many enterprising citizens, and the majority of them are temperance men, which speaks well of the gentlemen who takes the lead in the public improvements of the place. Side walks and crossings are very much needed, but we are informed that new ones are to be laid down soon.

L. Miller, Esq., freight agent, asked us to state that Quinn did not call for a ticket to cross the river, as reported. We know that Mr. M. is a gentleman who can be relied upon, and carries as good a heart as ere breat bore.

C. Codgswell, Esq., is doing a flourishing trade in dry goods and groceries. He is a good manager and those are the ones that suceced.

The two operators are undoubtedly the most accommodating gentlemen on the Air Line Road. They occupy their legitimate business.

Isaac Batchel, the popular miller, has established a wide reputation by turning out good work.

James Crummy is still running the hotel, and is building up a patronage for the house.

Wm. Adams is dishing out the hardware, stove etc., as lively as ever, and keeps a good stock to select from.

A. W. Meeks, with his substantial gate, is supplying nearly every farm far and near. It is said to be a good gate.

Mr. McCormick has a rushing trade in the boot and shoe line. We know him to be a good workman.

There are among us suffering from derangment of the Liver and Bowels. Fever and Ague. Billious Fevers and discceases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver To all such we would recommendthe use of "Liver Stimulant and Cathartic," which is advertised in our columns. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these disease prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in the place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggist and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph.

If any body'll guess the rest of this article we'll give up.

DEATHS.

John Sommers, born April 8th 1795, and died July 5th 18[illegible], aged [illegible] years, [illegible] months and 27 days.

It is not often that we are called upon to record the death of one of the pioneers of our county. Only here and there stands an aged veteran, wearing his whitened crest, and monument of energy, enterprise and toil. These brave ones led the van of our civilization and in the battle for victory over nature's rude soldiery most of them have fallen.

John Sommers, one of our oldest citizens, on Friday morning July 5, after a long and painful illness passed from among us. He was born in Montgomery county, Pa., on April 8, 1795. When a boy he moved with his parents to Chester county, Pa. There on Feb. 22, 1814 he was then married to Miss E. Smith, now the aged Mrs. Sommers, and stricken in years, she has been the partner of his life even down to the last. In Oct. 1832 he moved to this place, and located on the farm where he died, one mile southeast of Auburn. His own hands help to cut out the road which is now Main street of our thriving town. But there is a nobler phrase to his life. He was not only a pioneer of the county but also of the church. At the organization of the Presbyterian church of this place in Dec. 1845 he and his wife were two of the six who composed its membership. For want of room in our own church the funeral services were conducted in the Babtist church, kindly offered us for the occasion The funeral sermon was preached by the present pastor of the church Rev. J. Emory Fisher from Zech 1:5 Your fathers, where are they! and the Prophets do they live forever? Phil. 1:21, For me to live in Christ and to die is gain. It was followed by a few remarks by Rev. J. B. Fowler of Waterloo, former pastor of this church. and by Rev. Ward, resident Babtist minister of this place. The high appreciation in which father Sommers was held by his fellow citizens was manifest in the fact that it was the largest funeral ever assembled in this place. E.

SHOCKING OCCURENCE.

A Young Man Killed.

Last Friday morning just as the people of Corunna were begining to realize that another anniversary day was dawning upon them, they were startled by the enactment of a tragedy in their midst that appalled the stoutest heart. Several young men from this place had gone to Corunna, in this county, the night before, and on the morning of the Fourth were at the depot in that place. As an eastern bound frieght train, going about twenty miles an hour, neared the depot, two young men attempted to cross the track in front of the engine. Henry Sherlock being in advance crosed over and was followed by Chauncy Quinn, a painter in the employment of the Canon Bros. of this place. Quinn in trying to reach a platform on the opposite side moved obliquely toward the train when one end of the engine caught his foot, by which he was forced round in front, when the cow-catcher received him and threw him about ten feet high, and a distance of about twenty feet from the engine. He was instantly picked up and taken into the depot in an insensible condition and a doctor called who pronounced the injuries he had received as likely to prove fatal. He was afterward taken to the hotel, where he revived a little and made a few incoherent remarks. His left arm was found to be broken, and his left side, where he was struck, seemed to be the points at which he suffered the most. He lived a little over two hours. He was not at the time under the influence of liquor, as those who talked with him testify There were several rumors in regard to his death, but after weighing all the circumstances there can be no doubt but that it was purely an accident. His relatives were telegraphed for, and the remains were brought to this place on Saturday and interred.

Thus has another dreadful warning been pronounced against the carelessness which many assume around our railways. Let it be heeded.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE Beecher scandal has had a fresh revival in Brooklyn, this time by the reverend gentleman's own friends. One of the Plymouth Church congregation has preferred specific charges of slander against Henry C. Bowen, the author of most of the scandalous stories about Beecher. The matter will be thoroughly investigated by an Examining Committee of the Church, and the truth or falsity of the reports established. Mr. Beecher is represented as anxious to have the investigation made at once.

The New York Tribune's Boston correspondent, after a careful survey of the political field in Massachusetts, concludes that Ben Butler, through the aid of the Administration, helped by the dissatisfaction with Gov. Washburne's course on the liquor question, will secure his nomination and election to the Governorship of the Bay State. He adds that large numbers of Democrats will vote for Butler.

The books of the extensive importing house of Duden, Freeres & Co. have been seized by the Custom-House officers at New York. They are charged with having, during a series of years, carried on a systematic course of swindling on the revenue department, the penalties for which, it is said, will reach the enormous sum of $2,500,000. Their principal house is in Brussels, with branches in Nottingham, London, St. Petersburg, San Francisco and New York. They deal principally in laces.

HENRY WARD BEECHER has at last unsealed his lips and spoken out in regard to the scandalous stories that have been circulated about him. In a brief note to the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle he says:

> "I have just returned to the city to learn that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull for a letter of mine, supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me. I have no objection to have the Eagle state, in any way it deems fit, that Mrs. Woodhull, or any other person or persons, who may have letters of mine in their possession, have my cordial consent to publish them. In this connection, and at this time, I will only add that the stories and rumors which for some time past have been circulated about me are grossly untrue, and I stamp them in general and in particular as utterly false. Respectfully,
>
> HENRY WARD BEECHER."

....The international billiard tournament at New York has resulted in conferring the championship of the world on Albert Garnier, of Chicago....Col. Lionel Percy Sidney, an ex-officer of the British army, was murdered and robbed at New York, last week....Five men were killed by an explosion of giant powder in the Hoosac tunnel, on Sunday.... Woodhull and Claflin have been again indicted by the New York Grand Jury for circulating obscene literature.

THE New Hampshire Legislature has indefinitely postponed the bill to allow women to vote in school districts....Duden, Freres & Co., the New York importers of laces, who are charged with heavy frauds on the revenue, declare themselves innocent, and charge that the whole affair is a blackmailing operation. ....Prof. Wise proposes to start on his air voyage to Europe about the 30th of August. ST. CLAIR, Mich., is excited over the discovery of petroleum indications....The Missouri river has made a cut-off near Onawa, Iowa, thus transferring about 1,500 acres to Nebraska.... The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company owns and operates 784 miles of road, all of which has been built in less than four years....San Francisco is being scourged by small-pox...David Webb, of Columbus, O., was killed by an explosion of fireworks, which he was taking home in a hack for the 4th of July. ....A Minnesota farmer the other day surprised a highwayman, who demanded his money, by knocking him down with a fence-rail and turning him over to the officers.... The proprietor of a Farmington (Minn.) hotel and one of his guests quarreled about the length of a piece of candle furnished the latter to light him to bed. The guest shot and fatally injured the landlord, and he in turn was shot and instantly killed by an officer who attempted his arrest.... The citizens of Salem, Ind., intolerant at the law's delay, have terribly avenged the murder of one of their number. Some days ago Delos Heffron, a noted desperado, killed, without any provocation, Dr. Halstead, a respectable citizen of the town. Since then threats of lynching the murderer have been frequently whispered around, but no open demonstration toward that end had been made previous to the 29th ult. About 2 o'clock on the morning of that day a body of masked men entered Salem, and, after seizing the town patrolmen, proceeded to the jail. The Deputy Sheriff refusing to give up the keys, a sledge-hammer was procured, with which the mob proceeded to force their way into the cell occupied by Heffron. After repeated blows with the ponderous hammer the two doors that intervened between the mob and their coveted prey finally yielded, and the murderer stood face to face with the vigilants. Heffron had watched the progress of the mob which came thirsting for his blood, and had prepared himself as well as he could for a desperate resistance, knowing death awaited him if taken, determined to fight to the last. With some pieces of furniture of the cell he stood like a tiger at bay and guarded the door. The mob, knowing the desperate character of the man, and that the first who entered would meet certain death, hesitated to attempt an entrance. They procured balls of twine, and, saturating them with coal oil and turpentine, threw them into the cell, and thrust others forward on the end of long poles. Having thus lighted up the cell, bringing the victim into full view, they opened fire on him, firing some twenty shots, one entering his breast and another breaking his arm. This incapacitated him from using the chair which he had seized to defend himself, when a rock thrown at him struck him on the head and knocked him down, and before he could recover he was seized, tied, and dragged out of the cell and jail. "What are you going to do with me?" he asked. "Hang you!" "I will go along with you," he said. He was immediately taken to the covered railroad bridge, about thirty feet high, two squares from the jail, when he asked time to pray, but the lynchers replied that they could not wait. A rope was put around his neck and thrown over the bridge, and Heffron was pushed off. As soon as he was dead, the lynchers returned to the juail, gathered up everything they had left which could afford a clue to their identity, released the Sheriff and guards, and scattered in every direction.

AT Rawlins Springs, 140 miles west of Laramie, on the Union Pacific, a party of citizens went to a camp of Ute Indians who were accused of committing some depredations in the settlement. A quarrel ensued, which ended in the whites falling on the Indians and slaying ten or twelve of them. The surviving Utes are very much excited, and a general outbreak is feared....Baker & Co.'s tobacco factory, in Detroit, has been burned. Loss, $75,000....Virginia City, Nev., has been visited by a terrible calamity. A large quantity of nitro-glycerine, giant powder and rock blasting powder, stored in the cellar of a building, exploded with frightful effect. Two buildings were blown to atoms, and several others shattered and partially demolished. Ten persons were killed, and a number of others injured, some of them beyond the hope of recovery. Among the killed are Maj.-Gen. Jacob T. Van Bokkelen, the agent for the explosive material, with which, it is believed, he was experimenting at the time of the explosion.

A FATAL duel was fought at Bay St. Louis, Miss., on the 1st inst., between Col. R. B. Rhett, Jr., editor of the New Orleans Picayune, and ex-Judge Cooley, a prominent member of the New Orleans bar. The weapons were double-barreled shot-guns, one barrel loaded with a single ball, and the distance was forty yards. The ground was promptly selected, the distance measured, and the parties placed in position. At the first fire, Rhett's shot ranged high, and Cooley's to the right. Cooley delivered his fire first. At the second shot, both fired simultaneously, and Cooley fell, mortally wounded by a ball entering his left side and passed apparently through his heart. He expired in six minutes, without apparently suffering, only speaking these words to Dr. Holliday: "I am shot through the heart." The gentlemen engaged in the affair arranged the usual civilities after the fire, and separated with expressions of mutual respect and consideration. The affair grew out of the iniquitous libel suit of Hawkins vs. the Picayune, in which a verdict of $18,000 was given against the latter, confessedly by a bribed jury. Col. Rhett was the challenging party. Judge Cooley was a native of Louisiana, and had been engaged in one or two previous affairs of honor. Col. Union Pacific Lands—Patents Withheld Till the Road is Completed.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company does not succeed in obtaining patents for the remainder of the lands located, but not yet patented. There are about 20,000,000 acres included in their original grant. Up to the present time patents have been issued for between 900,000 and 1,000,000 acres only of lands lying in Nebraska. This is only half the amount selected by the road. The patents for the other have been withheld. They are not withheld, however, because of the pendency of the Credit Mobilier suit, though, if there were no other reason, this question would doubtless be considered. The difficulty that the road has to procure patents is that the Government has no information that the road has been completed in accordance with the terms of the law. The last report of the condition of the road was made by a commission of eminent citizens, of which, it will be remembered, Ben. Wade was a member. This commission found that the road was not constructed and equipped according to law. The ties were of soft wood, and the culverts were of wood instead of stone. There were omissions of like character to comply with the law. Nevertheless, the commission recommended that half the lands located by the road should be patented to the company, but that the other half of the patents should be reserved till the terms of the law had been complied with. The Government acted, and is acting, according to this report. The Secretary, in answer to the application for the rest of the patents, expresses his willingness to appoint a commission to inspect the road, and report whether the law has been fulfilled; but the company does not seem to be in haste to have any more inspections. They, however, have desired to have patents for all the lands east of the Rocky Mountains, and that the lands west of those patented should all be reserved. This proposition was not accepted, and every other section of those located is reserved. It is therefore not likely that the Union Pacific will secure any more patents for months, possibly for years, to come.—Washington Letter.

A Charmer Taken In.

In the laguage of the Era, an English authority in all things theatrical, the following curious occurrence is said to have taken place at Brighton. The performance of "Man and Wife" at the Theater Royal was delayed some little time on Tuesday night in consequence of it having been discovered that Mr. Charles Collette, who was playing the part of Sir Patrick Lundie, was not in the theater. Before, however, an apology was made Mr. Collette arrived, wet to the skin, and in a state of great exhaustion. He dressed hurriedly, and appeared on the stage, exhibiting no traces of the ordeal he had gone through. It appears that Mr. Collette had learnt the art of snake-charming in India, and was explaining the process to Mr. George Reeves Smith, the courteous general manager of the Brighton aquarium. Notwithstanding the entreaties of Mr. Smith Mr. Collette insisted on exercising his science upon the octopus, and succeeded in luring the monster from his hiding-place, and caused it to follow him round the tank. On bending down to the surface of the water, however, the creature seemed to shake off all control, and turning his snaky feelers round Mr. Collette's neck, drew him by main force into the tank. A desperate struggle ensued beneath the water, whence Sir Patrick Lundie was with difficulty extricated by Mr. Smith and several bystanders. Mr. Collette has since confined his powers of charming to the patrons of the theater, and with far greater success.

THE Emperor of Austria has two Ministers in his employ to-day who have both been under sentence of death for high treason—Count Andrassy, Minister of Foreign Affairs for the Empire, and Herr Florian Ziemalkowski, Mayor of Lemberg, who has lately been appointed Prime Minister for the province of Galacia.

Romance of Medicine.

Under this title an article in London [illegible] professional anecdotes:

We know of a medical man whose duty it is to take lunch every day at a great castle belonging to a noble lord. The household is immense, and there is just the chance that there may be some case of indisposition demanding attention. He gets some of the best company and some of the best lunches in England, and duly charges a guinea for each attendance. There is a very wealthy man, near a great city, who cannot bear to be left for the night. There is a physician of great ability who drives out of town nightly to sleep at his residence; he is consequently debarred evening society, and if he goes out to dinner, he has to leave his friends before wine. He has to charge his patient a thousand a year, and I think he earns his money. Sometimes the services are such that money cannot repay them. A friend of mine, a young medicus, had a standing engagement of four hundred a year to look after the health of an old lady. She required to be inspected three times a day, and made an exhibition of her tongue and pulse. What made things so aggravating was that she was as strong as a horse, while the doctor was a delicate man. She was so selfish and perverse that he was obliged to tell her that he would have nothing to do with her case. Similarly, I know the son of a rich man, who proposed to pay a clergyman several hundred pounds a year for leave to spend his evenings with him. The parson, however, was obliged to tell his rich friend that he talked such intolerable twaddle that he could not accept his company on any terms that could be named. But the oddest of these arrangements is the following: A medical man has been attending a patient several years, and yet he has never seen his patient. The gentleman firmly believes that he has an œsophagus of peculiar construction, and that he is, accordingly, liable at any moment to be choked. That help may be at hand when any sudden emergency may occur, he has a physician in the house night and day. The physician, being human, must needs take his walks abroad, and it becomes necessary to provide a substitute for him two hours a day. Accordingly a doctor attends daily from twelve to two, fills up his time by disposing of an admirable lunch, and finds the gold and silver coin, in their usual happy combination, neatly put up by his plate, in tissue paper. Up to the present date he has never had the pleasure of exchanging words with his interesting patient.

Wonders of the Press.

In the production of a newspaper, what an expenditure of time, money, labor and judgment is required! Very few readers have an idea of the trouble and cost of producing the closely-printed sheet which lies upon their breakfast table every morning. By day and night hundreds of persons are watching for facts and events which they may report. All over the metropolis, and throughout the length and breadth of the land, there are observant newspaper correspondents, whom nothing escapes. Any noteworthy occurrence is duly reported, and anything special is transmitted by telegraph. How soon does the public mind become used to marvels! A curious fact concerning journalism is not known to the general public. It is noticeable that whenever an eminent person dies, biographies of his or her life spring up like mushrooms all over the country, apparently being the work of a night. Not so, however. The biographies of all leading politicians, and of all men and women eminent in the walks of literature, science and art, as well as of foreign monarchs, statesmen and public characters, are prepared and kept in readiness, additional facts being appended from time to time; so that at last, when tidings of death arrive, all that has to be done is to give the final particulars. When England was so terribly agitated by the sudden and critical illness of the Prince of Wales, which occurred in the latter part of the year 1872, some of the leading journals were unprepared with memoirs, and these had to be written in hot haste. In several cases they were actually set up and kept in readiness for instant use those dreadful days and nights when the royal sufferer was momentarily expected to breathe his last, and when, indeed, it was scarcely known whether life was extinct. If some of our prominent men could penetrate into the editorial arcana, and peruse the critiques upon themselves or their career destined for immediate publication after their death, they might find entertainment and learn a few wholesome truths. The story is told that the late Lord Brougham once had a false rumor of his death circulated, in order to gratify himself by reading what the newspapers said of him, but that a contradiction got abroad in those pre-telegraph days before the memoirs could be completed and issued, so that the morbid desire was only gratified in a few cases, and these were not very complimentary.

Number of Shingles in a Roof.

J. D. Tate gives to the New York Farmers' Club a rule for estimating the number of shingles required for a roof of any size—one which he thinks every mechanic and farmer should remember. First find the number of square inches in one side of the roof; cut off the right hand or unit figure, and the result will be the number of shingles required to cover both sides of the roof, laying five inches to the weather. The ridge board provides for the double courses at the bottom. Illustration: Length of roof, 100 feet; width of one side, 30 feet—100x30x144—422,000. Cutting of the right hand figure we have 33,200 as the number of shingles required.

ACCORDING to the London Era Sothern has made obout $1,000,000 by leading a Drundreary life for sixteen years. When it is recollected that the character was intended as a minor one, and that his first representation of it was a burlesque of the playwright's intention, made by Sothern in his wrath at having the part assigned him, it will be agreed, if the Era's figures are correct, that the wrath of Lord Dundreary of 1858 was a more profitable outburst of passion than usually falls to the lot of man.

Jerusalem.

Henry Day writes from the Holy Land to the New York Observer:

The population of Jerusalem is about 30,000, and is composed of two classes—the pilgrims and those who prey upon pilgrims. There is no permanency to it. They have no interest in the city as a home. The Bishops, clergy and monks of the Greek, Armenian, Coptic, and Latin Churches, who number thousands, and the Jewish population, which is largely increasing, are foreigners, and live on the charities of foreign countries. Very few of the inhabitants of the city own any property in it. A large proportion of the houses are owned, wholly or partly, by the mosques or by some of the Christian churches. This property, held in mortmain, is literally held by a dead hand. The gripe of death is on the whole. No change or improvement can take place. It is very common in Moslem countries for the pious to leave a certain annual sum to be paid from their property to the mosque for pious purposes. This gives the mosque a hold on the estate, which they never relinquish. It is tied up from sale or improvement by the family. This evil is felt all over Palestine and Syria. All these causes contribute to make the regular population of Jerusalem a wretched class of people. No missionary operations have ever succeeded in Jerusalem. It is said that the Jews are fast gaining in numbers, and will soon be the most numerous class. Their great vocation seems to be to wail by the great stones at the foundation of Solomon's Temple. One class of them are called Pharisees to this day. They are known by one curl hanging by each ear, and by fur worn on their cap. Their faces are very pale; but the cruel, deceitful, crafty look of the old Pharisees is stamped on every countenance. I can well imagine them crying out: "Away with him! Crucify him! crucify him!"

Dense Populations.

The Memorial Diplomatique gives the following interesting account of the density of population in the great centers of humanity throughout the globe. There are nine cities having a population exceeding 1,000,000 souls, viz.: London, 3,261,000; Soochow, 2,000,000; Paris, 1,825,000; Pekin, 1,648,000; Yeddo, 1,554,000; Canton, 1,236,000; Constantinople, 1,075,000; Sinont-an, in the province of Honan, 1,000,000; and Tchactchoan-foo, in the province of Fokien, 1,000,000. It will be seen that although London holds the first place, the Chinese Empire can still boast of possessing more populous cities than all the civilized States of the West. The number of cities possessing a population from above half a million is twelve, viz.: New York, Vienna, Berlin, Hangkaow, Philadelphia, St. Petersburg, Bombay, Calcutta, Foochow, Schening, Bankok, and Kiota. Twenty cities have a population of from 300,000 to 400,000 inhabitants, thirty-three of from 200,000 to 300,000, and ninety of from 100,000 to 200,000 inhabitants. Europe alone possesses 171 cities containing more than 50,000 inhabitants, at the head of which stand London, Paris, Constantinople, Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg.

One Cause of Consumption.

Dr. MacCormac, of Belfast, Ireland, is the author of a work on pulmonary consumption, recently published by the Longmans, London, and which has attracted considerable notice. According to Dr. MacCormac, induced consumption—as distinguished from that which is hereditary—has its origin in rebreathing expired air. Persons of a delicate constitution or organization should, he says, sleep alone, and, if possible, in spacious rooms, thus insuring a larger supply of pure, uncontaminated air; and the window-sash should invariably be slightly raised on retiring. When the dormitory is small, if not carefully ventilated, oxygen, the essential element that supports life is quickly exhausted, and the individual takes back into the lungs carbonic acid gas, which is so destructive of life—the whole system becoming deranged, the air-cells ulcerating, and, with the destruction of these, the whole bronchial region falling into disease.

LANGUAGE OF ANIMALS.—It has long been known that animals and insects have a language that is understood by others of the same group. But M. Houreau maintains that they can and do learn to understand the language of other groups. His dogs, for instance, perfectly understand his poultry. Cocks and hens have one danger-signal for the approach of a bird of prey, another for that of a terrestrial animal or for a man. When the latter was sounded the dogs would rush out and bark, while the former paid no attention whatever. He therefore concludes that fowls have the power of expressing slightly different, but closely allied ideas, and dogs can learn to understand these differences.

WHAT MANUFACTURING DOES.—There is many a city and town that will appreciate the following: One manufactory employing a hundred men will support an additional 500 people. Three hundred families will disburse annually, on an average, $800, or $75,000 in the aggregate. This money will be drawn into the town from the outside, where the manufactured goods are consumed, and the interest of this $75,000 at 10 per cent. would be $7,500. These hundred families, too, would require a hundred houses, thousands of pounds of agricultural produce, and thousands of yards of cotton and woolen goods, thus giving health and impetus to every branch of industry.

A NEW TREATMENT OF CANCERS.—The attention of the medical world abroad has been aroused by the new treatment of cancer, introduced in London by a Hungarian physician named Grob. He contends that cancer is not a local but a general disease; that it arises from the presence of a poison in the system; that the knife will never cure the disease, but only postpone its fatal effects. His remedy consists in setting up another disease—fever—under the influence of which the blood poison, which causes the cancer, is thrown off. It is said that he has made some marvelous cures.

THE valuation of the real estate in Ward 5, Boston, will be about the same as last year, notwithstanding $13,000,000 worth of buildings were destroyed by the fire, and it is estimated that the increase in value of real estate in the city will be from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000.

RUSSIA is especially unfortunate in the matter of manufactories. She has 90,000 of them, with a million of operatives. But the latter have a bad habit of getting sick. The sick rate is from sixty to seventy per cent., and the average life in a factory is only twenty years. At this rate, her manufactories will prove more destructive than an army of invasion.

HOOKA JIM'S skill as a trailer and scout surpasses common experience even in Indian warfare. The command under his lead as guide followed the Modoc trail by night; by some mysterious power he skillfully led them over the rocky ridges as if by intuition. When the trail grew cold he felt with his hands over the rocks and caught it again; and when at dead halt would strike a match, and holding his coat over it would catch the scent again and push ahead. It is really wonderful what perception he possesses to catch a trail.

American Benefactions to the Cause of Education.

Do not Americans appreciate education? Here is a list of some of their benefactions: $1,300,000 by Mr. Simmons, of Boston, for the industrial education of women; $1,000,000 by Daniel Drew, to endow a theological seminary, to which Abel Menand adds $100,000 more "for the education of women for the ministry;" $200,000 by Erastus Corning, for a female college; $400,000 by Robert Barns, of Indiana, for the education of orphans in that State; $100,000 by Orange Judd, the agricultural book publisher, for scientific department in Wesleyan University; $60,000 by Cyrus McCormick (the reaper), for theological seminary at Chicago; $100,000 by Daniel Appleton (the book publisher), for chancellorship and library in New York University; $100,000 by Nathaniel Thayer, of Boston, to Harvard University; $100,000 by Chauncey Rose, of Terre Haute, Ind., for female college; $100,000 by Henry Sage, of Brooklyn, N. Y., for female college building at Cornell University; $500,000 by Mr. Shaw, of St. Louis, for park and botanic garden; $200,000 by Mr. Pardee, of Pennsylvania, for scientific department of Lafayette College, at Easton, Pa.; $75,000 by Horace Sibley, of Rochester, N. Y., for a library building at Rochester University; $50,000 by the Rev. Jesse T. Peck to the new University at Syracuse, N. Y., which has been increased by other citizens to $1,500,000; $150,000 by Samuel Williston, for educational purposes in Easthampton, Mass.; $250,000 by Capt. H. Toland, to endow a medical department in the University of California; $100,000 in property, and $50,000 in cash, by Mr. John Anderson, of New York, to found the Penikese School of Natural History.

A MEXICAN RAILROAD SCHEME.—A contract has been made between the Mexican Government and the Mexican International Railway Company for the construction of a road from the city of Mexico to the Pacific Ocean and the river Rio Bravo del Norte, the details of which have just come to hand in the Cosmopolitan of June 6th, a paper printed in the Mexican Capital. The fourth article of the contract provides for an ingenious list of inducements for the company to hurry up their work. If the road is finished in nine years, the company gets but $100,000 as a kind of premium; if in eight years, $400,000; in seven years, $900,000; in six years, $1,600,000.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Sell the Surplus.

It is a very natural and excusable weakness in a breeder of fine stock, that he believes his own is a little better than his neighbor's, and that his own estimate is higher than the public's. It is not a profitable weakness, however, if indulged in too far. A special pride in one's own is a good thing, but the merchant who refuses to sell the last piece of a particular kind of goods for fear of breaking his assortment, and the breeder of fine stock who places too high an estimate upon his young ones and refuses to concede anything, until his farm is overstocked, his stock suffering for want of proper care, and his means exhausted, fall into the same error, though not with the same excuse. The most successful merchants, manufacturers and producers, as a rule, are those who meet the market with what they have for sale, when it is ready. Looking over the breeders of fine stock in this country, one is struck with the fact that the freest sellers are the most prosperous. A positive sale, once a year, with open, fair competition, tests the operations of a breeder in the crucible of public opinion, and, properly considered, is the most valuable aid to his own judgment that he can possibly have. It helps to reduce his notions as to their cash value, and supplies what his own pride of judgment disables him from obtaining in any other manner, a standard by which he must sell, and in reference to which he must breed or do worse. The best evidence of success in breeding is a spirited competitive sale of regular surplus products—not cull—and no large breeder of fine stock can be quite sure he is moving in the right direction until he has that indorsement; and if, on trial, he meets with no such success, he cannot make a new departure or break up the business too soon. To every overstocked breeder we say, sell, meet the merket; if the result proves you are on the right course, go ahead—if not, tack about—but sell.—Prairie Farmer.

Tender-Footed Horses.

An old man who has had much experience in handling and dealing in horses for more than half a century said to me recently that he had never known a horse to get "tender-footed" that was kept loose in a shed and yard, or in a box stall. That turning round and treading with their forward feet in the manure kept them constantly moist and soft. His theory appeared perfectly reasonable to me. I have no box stalls, but I use shavings for bedding, and every morning with a large shovel I move the wet shavings under the horse forward, in front of and under his forward feet, and then the last thing at night cover these with dry shavings for him to lie on. He also remarked that he had never known a flat-flooted horse but what was a great worker.—Cor. Journal of Farm.

To Clean Looking-Glasses.

Wash thoroughly a piece of soft sponge, and remove all gritty particles from it; dip it lightly into water, squeeze it out again, and then dip it into some spirits of wine; rub it over the glass, dust it with some powdered blue or whiting sifted through muslin; remove it lightly and quickly with a clean cloth, and finish with a silk handkerchief. If the glass be a large one, clean one-half at a time, otherwise the spirits of wine will dry before it can be removed. If the frames are gilt, the greatest care must be taken to prevent the spirits of wine from touching them. To clean such frames, rub them well with a little dry cotton wool; this will remove all dust and dirt, without injury to the gilding. If the frames are varnished, they may be rubbed with the spirits of wine, which will take out all the spots and give the varnish a superior polish.

Choosing Hatching Eggs.

Eggs for hatching should be chosen of the fair average size usually laid by the hen they are from; any unusually large or small being rejected. Some hens lay large eggs and others small ones. A fat hen will always lay small eggs, which can only produce small and weakly chickens. Absolute size in eggs is, therefore, of but little importance. Round, short eggs are usually the best to select; very long eggs, especially if much pointed at the small end, almost always breed birds with some awkwardness in style of carriage. Neither should rough-shelled eggs be chosen; they usually show some derangement of the organs, and are often sterile. Smooth-shelled eggs are alone proper for hatching. It is a farce to suppose that the sex of a bird can be determined by the shape of the egg.

Ants' Nests in Gardens.

"I have found a very effectual remedy for the annoyance of ants nesting in the garden paths and borders. A strong solution of carbolic acid and water poured into the holes kills all the ants it touches, and the survivors immediately take themselves off. Care must be taken in its use, as it destroys animal and vegetable, as well as insect life."—Exchange.

Household Helps.

POUND CAKE.—One pound of flour, one pound of sugar, one pound of butter, eight eggs. Beat well and bake till done.

MOLASSES CAKE.—One and one-half cup of butter, one and one-half cup of molasses, one-half cup of water, one egg, one and one-half teaspoon of saleratus, moderately stiff with flour.

SOFT GINGERCAKE, BEST.—Three cups of molasses, one cup of butter, one cup of cream, one cup of hot water, one teaspoon saleratus, one tablespoon ginger, five cups sifted flour, four eggs.

CRULLERS.—One cup of sugar, one of milk, two eggs, one-third cup of butter, one heaping teaspoonful cream tartar, flour to roll out. Dissolve the soda in a little milk or water.

HICKORY-NUT CAKE.—One pound of flour, one pound of suar, three-quarters of a pound of butter, six eggs, two teaspoons of cream-tartar, one teaspoon of soda, one-half cup of sweet milk, half a pint of hickory nuts chopped fine.

SOMMERS CAKE.—One cup butter, one cup milk, two cups sugar, three cups flour, five eggs, one teaspoon cream tartar, one-half teaspoon soda. This is excellent with fruit, raisins, currants, citron, or with grated cocoanut.

COMPOSITION CAKE.—Three pounds of flour, two and a half pounds of sugar, one and one-half pounds of butter, eight eggs, one quart of milk, two teaspoonfuls of saleratus, two pounds of raisins, one pound of currants, one pound of citron, cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg. This cake will keep good all winter.

BRONZING BRASS OBJECTS.—First warm them a little, and then wash over with a hot solution of ammonium chloride (sal ammoniac), then place over night in a diluted solution of two parts of verdigris and one part of ammonium chloride in six parts of vinegar. In the morning remove and wash.

BERRY PUDDING STEAMED.—Four cups of flour, one cup of sugar, one cup of milk, two eggs, two tablespoons melted butter, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoons cream tartar, one teaspoon salt. Steam one and a half hours. Butter the pan, into which pour the batter. Shut the steamer very tight, and keep in the steam until cooked. When rightly done, it comes from the steamer looking like a loaf of cake. Fruit to taste, mixed with the batter before cooking.—Country Gentleman.

Is Hydrophobia Imaginary?

Medical men are beginning to suspect that in many cases imagination is to a great degree instrumental in developing hydrophobia. It is well known that the disease seldom appears before the eighth day after inoculation. The period of incubation, as medical men term it, is often seven or eight weeks, and cases have occurred in which the spasms have not supervened until seven years after the bite. This fact has led physicians to study the whole subject anew, and Dr. Luke, in his late work on the "Influence of the Mind Upon the Body," supports the hypothesis that hydrophobic symptoms are often developed without previous inoculation. In illustration, he relates a notable instance of a physician of Lyons, who, having assisted in the dissection of several victims of the disorder, imagined that he had been inoculated. On attempting to drink he was seized with spasms of the pharynx, and in this condition roamed about the streets for three days. At length his friends succeeded in convincing him of the groundlessness of his apprehensions, and he at once recovered. Dr. Marx, a German physician, writing to the Clinic, regards hydrophobia as a morbid affection of the imagination induced by fear, and cites instances in which persons unaware of the superstition have escaped the spasms.

Gen. Crook.

We are rather sorry that George Crook didn't capture the Modocs. During the war it was observed that when Gen. Crook was sent after bushwhackers he never brought any into camp to be bothered with—they always met with some accident. We remember an illustrative occasion. Crook, then Colonel of the Thirty-sixth Ohio, reported to Rosecrans at Cross Lanes, after the battle of Carnifax Ferry. Rosecrans was delighted to see him, because he had a good helper. The bushwhackers were very troublesome. Crook was ordered to squelch them. About ten days afterward Crook came into headquarters looking like a man who had been sleeping out o' nights. Rosecrans and the rest of us greeted him warmly, and, after a glass of—water, said:

Rosy—"Well, Crook, what did you do?"

Crook—"Cleaned out the bushwhackers."

Rosy—"Didn't you take any prisoners?"

Crook (drawling)—"Well, yes, I did have—seven, but the d—d fools fell off a tree and broke their necks."

Photographing a Kiss.

In the neighborhood of Chislehurst, the other day, an enamored pair were walking pleasantly along, quite unconscious of their surroundings, and more particularly of the fact that an itinerant photographer had taken up his position, surrounded by an interesting crowd. As the swain and the maiden took their way, what more natural than that the former should imprint a chaste salute on the pouting lips of his fair companion? What more annoying than that the camera should have seized them in the act and rendered it immortal? The hapless couple became aware of the fact from the loud outburst of laughter which ran through the assemblage as the plate was held up, and the girl at first stormed and threatened; but, subsiding into a more reasonable mood, offered to purchase the negative. But the photographer was inexorable. He was willing to sell any number of copies, but insisted upon retaining the original.

Singular Presentiment.

A curious presentiment is mentioned in connection with the drowning of three schoolboys at Norwalk, Conn., June 7. The day before the accident, Dr. Hays, an assistant teacher, remarked to a fellow-teacher: "I have dreamed two nights in succession that three of our boys were drowned. It is very foolish to speak of it, but somehow it haunts me, and please have a care to the boys when on the water." When Charley White, the first boy who reached the house after the accident, came in drenched with water, the Doctor exclaimed: "How bad is it? Who is drowned?" and fell fainting into White's arms.

LEMON JELLY CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one small cup of butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, two and one-half cups of flour, four eggs, 1 teaspoon of cream tartar, one-half teaspoon of soda. Bake in thin layers. For the jelly take the juice and rind of three lemons, or five if small, one pound of sugar, one-quarter of a pound of butter, six eggs; beat together and scald like custard. When cool spread between the cakes. Ice the top.

Sitting for a Photograph.

Having a photograph taken is one of the great events in a man's life. The chief desire is to look the very best, and on the success of the picture hinges, in many cases, the most important epoch in life. To work up a proper appearance time enough is used which, if devoted to catching fleas for their phosphorous, would cancel the entire national debt and establish a New York daily paper. When you have completed your toilet you go to the gallery and force yourself into a nonchalence of expression that is too absurd for anything. Then you take the chair, spread your legs gracefully, appropriate a calm and indifferent look, and commence to perspire. An attenuated man with a pale face, long hair, and a soiled nose, now comes out of a cavern and adjusts the camera. Then he gets back of you and tells you to sit back as far as you can in the chair, and that it has been a remarkably backward spring. After getting you back till your spine interferes with the chair itself, he shoves your head back into a pair of ice-tongs, and dashes at the camera again. Here, with a piece of discolored velvet over his head, he bombards you in this manner: "Your chin out a little, please." The chin is protruded. "That's nicely; now a little more." The chin advances again, and the pomade commences to melt and start for freedom. Then he comes back to you and slaps one of your hands on your leg in such a position as to give you the appearance of trying to lift it over your head. The other is turned under itself, and has become so sweaty that you begin to fear that it will stick there permanently. A new stream of pomade finds its way out, and starts downward. Then he shakes your head in the tongs till it settles right, and says it looks like rain, and puts your chin out again, and punches out your chest, and says he doesn't know what the poor are to do next winter unless there is a radical change in affairs, and then takes the top of your head in one hand and your chin in the other, and gives your neck a wrench that would earn any other man a prominent position in a new hospital. Then he runs his hand through your hair and scratches your scalp, and steps back to the camera and the injured velvet for another look. By this time new sweat and pomade have started out. The whites of your eyes show unpleasantly, and your whole body feels as if it had been visited by an enormous cramp, and another and much bigger one was momentarily expected. Then he points at something for you to look at; tells you to look cheerful and composed, and snatches away the velvet, and pulls out his watch. When he gets tired, and you feel as if there was but very little left in this world to live for, he restores the velvet, says it is an unfavorable day for a picture, but he hopes for the best, and immediately disappears in his den. Then you get up and stretch yourself, slap on your hat, and immediately sneak home, feeling mean, humbled, and altogether too wretched for description. The first friend who sees the picture says he can see enough resemblance to make certain that it is you, but you have tried to look too formal to be natural and graceful.—Danbury News.

Figures of Intoxication.

From a recent official paper concerning the number of annual convictions on account of drunkenness in England and Ireland it appears that out of every ten thousand Englishmen fifty-nine make themselves obnoxious to the law against drunkenness, while out of each equal number of Irishmen one hundred and forty-seven are guilty of a similar offense. In considering these figures some account is to be made of the Irish tendency to "humor" when inflamed with whisky; whereas the Englishman, when drunk, is often more solemn and oracular than when sober. The Irishman instinctively looks for a head to break—the Englishman simply reels in the serene consciousness of intense respectability. But, taking all these national characteristics into account, it is still clear that the chances in Ireland of one's getting drunk are two to one as compared with England.

The same paper contains other interesting facts, all of which bear hardly upon poor Ireland. In England 4½ per centum of the total convictions represent the habitual offenders; in Ireland the ration is 14.7 per centum. Comparing towns, in Liverpool the proportion is 329 convictions to every 10,000 of its inhabitants; while in Dublin there are 416 to every 10,000. Londonderry is the smallest place put down in the table, but it is certainly a lively town—1,142 out of every 10,000 of its population being convicted of drunkenness, and nearly half of these being habitual drunkards.

Look Out for Horse-Thieves.

Our rural friends are advised to keep a sharp watch on all stragglers and strangers offering horses for sale. Chicago and her suburbs are infested with these villainous pests, who make nightly raids on the stables in and around the city. Many valuable equines have turned up missing lately. It is the practice of the thieves to run them into the agricultural districts and dispose of them to unsuspecting farmers, who are only too willing to buy because an apparently cheap bargain is offered, which in too many instances proves to be no bargain at all, for very frequently the stolen animal is traced and recovered, and the purchaser has to whistle for the money he has paid to the thief. Farmers in the country cannot be too careful. "Forewarned is forearmed."—Chicago paper.

USES OF SUINT.—The suint of sheep's wool, or the matter which accumulates therein as the result of perspiration and other excretions, is now carefully collected in various parts of Europe, and made a source of revenue; so much so, indeed, that persons are always found willing to take the crude wool and return it thoroughly cleaned to the owner, finding a profit in the soluble matter obtained by washing. This has been disposed of in various ways, but quite recently it has been found to be excellently adapted to the economical manufacture of yellow prussiate of potash, as, after heating, it is found to consist of an intimate mixture of potash and nitrogenous carbon.

Catching Reindeer.

Few animals are more timid than the reindeer; and the Northmen, who stand in no fear of a society for the "prevention of cruelty to animals," are harsh and unkind to the timid creatures, who, though strong and powerful, cower at the voice of man. Under no circumstances of oppression or hardship do they evince the slightest resentment. They are so timid that the sound of their driver's voice sets them running at such speed that they will die before halting if the drivers continue to urge them. This cruelty towards them on the part of their masters is wholly inexcusable when we remember that in many bleak northern regions they are the sole support of the people. When liberated from the harness they go directly in pursuit of food—a peculiar species of nutritious moss, which their instinct enables them to find deeply covered with snow. Sometimes as many as a hundred start off for foraging, there being nothing provided for them by their exacting masters. Like camels under similar circumstances, when unladen, they stroll off miles in different directions. When they are wanted again, their sealskin-clad drivers get behind them in several directions, and, by hallooing, throwing snow-balls, and making considerable uproar, the deer are gradually driven into a smaller circle. The herd is then encircled by a small cord, the men drawing in nearer and nearer till it strikes their long legs. They neither try to leap over or break it, but huddle together as close as possible. Finally, the two ends meet, held by one person, while the others enter the line and select the animals they want, seizing them by their horns, bringing them outside and tying them to something strong enough to hold them till harnessed to the sledge. The remainder again scatter in pursuit of moss.

Tornadoes and Forests.

It is about thirteen years since a fearful tornado rushed from the prairies of the far West and took our city in its path. The visitation was not one that anybody wanted to see repeated. Our streets were filled with fragments of trees and with bricks from overturned chimneys. The roof of the then new Commercial office flew against the western cornice of the building at the southwestern corner of Fourth and Vine streets, and left a dent to mark the collision. Worst of all, several persons were killed in and about the city. Cincinnati is not as exposed to such disasters as many other places. Her rampart of hills is a great protection, of which the suburbs do not enjoy the benefit. But the most elevated districts of Southern Ohio are freer from danger than the treeless and hilless States further west. A few acres of forests would do more to protect the dwellers on the prairies than anything that could be devised. It is true that a tornado will cut through a wood, but if it is met with many such obstacles its pathway would be impeded, its speed and violence abated, and its track shortened. Tree-planting organizations are forming in some sections, and their increase is urgently required. Central Iowa has had a lesson which should not pass unimproved. In Northwestern Iowa the railroads carry trees gratis for all who will plant them, and similar encouragement should be given elsewhere. The destruction of forests is not only to be deprecated in view of hurricanes, but it has injurious effects upon the rainfall and the climate of the surrounding regions. A check ought in some way to be put to the waste of wood, and States might well have special commissioners of forests. The subject has received increased attention of late, and we hope it may excite more general interest.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A Somnambulist's Adventure.

Somnambulists often get themselves into unpleasant scrapes, but seldom into a less enviable one than was achieved by a student of the French College of Ste. Barbe. Being missed by his roommate in the night, and his partiality to this kind of exercise being known, search was instantly made for him, with the result of finding him comfortably reposing in the gutter on the roof, four stories from the ground, and with one leg dangling over the edge. The morning bell was about to ring, the noise would surely awaken him, and only the courage and presence of mind of one of the ushers saved him from a cruel death. First directing the students to pile their mattresses in the court-yard beneath the spot where the sleeper lay, the brave usher slid down the gable roof, at imminent risk of going over, cautiously awakened the slumbering boy, and dragged him back into safety. It is pleasant to read that this gallant exploit was rewarded by a commemorative silver medal, purchased by subscription among the students, and a more solid, but possibly less gratifying, testimonial from the Faculty.

A Horse Getting A Child Out of a Pond.

A French paper gives the following striking instance of the affectionate instincts in animals: On a small farm in one of the French departments was a young horse whose temper was so untractable that all attempts at taming him failed. The farmer would have parted with it but for his youngest child, a boy about six years old, to whom, strange to say, the animal showed a strange liking; he would come to his young friend and receive food from his hand. He seemed pleased to have his shaggy neck patted by the little fellow. One day all the adult members of the family were out in the field excepting the mother, who being engaged in the house, left the child playing in the yard, when he fell into a pond, and would have been drowned but for the timely aid of his friend the horse. The animal happening to be loose in the stable, and hearing the familiar voice, came out at a trot, and perceiving the poor child struggling, seized him by the garments and drew him out at the very moment the mother came to look after him.

SALE OF A HISTORICAL RELIC.—Washington's headquarters, sold by auction at Morristown, N. J., a few days ago, was purchased by Ex-Gov. Randolph, W. V. Legerwood, George Halsey, and Gen. N. Halstead, for $25,000. The intention of the purchasers is to hold it for the State until the Legislature meets, when, if so pesired, they will transfer it without profit.

Feats in Journalism.

The French journals, says a foreign newspaper, have lately been expressing their astonishment at the energy displayed by English and American journalists. It appears that very sharp competition is now going on among the "specials" with respect to the impending trial of Marshal Bazaine. The correspondent of an American journal has arranged for fifteen telegrams, which, though they need be only ten or a dozen words each, will, provided they are perfectly authentic, be paid for at the rate of 1,000 francs (£40) each. Other American correspondents have actually been telegraphing, word for word, a translation of some of the feuilletons in the Paris journals, although it is difficult to imagine how there can be any possible advantage in such an outlay as this.

During the war in Paraguay, a South American correspondent set up a telegraph wire for his own use, so as to communicate the news at the earliest possible date. Finding, however, that the Paraguayan Government were beating him through their own telegraph he had the audacity to cut their wire. Stories are told by the same French writer of the rivalry between some of the English correspondents. Dr. Russell, for instance, accompanied the German army on its entry into Paris, wrote on his saddle an account, and sent it off by special messenger, who galloped to the first station on the newly-opened line between Paris and Calais, jumped up by the side of the engine-driver, who had a special engine ready, and rattled off to Calais in time to catch the mail. He little knew that he was accompanied on that journey by the correspondent of a rival journal—the Daily News—who, dressed as a stoker, had no sooner arrived at Calais than, running on board the steamer, he offered the captain any amount if he would get up steam at once. The captain complied, and the pseudo stoker arrived in London just as the messenger for the Times landed at Dover. Again, during the insurrection at Marseilles, the correspondent of the Times, finding the telegraph cut, hired a steamer, which took his dispatches to Malta, and thence they were telegraphed to London.

A Famous Raft.

The famous Red River raft, which has obstructed the navigation of that stream for many years, has been more than half cut through; so far, indeed, that small steamboats of light draught, coming from below, can now, by means of bayous, or side channels, make their way into the upper river above the great raft. This raft was formed by an accumulation of fallen trees and drift of all sorts which, having once covered the river from bank to bank and become firmly wedged in place, grew rapidly by fresh accessions of material brought down by the current until it was nine miles in length. Soil was formed on it by the settlings of the muddy river and by the decay of its material, and it was covered with growing vegetation of all kinds, including many large trees. The lower part of the raft, being the oldest, gradually rotted away, and portions were detached and carried off by the current, and thus the raft traveled slowly up stream from year to year, but the gain from above was much greater than the loss from below, so that the raft increased in length faster than it moved up the river. Several boats in the employment of the United States are now engaged with excellent success in cutting through this raft. The process is described by the correspondent of a Western paper. First: There is a powerful tugboat which, coming up from the raft below, makes fast to a projecting log or tree, and pulls at it until it is dragged out, usually bringing a large mass of roots, logs, and branches, matted and tangled together. This is passed on to the boats below, which are fitted up with large saws worked by steam, and here the floating island is separated, and the logs sawed up into short lengths and set adrift again. Gunpowder or any other explosive has not been found useful in this work. The most compact and stubborn portion of the raft has already been cut through; what remains is expected to prove comparatively light work, and this obstacle, formerly regarded as insuperable to the navigation of the upper Red River, will soon be entirely removed, greatly to the advantage of southwestern Louisiana and southern Arkansas.

True to the Last.

A touching incident of the courage and fidelity of dogs is given in the story of the assassination of Maj. Macdonald, at Michinee. The murderers, after they had brought the officer to the ground by a shot in the leg, rushed up to him and finished their bloody work with swords. They wished to cut off his head as a trophy, but they had been so worried by Maj. Macdonald's dog that, ere they could accomplish their object, they were driven off by friendly villagers. When the latter came up the faithful dog was found cut to pieces, and lying dead by the side of the master it had so stoutly and devotedly defended.

Syrian Thoroughbreds.

The Governor-General of Syria recently organized a race meeting to ascertain the speed and endurance of the Syrian horses. The following is a note of the distances over, and the time in which the races were run, the time being taken by Vice-Consul Kirby himself, and the distances said to have been correctly measured by Turkish engineer officers: First race, 7½ miles, run in 14 minutes; second race, 5¼ miles, run in 11½ minutes; third race, 3¾ miles, run in 6¼ minutes. It was remarkable how little distressed the horses appeared to be be, although the majority were ridden without stirrups, and several bare-backed.

RUSSIAN PROGRESS.—A new and magnificent emanation of Russian enterprise is the scheme to extend the Pathi and Tiflis railroad to Baker, on the west bank of the Caspian sea, and thence to Teheran, the capital and metropolis of Persia. It is not surprising that England looks upon the project with jealousy, but the empire of the north is approaching a point where it can afford to disregard the objections of Great Britain.

Tobacco

A writer on the su impossible to quit th
ter it has become a r out more or less bad tration. The man wh self from the curse must make up his m
hard struggle to pass
his will and power to his aid, and resolve to quit it once and forever. The leaving off by degrees seldom succeeds. It is better to make the battle short, sharp and decisive. A thorough course of bathing, to eliminate tobacco from the system, will make the struggle much less severe, and prove the greatest aid that can be given. The Turkish baths are best, if they can be had. If not accessible, the wet sheet, pack or vapor bath should be taken instead. There will not be much appetite, and but little food should be taken. Fruit is best. No drink but water, and that may be drank as freely as desired. To allay the craving for tobacco, hold cold water or pieces of ice in the mouth.

Newspapers.

According to the American Newspaper Directory, 1872 was a good year for starting newspapers, since the publication of 396 new periodicals was commenced, of which number 125 were dailies. At the commencement of the present year there were 6,768 periodicals published in the United States. Of these, 627 are daily, 93 try-weekly, 98 semily-weekly, 5,099 weekly, 86 semi-monthly, and 672 monthly publications. Of periodicals of all kinds, Nevada issues the smallest number, 14; Delaware the next smallest, 19; Florida the next, 24. New York has the largestlist, 958; Pennsylvania the second, 648, and Illinois the third, 544. As a rule, the Western States publish more papers in proportion to their population than the Eastern States. As an illustration, Kansas has 147 and Virginia 128. In addition to the papers printed in the English language, there are periodicals printed in German, French, Scandinavian, Spanish, Dutch, Italian, Welch, Bohemian, Portugese, Polish, and Cherokee languages.

How People Get Sick.

Eating too much and too fast, and swallowing imperfectly masticated food; by taking too much fluid during meals; drinking poisonous whisky and other intoxicating drinks; keeping late hours at night and sleeping too late in the morning; wearing clothing too tight, so as to relax the circulation; wearing thin shoes; neglecting to take sufficient exercise to keep the hands and feet warm. Neglecting to wash the body sufficiently to keep the pores of the skin open. Exchanging the warm clothing worn in a warm room during the day for light costumes and exposure incident to evening parties. Starving the stomach to gratify a vain and foolish passion for dress; keeping up a constant excitement, fretting the mind with borrowed troubles; employing cheap doctors and swallowing quack nostrums for every imaginary ill; taking meals at irregular intervals.

The Nashville Epidemic.

Some highly interesting facts in relation to the cholera epidemic at Nashville are given by a correspondent of the Louisville papers. It appears that there is a spring on the outskirts of the city which the deposit of 200 cart-loads of filth in its immediate vicinity had tainted. Persons who drank of this water were taken with a complaint that ripened into something like cholera. The first cases occurred among people who lived close to the spring and supplied their wants from it. Not far from this is a large brewery, which daily gives off a disgusting stream of refuse matter conducted in open ditches through a portion of Nashville. These ditches in turn empty into sewers in bad repair, through which the noxious vapors of the liquid filth escape and poison the air. Nearly every case of cholera has been near the spring or on the line of this sewer.

A Singular Strike.

One of the most curious strikes on record has just occurred in St. Louis. On the editorial staff of the German newspaper, the Amerika, is a gentleman named Regenaur, whose handwriting is said to be a wonder. For a long time the compositors in the Amerika office puzzled their brains to the verge of distraction in their efforts to decipher this gentleman's manuscript without complaint; but at last, driven to desperation, they appointed a committee to wait on the proprietor of the journal, with the request that in future they should be paid a price and a half for putting Mr. Regenaur's copy in type. The request was refused, whereupon the compositors struck in a body.

A NEW HAVEN man has invented a street-cleaner that will clean a mile of street a day, doing the work of six men. The contrivance consists of ten small hoes placed side by side, and mounted on wheels, each one rising or falling as the nature of the pavement may require, independently of each other, the pressure being produced by the weight of the machine, and regulated by springs, the whole thus easily adapting itself to the surface of the street. The machine weighs one hundred and fifty pounds, and is worked by one man.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Sell the Surplus.

It is a very natural and excusable weakness in a breeder of fine stock, that he believes his own is a little better than his neighbor's, and that his own estimate is higher than the public's. It is not a profitable weakness, however, if indulged in too far. A special pride in one's own is a good thing, but the merchant who refuses to sell the last piece of a particular kind of goods for fear of breaking his assortment, and the breeder of fine stock who places too high an estimate upon his young ones and refuses to concede anything, until his farm is overstocked, his stock suffering for want of proper care, and his means exhausted, fall into the same error, though not with the same excuse. The most successful merchants, manufacturers and producers, as a rule, are those who meet the market with what they have for sale, when it is ready. Looking over the breeders of fine stock in this country, one is struck with the fact that the freest sellers are the most prosperous. A positive sale, once a year, with open, fair competition, tests the operations of a breeder in the crucible of public opinion, and, properly considered, is the most valuable aid to his own judgment that he can possibly have. It helps to reduce his notions as to their cash value, and supplies what his own pride of judgment disables him from obtaining in any other manner, a standard by which he must sell, and in reference to which he must breed or do worse. The best evidence of success in breeding is a spirited competitive sale of regular surplus products—not cull—and no large breeder of fine stock can be quite sure he is moving in the right direction until he has that indorsement; and if, on trial, he meets with no such success, he cannot make a new departure or break up the business too soon. To every overstocked breeder we say, sell, meet the merket; if the result proves you are on the right course, go ahead—if not, tack about—but sell.—Prairie Farmer.

Tender-Footed Horses.

An old man who has had much experience in handling and dealing in horses for more than half a century said to me recently that he had never known a horse to get "tender-footed" that was kept loose in a shed and yard, or in a box stall. That turning round and treading with their forward feet in the manure kept them constantly moist and soft. His theory appeared perfectly reasonable to me. I have no box stalls, but I use shavings for bedding, and every morning with a large shovel I move the wet shavings under the horse forward, in front of and under his forward feet, and then the last thing at night cover these with dry shavings for him to lie on. He also remarked that he had never known a flat-flooted horse but what was a great worker.—Cor. Journal of Farm.

To Clean Looking-Glasses.

Wash thoroughly a piece of soft sponge, and remove all gritty particles from it; dip it lightly into water, squeeze it out again, and then dip it into some spirits of wine; rub it over the glass, dust it with some powdered blue or whiting sifted through muslin; remove it lightly and quickly with a clean cloth, and finish with a silk handkerchief. If the glass be a large one, clean one-half at a time, otherwise the spirits of wine will dry before it can be removed. If the frames are gilt, the greatest care must be taken to prevent the spirits of wine from touching them. To clean such frames, rub them well with a little dry cotton wool; this will remove all dust and dirt, without injury to the gilding. If the frames are varnished, they may be rubbed with the spirits of wine, which will take out all the spots and give the varnish a superior polish.

Choosing Hatching Eggs.

Eggs for hatching should be chosen of the fair average size usually laid by the hen they are from; any unusually large or small being rejected. Some hens lay large eggs and others small ones. A fat hen will always lay small eggs, which can only produce small and weakly chickens. Absolute size in eggs is, therefore, of but little importance. Round, short eggs are usually the best to select; very long eggs, especially if much pointed at the small end, almost always breed birds with some awkwardness in style of carriage. Neither should rough-shelled eggs be chosen; they usually show some derangement of the organs, and are often sterile. Smooth-shelled eggs are alone proper for hatching. It is a farce to suppose that the sex of a bird can be determined by the shape of the egg.

Ants' Nests in Gardens.

"I have found a very effectual remedy for the annoyance of ants nesting in the garden paths and borders. A strong solution of carbolic acid and water poured into the holes kills all the ants it touches, and the survivors immediately take themselves off. Care must be taken in its use, as it destroys animal and vegetable, as well as insect life."—Exchange.

Household Helps.

POUND CAKE.—One pound of flour, one pound of sugar, one pound of butter, eight eggs. Beat well and bake till done.

MOLASSES CAKE.—One and one-half cup of butter, one and one-half cup of molasses, one-half cup of water, one egg, one and one-half teaspoon of saleratus, moderately stiff with flour.

SOFT GINGERCAKE, BEST.—Three cups of molasses, one cup of butter, one cup of cream, one cup of hot water, one teaspoon saleratus, one tablespoon ginger, five cups sifted flour, four eggs.

CRULLERS.—One cup of sugar, one of milk, two eggs, one-third cup of butter, one heaping teaspoonful cream tartar, flour to roll out. Dissolve the soda in a little milk or water.

HICKORY-NUT CAKE.—One pound of flour, one pound of suar, three-quarters of a pound of butter, six eggs, two teaspoons of cream-tartar, one teaspoon of soda, one-half cup of sweet milk, half a pint of hickory nuts chopped fine.

SOMERS CAKE.—One cup butter, one cup milk, two cups sugar, three cups flour, five eggs, one teaspoon cream tartar, one-half teaspoon soda. This is excellent with fruit, raisins, currants, citron, or with grated cocoanut.

COMPOSITION CAKE.—Three pounds of flour, two and a half pounds of sugar, one and one-half pounds of butter, eight eggs, one quart of milk, two teaspoonfuls of saleratus, two pounds of raisins, one pound of currants, one pound of citron, cloves, cinnamon, nutmeg. This cake will keep good all winter.

BRONZING BRASS OBJECTS.—First warm them a little, and then wash over with a hot solution of ammonium chloride (sal ammoniac), then place over night in a diluted solution of two parts of verdigris and one part of ammonium chloride in six parts of vinegar. In the morning remove and wash.

BERRY PUDDING STEAMED.—Four cups of flour, one cup of sugar, one cup of milk, two eggs, two tablespoons melted butter, one teaspoonful soda, two teaspoons cream tartar, one teaspoon salt. Steam one and a half hours. Butter the pan, into which pour the batter. Shut the steamer very tight, and keep in the steam until cooked. When rightly done, it comes from the steamer looking like a loaf of cake. Fruit to taste, mixed with the batter before cooking.—Country Gentleman.

Is Hydrophobia Imaginary?

Medical men are beginning to suspect that in many cases imagination is to a great degree instrumental in developing hydrophobia. It is well known that the disease seldom appears before the eighth day after inoculation. The period of incubation, as medical men term it, is often seven or eight weeks, and cases have occurred in which the spasms have not supervened until seven years after the bite. This fact has led physicians to study the whole subject anew, and Dr. Luke, in his late work on the "Influence of the Mind Upon the Body," supports the hypothesis that hydrophobic symptoms are often developed without previous inoculation. In illustration, he relates a notable instance of a physician of Lyons, who, having assisted in the dissection of several victims of the disorder, imagined that he had been inoculated. On attempting to drink he was seized with spasms of the pharynx, and in this condition roamed about the streets for three days. At length his friends succeeded in convincing him of the groundlessness of his apprehensions, and he at once recovered. Dr. Marx, a German physician, writing to the Clinic, regards hydrophobia as a morbid affection of the imagination induced by fear, and cites instances in which persons unaware of the superstition have escaped the spasms.

Gen. Crook.

We are rather sorry that George Crook didn't capture the Modocs. During the war it was observed that when Gen. Crook was sent after bushwhackers he never brought any into camp to be bothered with—they always met with some accident. We remember an illustrative occasion. Crook, then Colonel of the Thirty-sixth Ohio, reported to Rosncrans at Cross Lanes, after the battle of Carnifax Ferry. Rosecrans was delighted to see him, because he had a good helper. The bushwhackers were very troublesome. Crook was ordered to squelch them. About ten days afterward Crook came into headquarters looking like a man who had been sleeping out o' nights. Rosecrans and the rest of us greeted him warmly, and, after a glass of—water, said:

Rosy—"Well, Crook, what did you do?"

Crook—"Cleaned out the bushwhackers."

Rosy—"Didn't you take any prisoners?"

Crook (drawling)—"Well, yes, I did have—seven, but the d—d fools fell off a tree and broke their necks."

Photographing a Kiss.

In the neighborhood of Chislehurst, the other day, an enamored pair were walking pleasantly along, quite unconscious of their surroundings, and more particularly of the fact that an itinerant photographer had taken up his position, surrounded by an interesting crowd. As the swain and the maiden took their way, what more natural than that the former should imprint a chaste salute on the pouting lips of his fair companion? What more annoying than that the camera should have seized them in the act and rendered it immortal? The hapless couple became aware of the fact from the loud outburst of laughter which ran through the assemblage as the plate was held up, and the girl at first stormed and threatened; but, subsiding into a more reasonable mood, offered to purchase the negative. But the photographer was inexorable. He was willing to sell any number of copies, but insisted upon retaining the original.

Singular Presentiment.

A curious presentiment is mentioned in connection with the drowning of three schoolboys at Norwalk, Conn., June 7. The day before the accident, Dr. Hays, an assistant teacher, remarked to a fellow-teacher: "I have dreamed two nights in succession that three of our boys were drowned. It is very foolish to speak of it, but somehow it haunts me, and please have a care to the boys when on the water." When Charley White, the first boy who reached the house after the accident, came in drenched with water, the Doctor exclaimed: "How bad is it? Who is drowned?" and fell fainting into White's arms.

LEMON JELLY CAKE.—Two cups of sugar, one small cup of butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, two and one-half cups of flour, four eggs, 1 teaspoon of cream tartar, one-half teaspoon of soda. Bake in thin layers. For the jelly take the juice and rind of three lemons, or five if small, one pound of sugar, one-quarter of a pound of butter, six eggs; beat together and scald like custard. When cool spread between the cakes. Ice the top.

Sitting for a Photograph.

Having a photograph taken is one of the great events in a man's life. The chief desire is to look the very best, and on the success of the picture hinges, in many cases, the most important epoch in life. To work up a proper appearance time enough is used which, if devoted to catching fleas for their phosphorous, would cancel the entire national debt and establish a New York daily paper. When you have completed your toilet you go to the gallery and force yourself into a nonchalence of expression that is too absurd for anything. Then you take the chair, spread your legs gracefully, appropriate a calm and indifferent look, and commence to perspire. An attenuated man with a pale face, long hair, and a soiled nose, now comes out of a cavern and adjusts the camera. Then he gets back of you and tells you to sit back as far as you can in the chair, and that it has been a remarkably backward spring. After getting you back till your spine interferes with the chair itself, he shoves your head back into a pair of ice-tongs, and dashes at the camera again. Here, with a piece of discolored velvet over his head, he bombards you in this manner: "Your chin out a little, please." The chin is protruded. "That's nicely; now a little more." The chin advances again, and the pomade commences to melt and start for freedom. Then he comes back to you and slaps one of your hands on your leg in such a position as to give you the appearance of trying to lift it over your head. The other is turned under itself, and has become so sweaty that you begin to fear that it will stick there permanently. A new stream of pomade finds its way out, and starts downward. Then he shakes your head in the tongs till it settles right, and says it looks like rain, and puts your chin out again, and punches out your chest, and says he doesn't know what the poor are to do next winter unless there is a radical change in affairs, and then takes the top of your head in one hand and your chin in the other, and gives your neck a wrench that would earn any other man a prominent position in a new hospital. Then he runs his hand through your hair and scratches your scalp, and steps back to the camera and the injured velvet for another look. By this time new sweat and pomade have started out. The whites of your eyes show unpleasantly, and your whole body feels as if it had been visited by an enormous cramp, and another and much bigger one was momentarily expected. Then he points at something for you to look at; tells you to look cheerful and composed, and snatches away the velvet, and pulls out his watch. When he gets tired, and you feel as if there was but very little left in this world to live for, he restores the velvet, says it is an unfavorable day for a picture, but he hopes for the best, and immediately disappears in his den. Then you get up and stretch yourself, slap on your hat, and immediately sneak home, feeling mean, humbled, and altogether too wretched for description. The first friend who sees the picture says he can see enough resemblance to make certain that it is you, but you have tried to look too formal to be natural and graceful.—Danbury News.

Figures of Intoxication.

From a recent official paper concerning the number of annual convictions on account of drunkenness in England and Ireland it appears that out of every ten thousand Englishmen fifty-nine make themselves obnoxious to the law against drunkenness, while out of each equal number of Irishmen one hundred and forty-seven are guilty of a similar offense. In considering these figures some account is to be made of the Irish tendency to "humor" when inflamed with whisky; whereas the Englishman, when drunk, is often more solemn and oracular than when sober. The Irishman instinctively looks for a head to break—the Englishman simply reels in the serene consciousness of intense respectability. But, taking all these national characteristics into account, it is still clear that the chances in Ireland of one's getting drunk are two to one as compared with England.

The same paper contains other interesting facts, all of which bear hardly upon poor Ireland. In England 4¼ per centum of the total convictions represent the habitual offenders; in Ireland the ration is 14.7 per centum. Comparing towns, in Liverpool the proportion is 329 convictions to every 10,000 of its inhabitants; while in Dublin there are 416 to every 10,000. Londonderry is the smallest place put down in the table, but it is certainly a lively town—1,142 out of every 10,000 of its population being convicted of drunkenness, and nearly half of these being habitual drunkards.

Look Out for Horse-Thieves.

Our rural friends are advised to keep a sharp watch on all stragglers and strangers offering horses for sale. Chicago and her suburbs are infested with these villainous pests, who make nightly raids on the stables in and around the city. Many valuable equines have turned up missing lately. It is the practice of the thieves to run them into the agricultural districts and dispose of them to unsuspecting farmers, who are only too willing to buy because an apparently cheap bargain is offered, which in too many instances proves to be no bargain at all, for very frequently the stolen animal is traced and recovered, and the purchaser has to whistle for the money he has paid to the thief. Farmers in the country cannot be too careful. "Forewarned is forearmed."—Chicago paper.

USES OF SUINT.—The suint of sheep's wool, or the matter which accumulates therein as the result of perspiration and other excretions, is now carefully collected in various parts of Europe, and made a source of revenue; so much so, indeed, that persons are always found willing to take the crude wool and return it thoroughly cleaned to the owner, finding a profit in the soluble matter obtained by washing. This has been disposed of in various ways, but quite recently it has been found to be excellently adapted to the economical manufacture of yellow prussiate of potash, as, after heating, it is found to consist of an intimate mixture of potash and nitrogenous carbon.

Catching Reindeer.

Few animals are more timid than the reindeer; and the Northmen, who stand in no fear of a society for the "prevention of cruelty to animals," are harsh and unkind to the timid creatures, whe, though strong and powerful, cower at the voice of man. Under no circumstances of oppression or hardship do they evince the slightest resentment. They are so timid that the sound of their driver's voice sets them running at such speed that they will die before halting if the drivers continue to urge them. This cruelty towards them on the part of their masters is wholly inexcusable when we remember that in many bleak northern regions they are the sole support of the people. When liberated from the harness they go directly in pursuit of food—a peculiar species of nutritious moss, which their instinct enables them to find deeply covered with snow. Sometimes as many as a hundred start off for foraging, there being nothing provided for them by their exacting masters. Like camels under similar circumstances, when unladen, they stroll off miles in different directions. When they are wanted again, their sealskin-clad drivers get behind them in several directions, and, by hallooing, throwing snow-balls, and making considerable uproar, the deer are gradually driven into a smaller circle. The herd is then encircled by a small cord, the men drawing in nearer and nearer till it strikes their long legs. They neither try to leap over or break it, but huddle together as close as possible. Finally, the two ends meet, held by one person, while the others enter the line and select the animals they want, seizing them by their horns, bringing them outside and tying them to something strong enough to hold them till harnessed to the sledge. The remainder again scatter in pursuit of moss.

Tornadoes and Forests.

It is about thirteen years since a fearful tornado rushed from the prairies of the far West and took our city in its path. The visitation was not one that anybody wanted to see repeated. Our streets were filled with fragments of trees and with bricks from overturned chimneys. The roof of the then new Commercial office flew against the western cornice of the building at the southwestern corner of Fourth and Vine streets, and left a dent to mark the collision. Worst of all, several persons were killed in and about the city. Cincinnati is not as exposed to such disasters as many other places. Her rampart of hills is a great protection, of which the suburbs do not enjoy the benefit. But the most elevated districts of Southern Ohio are freer from danger than the treeless and hilless States further west. A few acres of forests would do more to protect the dwellers on the prairies than anything that could be devised. It is true that a tornado will cut through a wood, but if it is met with many such obstacles its pathway would be impeded, its speed and violence abated, and its track shortened. Tree-planting organizations are forming in some sections, and their increase is urgently required. Central Iowa has had a lesson which should not pass unimproved. In Northwestern Iowa the railroads carry trees gratis for all who will plant them, and similar encouragement should be given elsewhere. The destruction of forests is not only to be deprecated in view of hurricanes, but it has injurious effects upon the rainfall and the climate of the surrounding regions. A check ought in some way to be put to the waste of wood, and States might well have special commissioners of forests. The subject has received increased attention of late, and we hope it may excite more general interest.—Cincinnati Gazette.

A Somnambulist's Adventure.

Somnambulists often get themselves into unpleasant scrapes, but seldom into a less enviable one than was achieved by a student of the French College of Ste. Barbe. Being missed by his roommate in the night, and his partiality to this kind of exercise being known, search was instantly made for him, with the result of finding him comfortably reposing in the gutter on the roof, four stories from the ground, and with one leg dangling over the edge. The morning bell was about to ring, the noise would surely awaken him, and only the courage and presence of mind of one of the ushers saved him from a cruel death. First directing the students to pile their mattresses in the court-yard beneath the spot where the sleeper lay, the brave usher slid down the gable roof, at imminent risk of going over, cautiously awakened the slumbering boy, and dragged him back into safety. It is pleasant to read that this gallant exploit was rewarded by a commemorative silver medal, purchased by subscription among the students, and a more solid, but possibly less gratifying, testimonial from the Faculty.

A Horse Getting A Child Out of a Pond.

A French paper gives the following striking instance of the affectionate instincts in animals: On a small farm in one of the French departments was a young horse whose temper was so untractable that all attempts at taming him failed. The farmer would have parted with it but for his youngest child, a boy about six years old, to whom, strange to say, the animal showed a strange liking; he would come to his young friend and receive food from his hand. He seemed pleased to have his shaggy neck patted by the little fellow. One day all the adult members of the family were out in the field excepting the mother, who being engaged in the house, left the child playing in the yard, when he fell into a pond, and would have been drowned but for the timely aid of his friend the horse. The animal happening to be loose in the stable, and hearing the familiar voice, came out at a trot, and perceiving the poor child struggling, seized him by the garments and drew him out at the very moment the mother came to look after him.

SALE OF A HISTORICAL RELIC.—Washington's headquarters, sold by auction at Morristown, N. J., a few days ago, was purchased by Ex-Gov. Randolph, W. V. Legerwood, George Halsey, and Gen. N. Halstead, for $25,000. The intention of the purchasers is to hold it for the State until the Legislature meets, when, if so pesired, they will transfer it without profit.

Feats in Journalism.

The French journals, says a foreign newspaper, have lately been expressing their astonishment at the energy displayed by English and American journalists. It appears that very sharp competition is now going on among the "specials" with respect to the impending trial of Marshal Bazaine. The correspondent of an American journal has arranged for fifteen telegrams, which, though they need be only ten or a dozen words each, will, provided they are perfectly authentic, be paid for at the rate of 1,000 francs (£40) each. Other American correspondents have actually been telegraphing, word for word, a translation of some of the feuilletons in the Paris journals, although it is difficult to imagine how there can be any possible advantage in such an outlay as this.

During the war in Paraguay, a South American correspondent set up a telegraph wire for his own use, so as to communicate the news at the earliest possible date. Finding, however, that the Paraguayan Government were beating him through their own telegraph he had the audacity to cut their wire. Stories are told by the same French writer of the rivalry between some of the English correspondents. Dr. Russell, for instance, accompanied the German army on its entry into Paris, wrote on his saddle an account, and sent it off by special messenger, who galloped to the first station on the newly-opened line between Paris and Calais, jumped up by the side of the engine-driver, who had a special engine ready, and rattled off to Calais in time to catch the mail. He little knew that he was accompanied on that journey by the correspondent of a rival journal—the Daily News—who, dressed as a stoker, had no sooner arrived at Calais than, running on board the steamer, he offered the captain any amount if he would get up steam at once. The captain complied, and the pseudo stoker arrived in London just as the messenger for the Times landed at Dover. Again, during the insurrection at Marseilles, the correspondent of the Times, finding the telegraph cut, hired a steamer, which took his dispatches to Malta, and thence they were telegraphed to London.

A Famous Raft.

The famous Red River raft, which has obstructed the navigation of that stream for many years, has been more than half cut through; so far, indeed, that small steamboats of light draught, coming from below, can now, by means of bayous, or side channels, make their way into the upper river above the great raft. This raft was formed by an accumulation of fallen trees and drift of all sorts which, having once covered the river from bank to bank and become firmly wedged in place, grew rapidly by fresh accessions of material brought down by the current until it was nine miles in length. Soil was formed on it by the settlings of the muddy river and by the decay of its material, and it was covered with growing vegetation of all kinds, including many large trees. The lower part of the raft, being the oldest, gradually rotted away, and portions were detached and carried off by the current, and thus the raft traveled slowly up stream from year to year, but the gain from above was much greater than the loss from below, so that the raft increased in length faster than it moved up the river. Several boats in the employment of the United States are now engaged with excellent success in cutting through this raft. The process is described by the correspondent of a Western paper. First: There is a powerful tugboat which, coming up from the raft below, makes fast to a projecting log or tree, and pulls at it until it is dragged out, usually bringing a large mass of roots, logs, and branches, matted and tangled together. This is passed on to the boats below, which are fitted up with large saws worked by steam, and here the floating island is separated, and the logs sawed up into short lengths and set adrift again. Gunpowder or any other explosive has not been found useful in this work. The most compact and stubborn portion of the raft has already been cut through; what remains is expected to prove comparatively light work, and this obstacle, formerly regarded as insuperable to the navigation of the upper Red River, will soon be entirely removed, greatly to the advantage of southwestern Louisiana and southern Arkansas.

True to the Last.

A touching incident of the courage and fidelity of dogs is given in the story of the assassination of Maj. Macdonald, at Michinee. The murderers, after they had brought the officer to the ground by a shot in the leg, rushed up to him and finished their bloody work with swords. They wished to cut off his head as a trophy, but they had been so worried by Maj. Macdonald's dog that, ere they could accomplish their object, they were driven off by friendly villagers. When the latter came up the faithful dog was found cut to pieces, and lying dead by the side of the master it had so stoutly and devotedly defended.

Syrian Thoroughbreds.

The Governor-General of Syria recently organized a race meeting to ascertain the speed and endurance of the Syrian horses. The following is a note of the distances over, and the time in which the races were run, the time being taken by Vice-Consul Kirby himself, and the distances said to have been correctly measured by Turkish engineer officers: First race, 7½ miles, run in 14 minutes; second race, 5¼ miles, run in 11¼ minutes; third race, 3¼ miles, run in 6¼ minutes. It was remarkable how little distressed the horses appeared to be be, although the majority were ridden without stirrups, and several bare-backed.

RUSSIAN PROGRESS.—A new and magnificent emanation of Russian enterprise is the scheme to extend the Pathi and Tiflis railroad to Baker, on the west bank of the Caspian sea, and thence to Teheran, the capital and metropolis of Persia. It is not surprising that England looks upon the project with jealousy, but the empire of the north is approaching a point where it can afford to disregard the objections of Great Britain.

Tobacco Craving.

A writer on the subject says: "It is impossible to quit the use of tobacco after it has become a regular habit, without more or less bad feeling and prostration. The man who would free himself from the curse of tobacco-using must make up his mind that he has a hard struggle to pass through, call all his will and power to his aid, and resolve to quit it once and forever. The leaving off by degrees seldom succeeds. It is better to make the battle short, sharp and decisive. A thorough course of bathing, to eliminate tobacco from the system, will make the struggle much less severe, and prove the greatest aid that can be given. The Turkish baths are best, if they can be had. If not accessible, the wet sheet, pack or vapor bath should be taken instead. There will not be much appetite, and but little food should be taken. Fruit is best. No drink but water, and that may be drank as freely as desired. To allay the craving for tobacco, hold cold water or pieces of ice in the mouth.

Newspapers.

According to the American Newspaper Directory, 1872 was a good year for starting newspapers, since the publication of 396 new periodicals was commenced, of which number 125 were dailies. At the commencement of the present year there were 6,768 periodicals published in the United States. Of these, 627 are daily, 93 try-weekly, 98 semily-weekly, 5,099 weekly, 86 semi-monthly, and 672 monthly publications. Of periodicals of all kinds, Nevada issues the smallest number, 14; Delaware the next smallest, 19; Florida the next, 24. New York has the largestlist, 958; Pennsylvania the second, 648, and Illinois the third, 544. As a rule, the Western States publish more papers in proportion to their population than the Eastern States. As an illustration, Kansas has 147 and Virginia 128. In addition to the papers printed in the English language, there are periodicals printed in German, French, Scandinavian, Spanish, Dutch, Italian, Welch, Bohemian, Portugese, Polish, and Cherokee languages.

Visible Supply of Grain.

The supply of grain, including stocks in store at the principal points of accumulation at lake and seaboard ports, in transit on the lakes, the New York canals and by rail, June 14, 1873, was as follows:

In store at—	Wheat, bu.	Corn, bu.	Oats, bu.	Barley, bu.

How People Get Sick.

Eating too much and too fast, and swallowing imperfectly masticated food; by taking too much fluid during meals; drinking poisonous whisky and other intoxicating drinks; keeping late hours at night and sleeping too late in the morning; wearing clothing too tight, so as to relax the circulation; wearing thin shoes; neglecting to take sufficient exercise to keep the hands and feet warm. Neglecting to wash the body sufficiently to keep the pores of the skin open. Exchanging the warm clothing worn in a warm room during the day for light costumes and exposure incident to evening parties. Starving the stomach to gratify a vain and foolish passion for dress; keeping up a constant excitement, fretting the mind with borrowed troubles; employing cheap doctors and swallowing quack nostrums for every imaginary ill; taking meals at irregular intervals.

The Nashville Epidemic.

Some highly interesting facts in relation to the cholera epidemic at Nashville are given by a correspondent of the Louisville papers. It appears that there is a spring on the outskirts of the city which the deposit of 200 cart-loads of filth in its immediate vicinity had tainted. Persons who drank of this water were taken with a complaint that ripened into something like cholera. The first cases occurred among people who lived close to the spring and supplied their wants from it. Not far from this is a large brewery, which daily gives off a disgusting stream of refuse matter conducted in open ditches through a portion of Nashville. These ditches in turn empty into sewers in bad repair, through which the noxious vapors of the liquid filtn escape and poison the air. Nearly every case of cholera has been near the spring or on the line of this sewer.

A Singular Strike.

One of the most curious strikes on record has just occurred in St. Louis. On the editorial staff of the German newspaper, the Amerika, is a gentleman named Regenaur, whose handwriting is said to be a wonder. For a long time the compositors in the Amerika office puzzled their brains to the verge of distraction in their efforts to decipher this gentleman's manuscript without complaint; but at last, driven to desperation, they appointed a committee to wait on the proprietor of the journal, with the request that in future they should be paid a price and a half for putting Mr. Regenaur's copy in type. The request was refused, whereupon the compositors struck in a body.

A NEW HAVEN man has invented a street-cleaner that will clean a mile of street a day, doing the work of six men. The contrivance consists of ten small hoes placed side by side, and mounted on wheels, each one rising or falling as the nature of the pavement may require, independently of each other, the pressure being produced by the weight of the machine, and regulated by springs, the whole thus easily adapting itself to the surface of the street. The machine weighs one hundred and fifty pounds, and is worked by one man.

From the Washington Star.

On Friday afternoon, before leaving Long Branch, the President took a stroll along H street, and dropped in to see a friend, who is a well know citizen of Washington. During his stay the daughter of the gentleman referred to remarked that she had heard a pleasant thing about him.—The President inquired to what she referred to.

"I have been told by an officer who served with you in the army,' said she "that he hrd been with you under many trying circumstances, and that in no single instance, no matter what the provocation, had he ever known you to use profane language. I was delighted to hear this, especially in view of the fact that profanity is said to be the rule and not the exception among army officiers. Will you excurse me, Mr, President, 'if I enquire if what I hear is true?"

"It is, I believe, modesty replied the President. "I have always regarded profane language as unnecessary to say the least and, as I am a man of few words, I have never been able to understand the necessity for useless expressions of the character referred to.

Thrilling Encounter With a Burglar.

On Wednesday night, about half past twelve o'clock, Mr W. G· Alexander had a most exciting experience with a burglar. On reaching the gate of his yard it occurred to him that he saw the dim shadow of a man standing at the corner of his residence and seeing that he was undiscovered himself by the nocturnal prowler, he stepped within the yard and ensconced himself in a clump of shrubbery to await the development of affairs. Shortly he descried the burly form of a man stealthily creep around the corner of the house and approcch a front window which had left open on account of the oppressive weather. After a searching glance into the room, the man suddenly cronched down as if alarmed by some sound within. Taking this moment for a favorable one, Mr. Alexadder leaped from his perdu and came down upon the thief's shoulders with an animal-like bound that placed him at a decided disadvantage. Then grasping him by the collar, Mr. A. jerked him violently through the gate into street.

By this time the burghlar had so far recovered his equanimity as to make a struggle to escape. He was a huge brany limbed negro, and lunged out savagely at his captor's frontispiece, but at the same time received a teriffic shot straight from Mr. Alexander's shoulder, which toppled him into the gutter like a log. Then the enraged auctioneer sprang upon the negro and showered blows upon his bullet like head all the emphasis at his command but finally shattering his fist he was obliged to leap to his feet and resort to his brogans. However, he had made but one kick, when the burglar was off like an antelope. Alexander following close vpon his heels, lustily calling for the Police. The chace was long and arduous, yet the pursued eventually eluded his pursuer and escaped.—Toledo Commercial.

* * *

There can be no question in regard to Grant's habit of indulging in spiritous liquors to great excess, and it is right the people should know it; and the fact of the President and his Lieutenant General being "chock full, and having been so for a week," would afford a very pretty text for a sermon from some of his staunch supporters. —Pittsqurg Post.

Keep Them Out.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser Salary Grab and Credit Mobilier. has this to say of the Liberals; Thre were many among the ranks and file of the Liberty party whose defection the Republicans can forget and forgive. They were deceived by their leaders, and led astray like sheep. But as for the arch conspirators in the Liberal revolt, there is no room as yet in the Republican heart for forgiveness toward them. Never was a political schism more basely contrived; never was there a party desection more utterly unjustifiable. Its moving spirits were actuated solely by motives of a personal character. They allow their jealousy, spite, and hatred to make them deaf to every party obligation, and unscrupolous in carrying out their design. They made the United States Senate the scene—and tried to make it the instrument—of their manchinations. They took up the time which they should have given to public interests in wickedly attempting to throw unjust suspicion upon the President's personal integrity. They know that he was the choice of the majority of the people for re-election, and they were determined, if possible, to blacken his good name and loosen his hold upon the popular confidence and esteem. The Liberal leaders kept up this same system of personal attack and defamation toward every man who held a prominent place in the Republican councils. They went torward and formed the closest kind co-opation with the Democratic party. Professing in the first place to differ with the Repuclicans party upon the policy of the National Administration only, the Liberals united with the Democracy in attempting to defeat the Republicans in every State, county, or municipal election. They made their desertion complete and went beyond the Democracy in their zeal to defeat those whom they had betrayed and whose name they had the assurance to retain on their standards—the emblems of as foul a political conspiracy as was ever witnessed.

Now the Rebublican party should be slow in receiving back these men, or in allowing them to return to their forme. places in the party's ranks. It it is true that they were defeated; they deserved to be, and upon their defeat humiliation should have been and has been piled. It has been proved, moreover, that the Republicans do not need their services. If they never come back the party will not suffer any loss of strength. Many of those prominent in the Liberal movement were always ready to make trouble. They never went to a State Convention that they did not threaten to withdraw in case their utmost demans were not acceded to. The Republican party can certainly say good riddance to the crowd that tried to demoralize the Syracuse Convention. The door should be forever closed upon the crew of so-called Tammany Rebublicans, represented by Whitelaw Ried, John Cochrane, Ethan Allen, and others of their kidney. When they left the party it was for the party's good. The Republicans of the Empire State were thereby releived of a load which they never carried with honor or comfort. It is all very well to talk about clemency and forgiveness; it is not strange to hear expediency suggested as a motive for the Republican party to hold out the promise of welcome to all who desire to came back to its service. But the party should consult its honor and dignity as well as expediency. We should not hold out the slightest inducement to lead the prominent Liberals to believe that their return would be welcomed or appreciated. If such renegades see fit to come back and quietly serve among those they tried to betray, well and good; they may do as they like about that. But they should also be given to understand that the Republican party will never admit them to its councils or to share its honors· They are not wanted; their room is worth more than their company.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosiening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

A good side-show at a ladies' fairs —a pretty cheek.

Lady bank clerks constitute one of the institutions in San Francisco.

An English woman learning to spell wants to know if there is a he in love.

How to get a lady to show her foot —praise her foot to some other lady.

Matilda Fletcher will deliver the annual address of the Nebraska State Fair.

Buffalo has an "Academy of the Holy Angels," but the pupils are only girls after all.

Mrs. Viola E. Archibald is a candidate for School Superintendent of Iroquois county, Ill.

Ex-Mayor Samuel Maxwell, of Indianapolis, an old resident, died on Thursday.

A fatal case of what the physicians pronounced cholera occurred at Evansville on Saturday.

The rolling department of the Terre Haute iron and nail works has suspended indefinitely.

The State Treasury paid out on Tuesday, $35,200, principally for salaries of State officers and the judiciary.

The local assessment of personal property in Indianapolis, up to date, with a few returns yet to come, is $8,766,061.

A female lecturer says the only decent thing about Adam was a rib, and that went to make something better.

"Bob how is your sweetheart getting along?" "Pretty well, I guess; says I needn't call any more."

Divorce will next be obtained on the ground of 'emotional insanity,' such as carrying an empty purse.

Mis Lizzie Shirley is a candidate for School Superintendent of Clinton county, Iowa. She surely ought to succeed.

Ridiculous enough —A two hundred pound poetess, writing verses about what she would do 'if she were a sunbeam.'

Can any one tell why Eve was formend from one of Adam's ribs, and a hired girl wasn't made at the same time to wait on her.

The Patrons of husbandry held a largely attended meeting at Rensselaer on the 28th. The order is said to be prosperous.

The proposed Indianapolis Public Library is receiving subscriptions at the rate of over twenty-five names a day. There are 2,760 names on the list.

The plucky mistress of a colored school in Texas, whose school-house had been burned by an incendiary, assembles her school and continues her teaching under a brush shed.

"Pretty well," replied a doctors daughter, when some one asked how her father was getting along; "plenty of colds and fevers and such like, but what we want to make things lively is a nice little epidemic."

A son of Henry Hillebrants, of Vanderburg county, a few days since, was killed by the explosion of a flask of powder which he was playing with while the family were out in the field.

Lafayette women bathe in the river within the city limits in broad daylight and what is worse, no clothing is visible during the operation. The Courier complains—probably because it can't go in too.

New Albany acknowledges one case of sporadic cholera, but palliates the fault by showing that the patient ate boiled cabbage, and other vegetables, when he was not fully convalesent from an attack of cholera morbus.

The Indianapolis Exposition, which was considerably damaged by the storm there last week, has been repaired. The building will be ready for occupancy the latter part of August. Applications for space are already being made.

An old settlers' meeting was held at Patton's Grove, Laporte county, on the 21st ult., at which the old folks alluded in terms anything but compimentary to the adminirtsation, to the times when back pay, salary grabs, Credit Mobilier etc., were not.

PROSECUTOR.—We learn that H. C. Peterson of Auburn will be a candidate for circuit prosecutor at the next election As yet we have not heard any one else mentioned for that office. Mr. Peterson is a young man with good legal abilities and will discharge the duties with fidelity.—Angola Republican.

The following resolution was endorsed by the Knox county Ohio Democracy.

"Resolved, That we regret that one of the twelve Credit Mobilier Senators and Representatives called himself a Democrat, and it is a fact worthy of reflection that the eleven others are Republicans.

It was recently reported, but very promptly contradicted, that Hon. M. C. Kerr was about to assume the editorship of the Indianapolis Sentinel The rumor was too good to be true. And what a change of diet that would have proved to the Sentinel readers! They would have got more nutricious food in one day than they now receive in a month!—Ligonier Banner.

Pretty hard on the Sentinel but not at the expense of truth.

Always marvelous stories will told to surport impossible theories. At Ironton, Ohio, a young person was drowned. Search was going on for the body, when an old woman appeared and asked that an unwashed shirt of the boy should be thrown into the river, declaring that it would disapear directly over the place where the body was. Need we say that it was thrown in; that it did disapear, and that the body was brought up just in that spot with a grappling hook. Here is a tale told by "trustworthy witnesses" of whic we feel bound to say that we do not lieve one word.
